The Christian's Hope.

We have a hope that's bright and pure,
A hope that ne'er will fail;
Though earth decays this still is sure,
"Tis cast "within the vail."
Whate'er our earthly lot may be,
However fierce the storm
That swells and rolls life's troubled sea,
Our bark is anchored firm.

We know our Savior overcome
The world, the flesh and sin,
Ascended to his Father's throne
To intercede for men.
And soon to earth he'll come again,
His waiting ones to bless;
He'll come as King on earth to reign
In power and righteousness.

Then shall we "see him as he is,"
From pain and weakness free;
We shall his glorious likeness share
Through all eternity.
We hope to walk the blooming earth
With Him in robes of white,
Beyond the power of sin and death,
Beyond the shades of night.

Then shall we tune the harps of gold
To our immortal King,
And of the bliss that's ne'er been told,
Through endless ages sing.
O glorious hope of joys divine,
In faith we rest on thee;
Come, blessed Jesus, quickly come,
Set all earth's captives free.

New Year.

About this time of the year it is very common to glance back upon the twelve months past, and mentally compare our present state with that of the last New Year's day. And no matter how bright our prospects, it is very seldom that the retrospection does not bring more or less regret. The memory of vows formed for doing better, but partially kept, or wholly disregarded, must surely bring its sorrow. It may be that in the interim we have formed new attachments and made new friends; yet, how many dear ones have been taken away, leaving a void which no modern friendship or recent love can fill in our hearts. Our thoughts, quicker than the lightning, dart over mountains and seas, and hover about the old homestead where we first drew our breath, or brood over the tomb where sleep the beings who gave us birth. Not even lapse of time can wholly dry up the tears which find their way into our eyes as we ponder upon the days of our youth, ere care and the world had furrowed the cheek, bleached the hair, or, alas! hardened the heart; and many a half uttered "I wish I then had died," comes murmuring from our lips. There is no wise man or woman will look back upon all their lives and say, "I have nothing wherewith to accuse myself—I did every thing with a pure motive—I am blameless." Sins may be repented of and fully and freely forgiven; but their memory brings self-condemnation and humility; and he whose mind is most free from guilt will offer no other plea than—

"I the chief of sinners am—
But Jesus died for me!"

Who has ever looked upon the pale, motionless form of his mother's corpse, and thought of how strong and unchangeable was her love and forbearance, despite undutiful acts and words, and would not be willing to give half of his own life to redeem hers from the grave were it but an hour, so that her ears might hear his bitter repentance, and her lips speak the pardon and the blessing. Times and times again, have the thoughts of my mother's gentle love and long suffering, brought the hot tears down my cheek when my brazen rebellion would not vouchsafe a single drop for the remembrance of my sins. Among the train of reflections which the new year brings, that which comes most vivid to my memory is

MY LAST NIGHT AT HOME.

Christmas is the national festival of England, and to celebrate it were gathered around our table a few friends and the debris of our own war-broken family. Six sons, to manhood grown, had fallen in battle, the last the youngest; and the grief-stricken mother was sinking fast; yet she rallied so far as to mix with her guests, at her last Christmas dinner. The party was cheerful and the conversation upon holy things. For a time the dear invalid enjoyed the company and seemed to gain fresh strength. But it was the saddest brightening of an exhausted lamp before it is extinguished. Ere an hour she had to be borne away to bed, where she lay dying, till the 18th of January following, when she quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

The bereavement was so great that it seemed to my heart as if the sun were blotted from the firmament. The black drapery about the house and around the bed was not more gloomy than the dark thoughts that crowded about my soul; and when the iron door of the burial vault shut her in, I felt myself shut out from the only friend I had in the world. I would not remain at home where every thing around brought to my agonized mind the remembrance of the mother I had lost. I made hasty preparations to leave. It did not take me long for I had often left my home before; but never so desolate as now.

To-morrow I was to depart—to-night I should spend with my mother. At ten o'clock I stole from the house and started rapidly for the churchyard. The moon had not yet risen, but the night was mild and clear, and the stars shone with a bright and steady lustre. I felt a deep awe creep over me as I approached the solemn confines of that old burial ground. The white gravestones gleaming through the yew trees and weeping willows like phantoms, had something in them ghastly, and were it not for the strength of my affection for the dead, and the holiness of my purpose, I should have fled from the dismal spot.

I clambered the wall unhesitatingly, and stood in the city of death. Not a sound reached my ear but the beating of my own heart. Have you ever been in that profound solitude where the stillness seems louder than the roar of old ocean? Then you can know what a solitary country graveyard is at midnight. The ear aches for an intelligible noise, while the restless and frightened eye seeks, yet fears to encounter, some object which may whirl the brain with horror.

My hasty steps upon the graveled walks now broke the silence as I quickly sought the family tomb. It was built close up to the old church side and coeval with its hoary walls, and when I reached it I threw myself upon the old time-worn slab of stone, upon which were cut the names of those who slept beneath. Now I felt no fear of anything—I called upon my mother—kissed the cold marble, not more cold and insensate than the last, pale tenant of this "narrow house," and the tears which refused to come till now, gushed forth and relieved my head and heart. O the luxury of that bath of uncontrolled, unwitnessed weeping! If deep grief should ever in its intensity dry up your tears, pray for power to shed them.

After the paroxysm had passed over, I felt a calmness unknown for a long time, till by slow degrees I sank into unconsciousness, and for a few hours I enjoyed the sweetest sleep I have ever known. When I awoke the sun and moon were struggling which should reflect most light; and after an earnest prayer for the Almighty to guide and direct me, I left the churchyard and reached home as the earliest domestics were astir.

In another hour a turn in the road shut out the last sight of home, and I set out upon a journey whose aim was vague and whose end was uncertain.

A Letter.

Out of the city's discordance and roar; Out of New York, this great Babel, once more; Out of its hubbub, confusion and din; Out of its tumult, and squalor, and sin; Out of its politics, rotten and glorious; Out of its enterprise, wild and uproarious; Out of its rushing, its raging, its rattle; Out of its unceasing conflict and battle; Out where neither stages nor omnibus run; Out where I tread not on pavements of stone; Out from the region of sky-piercing steeples; Out from the hodge-podge of nations and peoples; Out from close corners, where, pressed and confined, Woe is unseen by a charity blind; Out from the clatter and rush of machinery; Out 'mid the country, enjoying its scenery; Out from the city invented by Cain; Out in the country which God made for men;

So I have turned again to my writing; And hence I these horrible rhymes am inditing. Two weeks and more I in New York have been, Hearing the wrangling and seeing the striving, Viewing the Whirlpool, beholding the diving, Seeing the spitting and smelling the smoking, Hearing the groaning and whining and croaking; Seeing the rich in their splendor and wealth, Crowding along in their strength and their health; Seeing the vile, and the poor, and the needy; Seeing the lazy, the lame and the seedy; Meeting with friends who, with wide open door, Would give me a bed if they slept on the floor; (And whose houses are made to hold just one more); Meeting with old friends and new ones also, Talking of matters and things as they go; Talking to pilgrims who struggle for life, Bidding them falter not in the rude strife; Preaching in church and then in the hall, Talking of Jesus to great and to small; "Serving the summons" and raising the cry, Saying "repent, for God's kingdom is nigh!" Telling the crowded and burdened to pray, Telling the weepers there cometh a day, Which all earth's splendor and light, shall outshine, Filling the world with its glory divine.

So I have labored for evenings and Sundays, Going again to my labor on Mondays, Earning and buying and selling and giving, Doing my business for God and a living; Putting up parcels, and boxing and packing, Waiting when needful for what there was lacking; Buying my paper and ordering printing, Trying to hurry when business went limping; Stopped for some days, when the Croton pipes bursting, Gave us no water for engines or thirsting; Starting again when the waters were flowing, And the machines and engines set going; Watching my sheets while drying and pressing, Going to binders to keep them progressing; Turning out tracts by the dint of my labor, Some for myself and some more for my neighbor; Some for the learners who cry out for light, Some for the West where the sun sinks in night; Some for sinner and some for the saint, Some for the doubter to hush his complaint; Some to unfold God's unspeakable grace, Some to prepare us to gaze on his face; Some to send news of the gospel abroad, Some to proclaim the blest kingdom of God; Some to be sent far beyond the blue sea, Some to be scattered wherever I be; Some to unfold, and unfolding declare, Joys that the saints in the kingdom shall share; Some to point out the old way and the good, "Landmarks" that show where the fathers have stood; "Olive Leaves," too, speaking peace to the soul, Comfort when billows around us may roll; "Questions" "Important" that reach to the heart, "Reasons" for hopes such as earth ne'er imparts; "Gems" that have truth speaking out in their lines, Forming a lustre that cheeringly shines; Voices of pilgrims and poets and sages, Uttered aloud by "the church" in all ages; "Voices of Warning" that danger is near, Tales of a "New Earth" that soon shall appear; Records of mortals' insane "Controversy," Waged with their God who has offered them mercy; Warnings against Satan's fast spreading lie, His "Satanic Delusion" that sinners can't die, But must live through the ages, and roam through the spheres, And tip over tables throughout endless years; Telling great stories of Satan's preparing, Coaxing and wheedling, and bragging and scaring; Leading backsliders and sinners, like Saul, To seek to the dead when God hears not their call; Luring the nations along to their doom—The day of Jehovah that surely will come.

So I have labored, 'mid sorrow and care, Truth for the hungry to cheaply prepare; Bending my back to the labor and toil, Fearing no fingers or garments to soil; Toiling at even and dawning of day, Just finding moments to eat and to pray. Now as my business is pretty near done, Books manufactured, some more than a ton, Some others purchased, and some left behind, Till I could buy them and pay to my mind; Leaving a friend there to finish the work, Wearied and worn, I start off with a jerk; Having spent all the money I had, to my sorrow, And all but ten dollars of what I could borrow; Leaving printer and binder to wait and not fret, Till I sell some more books or collect some old debt; With the terrors of panic o'erhanging their heads, And their shops standing idle and hands wanting bread, And business all feeling the pressure and fuss Of mad politicians who will have a "muss;"—

I leave them behind, on the cars take a run, Nor stop till to B—— in safety I come, And here where the free air of heaven is playing, I till after the Lord's day to preach shall be staying; And then traveling eastward, appointments to fill, I propose soon to be with the friends at Camp's Mill. Thence eastward and homeward, if God shall so guide, To where Providence sits at the head of the tide; Stopping now and then only to preach or to pray, Or to visit some friends dearly loved on the way. So reaching my home, I my toil shall resume, Too busy to grieve or to weep o'er the tomb; Looking onward and upward, though tears dim my eyes, To the glory that dawns on the gloom-shaded skies; Speaking words of good cheer to the mourners at home, Of a time when once meeting, no more shall I roam, When the circle now broken, shall then re-unite, 'Mid the glorified hosts of the ransomed in light. When the loved and the longed for, the cherished and lost, Shall be bright as the angels on Canaan's fair coast, When no partings or grievings we ever shall feel, Or with eyes full of tears in our bitterness kneel; When no more shall the heart's deepest yearnings go forth For that which can never be found on the earth; But when joy and salvation, and gladness and bliss Shall light up with their rapture the kingdom of peace; And when night's bitter sorrow and weeping gives way To the joy that rolls in with the rising of day.

In this hope to my labor and sorrow I come, With a heart that casts anchor in glory my home, Gladly proclaim the acceptable year, And shout in my sadness, Redemption is near! To the poor I the tidings of mercy unfold, Which to them are more precious and priceless than gold; And scatter abroad as the leaves of life's tree, News of what God has done and is doing for me.

Now of health some improved I thankfully tell, And hope, if permitted to rest, to be well; But whatever the Lord as my lot may assign, I pray that his grace and his spirit be mine.

And now I must close this long rambling letter; By writing it over I might make it better; But time is too precious to waste upon it, So what I have written you see must stay writ. So with greetings and love to the friends of the Lord, And with welcome to all who will follow his word, And with sorrow for faults, and with longings for rest, I must ask for the prayers of the good and the blest; So in bonds of affection which never can die, I remain H. L. HASTINGS, of Providence, R. I.

What is Truth?

DEAR FRIENDS:—Is it not a time when it is a duty for individuals to be established on the side of truth? If we are not, I would ask where are we? Are we seeking for truth among fallible men, or are we going to the Bible? Do you believe the Bible to be the word of God? Are you willing to say that you wish to be guided by it? If so, why not seek to know what it teaches? Why not come humbly to the feet of Jesus, and ask wisdom of him, and be willing to follow him through good and evil report? Do not begin to say, if I acknowledge this truth and that, they will call me an "Adventist," and that is too humbling; the popular class will despise me, and my name will be cast out as evil, and perhaps they will cast me out of their church. What if all this should be the result; had it not better be so, by far, than that you should go on blindfolded, with an empty lamp to destruction? Is it not time for us to put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil? For we know that "all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Do you believe when you read in the Bible the soul that sinneth it shall die, it is God's word? And if God truly says this, will you please to tell me how a soul can die and not die? Remember it is said, the soul that sinneth it shall die.

Our popular preachers tell us that the soul never dies; so Satan told our first parents, that if they would disobey the commands of God they should never die. Was he to be believed instead of their Maker? and can we believe teachers at this day who advocate the same doctrine? Can you believe that when you die your disembodied spirit is going right to heaven, if you are a christian, to receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, and spend the endless ages of eternity in praising and worshiping God and the Lamb? Look at this for one moment, and be truthful, be honest. Can it be so when the Bible says "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence"? "The dead know not any thing." In the grave there is neither knowledge nor device. "Man lieth down and riseth not, until the heavens be no more, he shall not awake nor be raised out of his sleep." Oh, consistency, where art thou?

I have been a professor for quite a number of years, and have, until within about three years, been ignorant of the plain doctrines of the Bible, which I now think essential to my salvation. I was providentially thrown among the Advent people. I knew but little of what they believed, previous to this, and cared less. I supposed from what I had heard they were a sort of blind leaders of the blind, and that they would sooner or later all fall into the ditch together. But when I came to hear for myself, I saw my mistake. I found, as I believe, that their faith is grounded on the platform of Bible truth, and I ever feel thankful that through their instrumentality, under God, I have been led out of the darkness of tradition and have been placed upon the rock Christ Jesus.

I would say to any that may read this, if they are halting between two opinions, go to your Bible, read it carefully and prayerfully, and ask God for wisdom. Do not pin your faith on your minister's sleeve, but look for yourself. M. K.

Birth-Day Thoughts.

Entering this day my eightieth year, I desire, with devout gratitude of heart, to adopt the words of the Psalmist, "Come near, all ye that fear the Lord, and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul." He formed me in the womb; laid me on my mother's breast, nourished me there.

"Unnumbered comforts to my soul
His tender care bestowed,
Before my infant heart perceived
From whom those comforts flowed.
When in the slippery paths of youth
My heedless footsteps ran,
His hand unseen conveyed me safe,
And led me up to man."

The revolving years of manhood have been crowned with his loving kindness, and filled up with his tender mercies. Nearly threescore fleeting years have intervened since that blessed era of wondrous love, when the good Shepherd of Israel called me, wandering in the wilderness of sin, and brought me to his fold. Yet is that hour of divine mercy to a perishing sinner fresh in his heart's memory as the event of yesterday. There, with adoring gratitude, shall it be cherished through the ceaseless ages of eternity.

To the honor of my Father in heaven, I do now and ever ascribe all my salvation to the unsearchable riches of his grace in his own beloved Son Christ Jesus. Far be it that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ, "by whom the world is crucified to me and I unto the world." O blessed "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus (which) hath made me free from the law of sin and death," to reign with him in his kingdom!

Among the innumerable mercies which have crowned the fleeting years of an unworthy pilgrim to Mount Zion, I desire to record this day the blessed influence of the Spirit of my Father, inducing me to seek for the holy truth at his own pure fountain, and to renounce the doctrines and traditions of fallible men, which make void "the word of the Lord" which "abideth forever." Most refreshing has it been to emerge from clouds of darkness, which cast their murky shade around the throne of "the Father of mercies." To enter into more perfect fellowship with the Holy One, is ample remuneration for all loss our sanctification may cost. Surely the honor which cometh from "the alone God," which a single eye to his truth secures, is preferable to that which cometh from "a man that shall die, and the son of man which is as grass."

With my mercies, I classify all those trials of faith and patience, my Father's chastening love has appointed, through every fleeting year. Blessed be his holy name! he has given me to "know that his judgments are righteous altogether," and that "in loving kindness he has afflicted me." "Light and but for a moment" do they indeed appear, when we remember the animating promise of my Lord's coming to take his longing bride into his everlasting embraces, and that these trials of faith are working out for us "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!"

O that the little remnant of mortal life may be more faithfully consecrated to the service of the God of my salvation.

Pencilings by the Way.

Monday, Nov. 20th, left Danville for Melbourne. Passed the house where thirty-two years ago I ventured to take the Bible in my hand for the first time in my life and proclaim the truth as I then understood it. Almost all that heard me then have passed away; a few remain as living witnesses of those days, so interesting when multitudes were blessed.

I thank the Lord that I still find it in my heart to love the important work of the ministry more than ever. Had I a thousand tongues, and could employ them in as many places, I would cheerfully use them all in proclaiming the glorious gospel of the kingdom in the last message to mortal men.

Nov. 24th, left Melbourne for Barnston, Hollister's Mills. Sunday, Nov. 25th met according to appointment; stormy, few out, but some interest to hear. The brethren solicited me to stop and hold a series of meetings during the week. Accordingly we commenced, and after a few days of excessive labor, we succeeded in getting some of the many that were on the back ground, into working order. The glorious work began. Sinners are crying for mercy; some three or four have found peace, and are rejoicing in hope. The whole population are moved.

Sunday, Dec. 9th. Baptized three youths,—happy converts. At the close of the evening meeting, an intelligent young lady, a teacher, gave me her hand, saying, with tears, "Wont you pray for me?" She has since given her heart to the Lord, been pardoned and is now rejoicing in hope. The cloud of mercy still hangs over Barnston. Glory to God for his great work in this place.

Sunday, Dec. 23d, baptized two young ladies, (converts,) the one above mentioned, who came out of the water shouting praises to God. The scenes of this day will long be remembered by many that were present. Truth is gaining ground in this land. I am thankful that I ever believed in the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked; can say with Bro. Grant, I should be condemned and deserve to be lost, with the light that I have, if I should cease to declare it; hence I will stand up for the truth and warn the world of its approaching doom.

The interest is so great here that I have concluded to remain for the present and labor for God. Post office address, Derby Line, Vermont. CHARLES C. STEVENS.

"Stray Thoughts Arrested."—No. 5.

BY T. W. S.

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

This inquiry of the great apostle of the Gentiles, which was made at the time in which the Lord Jesus appeared to him on the road to Damascus and made manifest to him his error and wickedness in persecuting the saints of God, is the first question the converted man asks of God. The desire to work for God is the first feeling. What can I do for my Master? I am saved—what can I do to save others? The desire to have others partake of the rich benefits he enjoys is the characteristic of the live christian. Indeed, we may almost doubt the reality of a man's discipleship who is satisfied in being safe in the fold of Christ himself, and cares not for the peril of others; who is contented with his own salvation, who sees men all around perishing for want of the "bread of life" and he too selfish to bestow it.

A man must be working for God or for the enemy of God. There is no middle ground. Every word is spoken for God or against God. Every act is for God or against God. Every one has an influence, and that influence is being exerted for good or for evil,—for Christ or against Christ. There is no such thing as "standing still." A christian is progressing or else he is retrograding. Onward and upward is the motto of a living disciple; on his banner is inscribed "Excelsior." How necessary that the prayer of the christian should often be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

The cry has been made, the "Lord is at hand." If so, "why stand ye here all the day idle?" I can do nothing. Can't pray, then, cannot visit the sick, the poor, the prisoner. Cannot buy tracts and distribute them. The family are all christians then. Friends, relatives, acquaintances, all christians; neighbors all saved. Not another sinner in the world, all "know the Lord." The church filled to overflowing; the minister well sustained; not room for another child in the Sunday school; intemperance ceased; no more drunkards to be reclaimed. Happy day! glorious hour! Nothing more to do! the work is all done! No more agonizing prayers; no more tears. Would to God this was the state of affairs.

But it is not so. The opposite is the case. Piety is at a discount. Godliness is scarce. Because iniquity abounds the love of many is waxing cold. The delusions of the day are drawing away thousands from the church. Spiritualism claims to have her ranks filled from the church. Infidelity is increasing. Is it proper to sleep now? Shall we fold our arms and slumber now, when it seems as if the gates of hell were opened against the church? Let us be up and doing. Let us work while it is called day. "He that winneth souls is wise." It is more honorable, more wise, more glorious, to be instrumental in saving a sinner from destruction than to take a city. "He that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins."

Let us cry more earnestly, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" for time is going out of life. What wilt thou have me to do, to advance thy cause, to glorify thy name, to win souls for Christ? "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

Oh for more devotedness, more zeal, more activity in the cause of the Master! O for a deeper work of grace! O for a closer walk with God!

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne,
And worship only thee." Amen.

For the Crisis.

Premature Discharges.

A great deal of harm is done in this world by being in too great a hurry, by going off too soon. The gun that goes off at "half-cock" never does anything but mischief. I have seen a great deal of this in religious matters. Some new idea is broached, when all at once, half a dozen who know nothing about the facts or arguments in the case, plunge in to the thick of the fight, piling up questions, objections, whims, prejudices, appeals and half digested arguments, which show that they know nothing of the facts, and have only examined one side of the question. And when the man who has studied both sides retires from the "muss" to wait till the dust settles and the clamor is over, instead of going in, like a "Middleborough town meeting—all speakers and no hearers," then they think he is confuted, silenced, "wound up" and "can't say a word." There is a time to speak—that is, when people will hear. There is a time to be silent,—when they wont. And if ever there is a time to be still it is when everybody wants to talk. "Great is the noise of a multitude crying silence"! And no less is the noise of a multitude who are all trying to speak.

From all these things I try to learn to wait till I have something to say, and be cautious before I say it. Nothing gives me much more disgust than to find that I have spoken too soon, and by my hasty speaking have kept some one else from talking who really had something to say, and who could have taught me what I did not know.

Let us all be teachable and quiet, and sometimes keep our ears open, even if to do it we must keep our mouths shut for a moment. Truth is not always elicited by battles—sometimes it is timid and coy, and needs to be wooed with gentleness and love. Let us teach in meekness and learn with patience and love, and avoid vain janglings and "perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds." Let us be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of peace shall be with us. H. L. H.

The Peace of God.

"And the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.—Phil. 4: 7.

This peace, like every other emotion, must be experienced to be understood. It is heaven born; it is not of earth; none but true believers enjoy it; it is given to none others. "There is no peace," saith the Lord, "unto the wicked." "The way of peace they know not." They are compared unto "the troubled sea, casting up mire and dirt;" therefore they have none of that peace which Paul says shall keep the hearts and minds of the believing Philippians. It is a "peace that passeth all understanding," and it is through Christ we get it, for he says in John 14: 27, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Therefore it is a peace that shall keep your hearts and minds, yes, who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and keep his commandments.

While the unbeliever is troubled in mind, the believer has peace of mind. While the one doubts, the other is firm; while one fears, the other rejoiceth. Yes, although political strifes destroy the peace of our country, or the kings of the earth wage war, or the powers of heaven be shaken, yet he says, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

Brother and sister in the Lord, have ye it with us? Have ye all that peace? If not, let us so live that we can have it, and be found in peace in him when he (Christ) comes; for the Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. Amen.

Reports of Revivals.

Thinking the readers of the Crisis will be interested in reading reports of revivals in other churches, and other lands, I propose to give extracts from the accounts of what the Lord is doing for our fallen race. We feel sure that every true christian will rejoice to hear that sinners are turning to Christ. The first account which we will transcribe for the edification of the reader, is taken from the New York Observer. It is a portion of a report respecting the Fulton St. prayer meeting. We shall be obliged to abbreviate somewhat. M. D. W.

ANOTHER REMARKABLE ANSWER TO PRAYER.

A Moravian clergyman, lately from the Island of Jamaica, West Indies, arose in the meeting and said: "I have been once before in this meeting and kept silence, but now if I should keep silence, I think I should do dishonor to God and injustice to the meeting. To the glory of God's grace I must tell you how God hears and answers prayer.

Some time ago I sent a request to this meeting, asking you to pray for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon my church and congregation in Jamaica. Now I hold here a letter just received which shows how remarkably God has answered prayer. I was then a pastor in Jamaica when I wrote the request, about Sept. last; now I have been transferred to the city, and am settled over a congregation near the Roman Catholic Cathedral, and as you prayed for my congregation in Jamaica, so I beg you to pray for my congregation in the city. I wish to read from this letter, to show you how God answers prayer.

MY DEAR BRO. RIENKE:—I have long wished to write to you, and now my heart has a burning desire to make you a partaker of our joy. Rejoice with us, dear brother, and again I say, rejoice; for the Lord has visited us, even us with his salvation. The Lord has been pleased to pour out his Holy Spirit most abundantly upon our congregations, and upon some of our sister churches. New Carmel, your beloved child of many prayers, was the first that obtained the blessing. On Thursday the 20th of Sept., at the usual weekly prayer meeting, the Lord manifested himself to the congregation in such a manner, that all hearts were melted before him, and he, the Bridegroom, added on that blessed day, not a few members to his bride. Oh! how your heart would have rejoiced could you have seen and heard what your successor was favored to witness on that day, and ever since—the awful prostrations, the mournful lamentations, the piercing cries of distress, the open and full confessions of sin, the noble zeal of the new converts to win others to Christ, the anxious desire to join the church, the increased liberality.'

Bro. Thaeler writes under date of 22 Oct. "The work of grace is still continuing among us here. Almost all excitement has ceased now. No vivid flashes and crashing thunders to startle you, but a clearly quiet, pouring rain. Every day produces fresh fruits. I have conversed individually with upward of four hundred persons who have been brought under the gracious influences of the Lord's Spirit. Thus far the quickening effects have been most satisfactory, exciting us to admiration and praise. Fulnec and Springfield were favored next, and on the same day. Bro. S——, whose diary lies before me, gives the following description of that blessed work: 'Though no public notice had been given of the prayer meeting this morning, yet the church was filled as on ordinary Sabbath days. Long time before the meeting commenced, the people had assembled in the yard and a most solemn feeling pervaded all. At 9 o'clock the meeting commenced, and, oh what a meeting! After having sung a verse and addressed a few words of exhortation to the people, we engaged in prayer. And what a prayer that was! There was no occasion to call on any, for no sooner had one finished than another began. Such prayer I never heard. Even the little children engaged in it; and particularly when a little boy began to pour out his soul before God, a trembling seized on all! O the tears that were wept then! cries for mercy that ascended to the throne of God! the groans that were wrung from many a hardened sinner! Also, a little girl lifted up her voice; and oh! the prayer that child prayed was heart-rending. Such earnestness, fervency, and fluency as came from that little heart, I never yet have witnessed. God's Spirit came down on the assembly as a mighty rushing wind. Many were smitten down under an overwhelming sense of their sins. Big, strong men trembled on their knees, as though shaken by an invisible power. There was a general weeping and crying. The sword of conviction had been unsheathed, piercing the hearts of old and young, male and female. I felt overwhelmed at what I saw, heard and felt. Out of the mouths of swearers, blasphemers, fornicators, and thieves, of babes and sucklings, God has perfected his praise. At twelve o'clock I broke up the meeting.'

The scene at Springfield, during the same hours, was still more awful. The manifestation was so sudden, and so powerful, that, says Bro. [illegible], who officiated there [illegible], the whole congregation, assembled at the prayer meeting, was prostrated as one man. And such was the groaning, screaming, wrestling, that Bro. L. had to break up the meeting at once and clear the church. And even the yard at Springfield, was turned into a Bochim, filled with the slain of the Lord, who were lying in all directions, under the greatest agony of soul, till they had grace to confess their sins.

Beaufort and New Hope were visited next, the fire having been kindled there, under God, by warm-hearted, new converts. About a fortnight ago the work began at Bethabara, and thank God, last week, poor, cold, dry, barren Fairfield was blest. Oct. 26th was the day of grace, when the Lord was pleased to raise up of these stones, children unto Abraham. At our usual prayer meeting on Friday, one of the new converts rose to tell his brethren what the Lord had done for his soul. His short and earnest address made a deep impression. As soon after we kneeled down to pray, the same man lifted up his voice. The pent up feeling burst forth, and there was general loud weeping. Two women shrieked awfully. We succeeded in having them removed. When we began to sing again, the excitement subsided and a holy calm pervaded the assembly, so that we could continue in prayer and praise. When I had concluded the meeting the crowd would not disperse, but collected in groups outside, on the common. Then it was the Lord worked mightily by his Holy Spirit. Several of the new converts from Hatfield witnessed there against the vanities of the world, and pleaded warmly for Christ. Soon, one after another was smitten, and began to cry, or rather scream for mercy; young, strong men, women old and young, and little children. We had them removed to different rooms, and ere long you might have seen seven young men lying on the floor, in the door in the down stairs speaking room. About twenty females up stairs, a number of children in the old Normal School—all in the deepest distress for sin, wrestling with Satan and their pride, till at last they conquered, and made a full confession of all their sins.

Oh! I cannot describe what I felt, when I sat, or stood, watching over those dear young men, as for hours they lay in agony, and endeavoring to administer to them the precious comfort of God's Holy Word; yes, and what I felt, when at last I saw a beam of joy irradiate those gloomy countenances, and when finally I behold their faces radiant with holy joy, as they rose from the ground and exclaimed, Jesus has pardoned all my sins! The enemies of God have much to say against this blessed awakening. But we have great reason to bless God, for while we have some chaff, we have an abundance of wheat. A striking feature of this marvellous work of grace is, the readiness of the people to confess their sins."

The speaker stated that more than one thousand converted souls had been, up to the date of this letter, the fruits of this most wonderful work of grace, with no diminution in its amazing power. He said that any such manifestations as are here narrated, had not taken place among the Moravians in the last hundred years.

For the Crisis.

1 Cor. 15 : 24—28.

"Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom (the reign) to God, even the Father," etc. This clearly implies, an antecedent possession of the kingdom by the Son. He could not deliver up a kingdom which he did not actually possess. The promise of the Father to give him the kingdom or reign on the throne of his father David, is not yet fulfilled. He is now at the right hand of his Father on his (the Father's) throne. At his second personal coming, he will be on his own throne.—Rev. 3 : 21; Dan. 7 : 13, 14.

"The kingdoms of this world are (to) become the kingdom of our Jehovah and of his Christ."—Rev. 11 : 15. "The Father, of whom are all things," will put all things, under the feet of his Son. He will give him the reign to triumph gloriously over the powers of darkness.

This reign must continue until all enemies are put under the feet of Jesus Christ, which will be at least "a thousand years." —Rev. 20 : 4. At his coming, the work of the glorious conquest commences, proceeding until "all things shall be subdued unto him." Not until "he shall have put down all (opposing) rule, and all authority, and all power," will he deliver up the kingdom to his Father, when God shall be "all in all." Verse 24 declares that it is the "kingdom" or reign, which is to be "delivered up."

May divine favor prepare us for the awful and glorious scenes which will soon open upon this insensible world.

For the Crisis.

Will Bro. White please answer the following questions through the Crisis?

1. Did Christ exist prior to his advent as a separate person from the Father?

2. Will Christ always retain the body that he had when he left the earth?

3. If so, is not his first personality lost?

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 2, 1861.

"A Happy New Year."

Yes, to every one of our readers we would say, we wish you "a happy new year,"—happy in the Lord. Indeed, none can be truly happy in any other way. The wicked have "no peace," while the righteous have "great peace." May the latter be your portion forever and ever.

Reflections.

Another year is gone! How rapid has been its flight! Months have seemed but weeks, and weeks but days. Thus life is flying away, and will soon be ended. Where shall it end? Are we hastening to destruction, or salvation? to the lake of fire, or the paradise of God? Shall our portion be with the wicked, or the pure in heart? Shall we live eternally with the holy and happy, or die the "second death" and "be no more?" It is for us to decide.

Let us stop a moment and look over the year now closed. It is proper to inquire, have we spent it well? have we acknowledged the Lord in all our ways? have we borne every cross, and kept the eye single to his glory? have we been kind in our families? honest in our dealings with our fellow men? have we been long-suffering, tender-hearted and forbearing, like our dear Savior, thus showing to the world that we are his disciples? have we shown love towards our enemies, blessing those who curse us, returning good for evil? in short, have we kept unspotted from the world? or have we allowed in ourselves wicked imaginations, vain thoughts and foolish words, evil speaking, backbiting, bitter feelings and selfish deeds? If the latter, shall we allow them dominion over us another year? No, in the strength of Jesus let us reform from every evil way, and be found among "the pure in heart" who "shall see God." Let not another unkind word escape our lips, nor wicked thought be lodged within the mind. Let us "put on the whole armor of God" that we at last may be crowned with those who conquer by the blood of the Lamb. Life ends sweetly to those who have spent it well.

During the past year, death has not forgotten its work. Many loved ones who, at its beginning, greeted their friends with a wish for "a happy new year," are now sleeping in the gloomy grave. Tedious days and nights have been spent in weary watchings by the sick bed of an affectionate wife, a kind husband, dear father or mother, a bosom friend, or a lovely child; whose cheering voices are now hushed in death. The family circle is broken, they are gone to the grave, and we have wept by its side, as the earth rumbled upon the coffin, where they lie in peace, sweetly sleeping in Jesus, awaiting the morning of the resurrection. We have often thought of their kind words and pleasant looks; but we see them no more. They met death with a smile, which was left upon the countenance to cheer the weeping friends, as the sun when it is set smiles back upon the clouds, saying, be of good cheer, I will return again and end the weary night in a joyful morn.

Concord.

Wednesday, Dec. 12th, we left Boston for Concord, N. H., and met a hearty welcome in Bro. Preble's happy, christian family, where we found a home indeed for Zion's pilgrims. Our meetings were not large at the beginning, but they soon filled up with attentive and intelligent listeners, till many were obliged to stand up for want of room. A goodly number of brethren and sisters came in from surrounding towns, whose hearty labors added much interest to the meetings. After the second evening we found it necessary to have meetings during the day, which were well attended and were very heavenly seasons. It was a common remark, "I have not attended such a good meeting for years," and some thought it the best they ever enjoyed. We were much comforted in meeting Bro. Jonas Merriam, and witnessing his rich joy in the meetings. The Lord gave him "great peace." It was common for those who came to our social meetings to speak from two to six times. They felt so well, they found it crossing to keep still. It seemed like the heavenly seasons of by-gone days. Many eyes were filled with tears of joy, while gladsome songs of praise cheered the hearts of pilgrims, "toil-worn and weary." It was a feast from the Lord, and many were fed from his bountiful supply. It was truly a season of refreshing from the Most High, and one of those gatherings upon which we ever look back with pleasure. Backsliders were aroused, and the unconverted decided to be christians.

Quite a number of young preachers from the Biblical Institute attended, and several of them assisted in our social meetings. They asked a number of questions on the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked, which added to the interest of the meetings. We were pleased with their candor, [illegible] and we felt assured that the time was spent both profitably and pleasantly. We all enjoyed it. Nearly every objection to of the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked was presented and considered. Several of them appeared surprised at the amount and clearness of the Scripture in favor of these points of doctrine; while at the same time, they were equally astonished at the weakness of the arguments adduced in favor of the conscious state of the dead, and the eternal misery of the wicked. We trust some of them will never again preach these fables, but, regardless of the praise of men, or the "filthy lucre" of this vain world, "preach the word," knowing the time has come, "when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears."—2 Tim. 4 : 2–3. An old version of this reads, "For the time will arrive when men will not bear the true and salutary doctrines of christianity; but their tastes being vitiated, and their prurient ears tickled with sounds, they will accordingly countenance a number of public teachers, who will show their depraved passions, and these will reject the truth with the last aversion, and drink in fictions and fables with insatiable avidity." Our prayer is, that none of those young and promising preachers may be found among the class of teachers just described.

Our meetings continued to increase in interest till the close. Those who were converted, or reclaimed from a backslidden state, numbered over forty. Our last evening was one of great interest. Our house was very full—many unable to get seats or even get into the house. After preaching, about fifty sat down to the table of the Lord to commemorate his sufferings. It was a profitable and pleasant season. At the close of the communion, we invited those who felt a desire to be christians, to come forward for prayers. Thirty came, and twenty-nine of them were blessed and confessed Christ. Many of them are heads of families, and several are past the meridian of life. Many more are under conviction. That evening will be long remembered by those who were present. Bro. Preble will go on with the meetings. We shall expect to hear more glad tidings from Concord. Praise the Lord for his wonderful goodness to the children of men.

Exposition of 2 Cor. 5: 6-8, and Phil. 1: 23.

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give through the Crisis an exposition of 2 Cor. 5 : 6–8, and Phil. 1 : 23?

S. N. LANGLEY.

The first Scripture named reads as follows: "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; for we walk by faith, not by sight. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." In the verses preceding this extract, Paul uses figures of speech illustrating the condition of the church in this world, as compared with the one to come. He speaks of being "naked," "clothed," and "unclothed;" but evidently is not referring to literal clothing. In the verses under examination, Paul uses the plural pronoun we, representing himself and those to whom he was writing—the Corinthians—and says, "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord, for we walk by faith, not by sight." If by body, Paul means the physical organisms of himself and the Corinthian brethren, we think he would have said, "Whilst we are at home in" our bodies, "we are absent from the Lord;" and also in verse 8th he would have said, "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from" our bodies, "and to be present with the Lord;" instead of saying, "absent from the body."

If by the pronoun we, Paul means "immortal souls" in bodies, then he would make out that they all live in one body. But whether they live in one or many, if these supposed "immortal souls" are the real men, and never die, going to their reward at death, then Paul is not in harmony with himself; for he says, "If the dead rise not, then . . . . they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." This cannot be true if they are alive, and with Christ. Again, Paul says, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."—1 Cor. 15 : 32. In these passages, Paul shows as plainly as language can make it, that those who die can have no hope of a future conscious existence, unless there is a resurrection of the dead; consequently, he cannot mean, when he says, "We are . . . willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord," that the we are "immortal souls," that will go to heaven to be with the Lord when death takes place. If these souls go to hades, as some claim, then they do not go to the Lord, unless he is still in hades; and if he is, then it follows he is not raised from the dead, and christianity is a failure. If we have the pronoun we, in the passage under examination, represent immortal men inside of their bodies, who are to go to the Lord as soon as their bodies die, we see no possibility of making Paul harmonize with himself or the rest of the Scriptures.

We will now let Paul explain himself. It is a well known fact that the church, as a whole, is called the body of Christ, while he is denominated the "head." In Rom. 12 : 5, Paul says,—"So we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." This is too plain to need explanation. With the foregoing corresponds 1 Cor. 12 : 27:—"Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." In Eph. 3 : 6, Paul says, "That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body." Again he says, when speaking of the work of the apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, they were given "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Eph. 4 : 12. When speaking of what God has done for Christ, Paul says, "he hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body."—Eph. 1 : 22, 23. In Col. 1 : 18, he says of Christ, "He is the head of the body, the church."

Whatever construction be put upon 2 Cor. 5 : 6–8, we think it is certain Paul did not intend to teach the Corinthian brethren, or any one else, that when they died they would not be dead, but would be translated to heaven. In 1 Cor. 15 : 16–18 he teaches most plainly that christians are perished "if the dead rise not;" and we do not believe he then taught directly the opposite, that they go to Christ and receive their reward independent of the resurrection, thus plainly contradicting himself, and other positive Scriptures.

We now pass to consider the second part of the question, relative to Phil. 1 : 23, which reads; "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better." It is thought by some, that Paul meant to say, I desire to have my soul depart and be with Christ. And yet we are told by popular theologians that, when men die, their souls go to hades. We would inquire, is Christ still in hades? Then he is not raised and we are without hope,—all are perished. When I say, "I desire to depart and see my mother in Connecticut," do I mean, I would like to have my immaterial soul go and see her, and leave me behind in Boston? By no means. I mean that I wish to go, so that I can say to mother, as did Jesus after his resurrection, "It is I myself." No one would suppose for a moment that, when an individual says, I desire to depart in the next steamer for Europe, he expects to leave his physical organism behind. In such a case, it would be evident he had not gone. Does it make any difference whether he should go horizontally over the earth, or ascend perpendicularly, so far as departing is concerned? Certainly not. Why, then, say that Paul only desired to have his soul depart? Why not let him desire to be translated like Enoch and Elijah? which would be "far better" than to remain on earth and be whipped and stoned as he had been; or to die and sleep in the grave till the resurrection. It seems Paul was in a strait betwixt living and enduring "a great fight of afflictions;" and dying and sleeping in Jesus, till "the last . . . . trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible;" but besides his strait in the choice between these two points, he had an anxious desire to depart, or be translated, and be with Christ, which was "far better" than either.

The word analuo, rendered depart in ver. 23, occurs but once more in the New Testament; which is in Luke 12 : 36, and is rendered return. The verse reads, "And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that, when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately." In Joshua 22 : 8, we read, "And he spake unto them, saying, Return with much riches unto your tents." The Hebrew word, here rendered return, always has this signification; and in twenty-two Mss. of the Septuagint, including the Oxford, is translated by analuo, the word rendered depart in Phil. 1 : 23, but return in Luke 12 : 36. Hence some render Phil. 1 : 23, "Having a desire for the returning, and being with Christ, which is far better." This latter rendering harmonizes with all Paul has said. Many christians have been situated where they would hardly know whether to choose life or death; but longed for Christ to return, which would be "far better" than either. This, we think, may be Paul's meaning. One thing is certain; the Bible no where teaches that men know any thing when dead; or that they go to their reward before the coming of Christ. We read, "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matt. 16 : 27.

The South.

The Southern states are rapidly approaching a distressing situation, with no prospect of improvement; indeed the whole world seems passing into confusion confounded; fulfilling the Scripture, which says, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." The [illegible] presents a very gloomy aspect, with strong evidence that she is about to drink a bitter cup. Her side of iniquity has increased rapidly during the past few years, and now, like the rest of the world, she seems ripe for the harvest. The reader may get some idea of the state of things at the South, from the following extracts:—Says the Montgomery Mail, Ala., Dec. 11th, 1860:—

"We have found out a deep-laid plan among the negroes of our neighborhood, and from what we can find out from our negroes it is general all over the country. The plot is this: they are to make a general rise during the Christmas holidays. We are now whipping the negroes—taking them as they come. We hear some startling facts. They have gone far enough in the plot to divide out our estates, mules, lands, and household furniture. Their plan is this: they are to kill the families on a certain night, (that they live with,) and then get together and take the country. They look for aid from Lincoln and the Northern people. We cannot find out the exact time, but they generally have pitched on Wednesday night, the 26th of Dec. No humbug is this."

HARD TIMES IN ALABAMA.—The Mobile Register publishes the following extract from a letter from Choctaw county:

"You Mobilians have but a faint idea of the misery that will be likely to exist in the country the coming year. I can assure you, from my own observation, that in less than two months from this time eight families out of ten will actually be out of corn, and a great part of them will not have the money to buy it with. And as your merchants will not fill orders unless the cash accompanies such orders, where is it to come from?"

The Memphis Argus has the following letter, dated Friar's Point, Miss., Dec. 11:

"There is great excitement in this community. The people are in arms against the Northern men who have been in the country but a few months. On yesterday evening, two gins and a negro quarter were fired simultaneously, doubtless by the procurement of these wretches. The night was lit up for miles around. The Vigilance Committee were soon under arms, and proceeded to the room of three carpenters, one by the name of Hamblin, the others unknown, and took them and hung them to the first tree, and afterwards cut them down and burned them! The town is now under arms, the military are parading the streets, and all is excitement and alarm.

This morning the remainder of the Northern men were up the river on the steamer Peytona; some of them were branded with the letters G. B. (gin burners) before being shipped. Fourteen gins have been burned in this county during the last six weeks, and the people have determined to stop it.

An abolitionist was hanged, barreled up, and rolled into the river at this point last week, and it was probably to avenge his death that the last gins were fired. A negro implicated the men who were hung. He said that they told him all the negroes were to be free next March, when Lincoln becomes President, and there will be a general rising of the negroes then. The vigilance committee have sworn to hang every Northern man who comes here from this time until the 4th of March."

The following extract from a private letter of a slaveholder in Florida, dated Dec. 11th, 1860, will give some idea of the state of things in that state.

"All business has come to a perfect stand still. Can't sell anything for cash. Cotton can't be sold at any price. No exchange. It is a fact that South Carolina, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi will go out of the Union. Texas is likely to go by herself, as Gen. Houston will have a government of his own. I was aware of this when I sent my last draft. Must wait for a turn in matters. I have notes against good men for five times enough to pay all my liabilities, and cannot collect any how. What all this will come to I cannot say; but I think there would be no difficulty in settling all our troubles, if it were not for the determination to secede. It is the main intention of the cotton states to open the African slave trade; they cannot do this while in the Union, and here lies the difficulty in coming to some understanding. The African slave trade they think worth more to them than the Union. Florida will go out of the Union. We vote for delegates on the 22nd instant, and the Convention meets on the 3d of January. It has been the intention of the disunionists to spring a trap on the people, and push matters in hot haste before they can think. I think that the South, out of all pretended grievances, can make out only one clear case thus far; that is, the anti-fugitive slave laws of the Northern States. No doubt we are in danger of losing our slaves, in the Union or out of it."

A correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat, writing from New Orleans, says:—

"The best planters' promises to pay are not negotiable at five per cent. a month, although made in the old form, with good city names upon them as payers. Factorage houses go down like hail, and utter stagnation reigns everywhere. On the memorable fourth of December, when a vast amount of paper falls due in this city, sixty cotton houses suspended, and paper went to protest to the amount of $10,000. The oldest and best dry goods houses are offering their goods at a ruinous sacrifice, and there is hardly a house in the city which does not advertise to sell out at cost or reduced rates. But in spite of all this, nothing is sold and nothing is doing."

Encouraging.

We clipped the following pithy remarks from one of our exchange papers. The writer says:—

"The World's Crisis is an advocate of that we have styled the 'Devil's religion' and 'Anxious bench piety.' Its editor is a professor and teacher of the same, and is a believer and helper on of modern revivals, etc.; and every person intelligently instructed in the gospel of the kingdom [illegible]

[illegible] pour out all the milk of human kindness there is in us, endeavoring to win them to Christ,—but never let us deceive them, by giving them to understand they are 'christians' and 'dear brethren,' when we know they are in no better condition, so far as future life is concerned, than the pious Mohammedan or Hindoo.

An Acrostic Wish for the Friends of the "Crisis."

I hasten to greet you with a warm-hearted wish,
Which God grant you may surely obtain,
It is unto all a "Happy New Year,"
So long as on earth you remain.
"Happy New Year" to our Editor Grant:
You also, kind reader, we greet;
On all of your hearts may blessings descend,
Until we in glory shall meet.
And to Sister G., a helpmeet indeed,
"Happy New Year" we likewise extend;
And to Bro. C., whose writings we read,
Please accept this true wish from a friend.
Perhaps our hope, so long cherished, may this
Year in its fullness be given;
New scenes may arise, imparting the bliss
Enjoyed by the angels in heaven.
We may welcome our Lord to earth's domain,
Yielding so long the brier and thorn;
Elect us our King forever to reign,
And earth with new beauty adorn.
Reader, yours truly I ever remain.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

BRO. GRANT:—For over five weeks past I have been suffering under the influence of a severe cold which settled upon my lungs, producing chills and fever, and a hoarseness which prevented me from talking almost entirely for a while; but through the goodness of God I am at the present time somewhat relieved, and am slowly recovering; yet I fear I shall not be able to preach any more this winter, my lungs being so much weakened by disease. The only medicine which has rendered me any substantial good was pure cold and warm water. After the disease had progressed for about three weeks, I commenced wearing towels wet in cold water around my body, changing as often as four or five times a day. In about two days the disease began to appear upon the surface, and it has been coming out more and more ever since. Pain in my lungs and side have entirely disappeared, so that I feel quite comfortable, although my lungs are very weak; yet by due care over myself I hope to recover from this dangerous disease ere long.

It has been quite an affliction of mind to be housed up and not permitted to preach or attend meetings; and if this is to be my ordination during the winter, it will be the greatest cross I have borne since I embraced the "blessed hope." But in such hours of suffering and anxiety the christian's hope looks so good, so permanent, so rich and desirable, that we sometimes seem to lose sight of our own sufferings, and are almost lost in our thoughts of coming glories and blessedness which "cast their shadows before."

The more I study my precious Bible and reflect upon the christian religion as revealed therein, and then by comparing it with that which passes among the masses for christianity, the more I discover an immense difference between the two. One is characterized by a proud, dressy, popular, loving to see and to be seen, sectarian, go and come people,—like a door upon its hinges—to hear something that tickles the fancy, that the would be wise call smart, talented, eloquent, splendid; while the other is characterized by a humble, cross-bearing, zealous, loving, truth seeking, and godly, praying people, who delight to be found in the prayer circle upon their knees, with uplifted eyes, hands and affections, praying in the Holy Ghost for sanctification and the salvation of souls, and who are not popular and full of sectarianism, and do not suppose that gain is godliness. Oh my Father! let my lot ever be cast with such a people as this; and may I so live that I may be an acceptable member of such a brotherhood. A religion that is cold, distant, inactive, worldly, selfish; that does not feel for a poor brother's wants, but is a money making religion, is a God-forsaken and heartless thing, and will ultimately land its possessor in irretrievable ruin.

Dec. 18th.

From Sr. A. J. Smith.

DEAR BRO. AND SIS. IN THE LORD:—I feel it a privilege to say a few words in favor of that heavenly land that we are about to possess, if we are faithful. How are we to be faithful? There is a class of [illegible] the winds blew, and the floods came and beat upon that house; and it fell not." If we are going to be heirs to that inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, we have got to take up our cross daily, and deny ourselves of every thing that is not for our real good, and for God's glory. We must put off the old man and all his deeds, and become a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Reader, let us stop and think for a moment; can we glorify God in satisfying our lusts? Brethren and sisters, let us be dead to sin, and live no longer therein; but have our minds renewed in the spirit of righteousness and true holiness. Let us take up our cross and deny self, and follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, and in a little while He whose right it is to reign, will come and deliver us from all the iniquities that are abroad in the land. It is high time for us to wake out of sleep; the night is far spent; the day is at hand; let us therefore put off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good, and seek those things which are above.

O solemn, dreadful, glorious news!
The Gentile "times" about to close,
And Zion's King appear!
Ah! then, what fearfulness shall seize
Those virgins who have lived at ease,
Nor thought the Bridegroom near.

Awake! arise! ye sleepers, all;
'Tis Mercy's latest gracious call;
Sinners, why will ye die?
And ye who have a name to live,
But daily do the Spirit grieve,
For pardon quickly fly!

The Lord is not far from every one of us; for in him we live, and move, and have our being. Even the very hairs of our heads are all numbered, and none of them will perish without his notice. If there are any that have wandered away from their Father's house, let them remember what the Word says: "Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings." "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous." "Wherefore lift up your hands which hang down, and the Lord will put a new song in your mouth, even praise to your God." Let us praise the Lord for his goodness, long-suffering and forbearance towards such unworthy worms as we are. Let us be faithful, and endure to the end; the same shall be saved. Glory to God and the Lamb forever! Amen.

Northfield, Mass.

From Sr. S. C. York.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I have started for the kingdom although I am quite young yet, I am glad I have started on this bright and heavenly journey, I am not too young to serve Jesus. I am thirteen. I love to hear of Jesus' coming to give his people rest, and it cheers my heart whilst here in this wicked world to think that if we are faithful a little while longer, soon we shall reign on the new earth; and that we shall meet Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who are now in their graves, asleep in Jesus, and other friends sleeping in Jesus. I have two brothers and one sister, and other friends, in their graves, and I hope to meet them in the kingdom of God soon. Brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may endure to the end and be saved at last. I hope that we shall all be faithful, and soon meet together in the kingdom of God.

Yarmouth, Me.

From Bro. M. Chandler.

BRO. GRANT:—I take this opportunity to let the friends who read the Crisis know my whereabouts and why I have changed my location. I have now been laboring in the western field (Wis., Ill., Ind., Iowa,) for about fourteen years, devoted the most of my time to traveling and preachnig the gospel of the kingdom of God at hand. I have spent the most of my time and my all in the cause. Some years I have averaged but about one day in three weeks with my family. I have traveled from two to three thousand miles, and preached from two to four hundred hours per year, beside baptizing and attending other duties in the church. I have been exposed to the cold blasts of our large prairies, and the storms which are very severe; to heat and cold; traveled all kinds of weather. My experience has brought on fever of different kinds; all together, with the care and anxiety I have had for the cause of God and my family, has broken my constitution.

But through the blessing of God I am still alive and trying in my weak way to preach the gospel, and give the last message to a perishing world. But when I was so low last summer, I made a trip to Wisconsin, stopping a few weeks, and my health improved very much. So I concluded it would be duty to change my location on account of my health. It was hard for me to leave Ill. and the cause, and to leave them without a preacher, but I felt duty called me so to do. I hope God will move some of his faithful servants' hearts to go to that part of his vineyard, some that will care for the cause. He has good children there. I pray they may be preserved blameless until the coming of Christ.

My address now is Seneca, Crawford Co., Wis. It has cost me all I had to get here, so we are very destitute, but I expect God will care for us. He has some good and faithful stewards, who have care for the watchmen. I am ready to go as God opens the way, and sound the alarm. Any wishing my labor will address me as above.

I feel to rejoice to think we are most home. Great Babylon will soon go down; words speak it, actions declare it, and I say amen; for when she goes down the saints will soon rise, and the shout that John heard that sounded like many waters, yea, like mighty thunderings, will be made. I want to be there. I want to see all the loved ones of earth, all together, and join in the shout of triumph with them.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 1st, 1860, Sister ELIZABETH DRAKE, aged twenty-two years, ten months and nine days, daughter of Bro. N. P. and Anna Drake, of Lawrence, Mass., after a long illness of consumption.

Sister Elizabeth embraced the Savior and was baptized in her fifteenth year, thus becoming a member of the church of God in this place, in which she continued a meek, lovely and exemplary christian till her death. She sleeps in Jesus, under God's covenant of a resurrection to life everlasting; and for the truth's sake let it here be remembered that this beloved stricken family are believers in the faith once delivered to the saints, as was also the deceased; they sorrow not as others who have no hope, but are comforted with the blessed hope of the resurrection at the coming of the great Life-giver, according to the unfailing word of the Lord as taught by Paul in Thess. 4: 13-18, from which a discourse was preached at the funeral, by Rev. John Couch, assisted by Timothy Cole. May the grace of our heavenly Father be with the afflicted parents and their surviving children, leading them on to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord, waiting for the glorious advent of Him who is the resurrection and the life.

Sister Elizabeth had a large circle of friends and acquaintance to mourn her loss; many tears of christian affection flowed freely in memory of her cherished name; but it is not the purpose of this notice to go beyond a brief statement of facts. She possessed in a high degree that ornament of a meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of the Lord of great price. Our lamented sister cherished above her life this blessed hope of the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; to her it seemed an impending event for which she needed to be habitually ready to pass from mortality to immortality, and to be ever with the Lord.

It is a most happy circumstance for us that the Scriptures are so full and explicit in relation to this blessed doctrine—the resurrection of the dead. What a world of awful and glorious meaning in that expression! What solemn and moving associations of thought come crowding into the mind when the words are read or heard—fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, children, brothers, sisters, friends and loved ones are sleeping in the dark, damp, silent, noisome grave, and we hear their welcome voices, and look upon their lovely forms no more while days and months and years roll on! Shall it be so forever? No, blessed be the great God, they shall live again. The mighty God hath spoken, and he will make his promise good. He who framed our bodies at the first, who gathered the particles of our wonderful frame, who arranged our muscles, bones, sinews and nerves, when as yet there were none of them,—He shall be able, when we and ours have decomposed in the tomb and wasted away in the dust of the earth, to call bone again to his fellow bone, and dust to kindred dust. He shall speak again, and the silence of the tomb shall echo to his voice, and the prisoners of darkness shall come forth; He shall speak, and the heavens and the earth shall quake, and from earth and ocean his chosen ones shall come to the brightness of immortality.

For the consolation of those of the Thessalonians whose hearts were bleeding with bereavement, the Apostle undertakes to dispel their anguish by dispelling their ignorance concerning those who are asleep in Jesus. Looking downward and pointing to earth's world-wide charnel house, he sees and traces from the rock-hewn tomb of Joseph of Arimathea a single brilliant ray of light and hope. Here was a torch for the hand of faith and a light for the eye of hope. If God had brought Christ from the dead, then those who are in Christ must also be brought. The living shall have no pre-eminence at last over those who had lived and died in the Lord. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven; a mighty shout shall proclaim his victorious power and majesty; the awful voice of the Archangel and the swelling echoes of the far resounding trump of God shall proclaim deliverance to the saints. What a scene ensues! Forth from their graves burst the unnumbered saints of God; earth and ocean team with an immortal host; each living saint feels a sudden thrill,—it is the power of an endless life,—and lo! this mortal puts on immortality; calmly and kindly does the Apostle turn and place this glowing page before the mourner's weeping eye, bidding them to comfort one another with these words.

Blessed words! consoling thought! they have been the oil of joy to mourning hearts for eighteen hundred years, and still they hush the low complaining sigh, still they dry the flowing tear, still they make the place of weeping a place of joy, and bind about the tomb the flowers of never fading hope. Still they illuminate the path that lies along the dark valley; still they strengthen those who stand beside the dying; still they comfort those who weep above the dead. Never shall the christian's eye cease to contemplate the picture; never shall his heart cease to thrill with the anticipation, and never shall his hope cease to embrace the promise, until the rent heavens disclose the majestic form of the descending king, and the quaking earth deliver up its sleeping captives at his call, and the saints from every age and clime unite in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

Lawrence, Dec. 24th, 1860.

Died, in Manchester, N. H., of measles and lung fever, Dec. 24th, 1860, NELLA ALFARATA, only child of John C. and Laura M. Moulton, aged six years and twenty-seven days.

The child generally was afraid of death, and would often say to her mother that she did not want to die and be put in the ground. But about four weeks before she died, her mother heard her talking in an adjoining room, and stepping to the door said, "What did you say, Nettie?" "I was not talking to you, mother; I was talking to God." Among other things which her mother heard her say was, (with her mother's Bible open before her, and her eyes turned upward toward heaven),—"If you want me to die, God, I will!" After this, she was never heard to express any fear of death. She would often say she loved Jesus because he loved little children. One Sabbath last summer her father and mother were with her in the cemetery, and their attention was directed to some small graves where children were buried, and her mother told her that the children there buried would be raised again from the dead; when Nellie replied;—"Jesus is good, because he is going to take up the children from the grave." She was remarkably affectionate for the last hour or two before she died, and would often cast a heavenly smile on all around her, so much so that it was a subject of frequent remark at the time.

A few minutes before she died, while her hands and arms were cold with approaching death, she raised them to her mother's neck, drew down her face and kissed her; and then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus without the least struggle or emotion. Thus we could comfort the mourning friends with the blessed hope that little Nellie will live again.

T. M. PREBLE.

Married.

On the 25th of Dec., 1860, by Eld. J. T. Ongley, in Ripley, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Mr. JOSEPH MILLER, of North Buffalo, N. Y., and Miss LOIS A. AUSTIN, of Northville, Erie Co., Pa.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 13th ult]

CHINA.

The allied army commences its advance on Pekin on the 6th, and an earth work near that city was taken the same day. The summer palace of the Emperor was taken and completely sacked, affording immense spoils. The chief share of the plunder appears to have fallen to the French. A quantity of treasure which was taken is to be divided between both the French and English troops. Some of the privates are said to have sold their shares for about 30,000 francs each. The entire British share, including both treasure and private property, is estimated at about 90,000.

The Tartar army is still in the field, though the Emperor has fled to Tartary.

ONE DAY LATER.

A despatch from Pekin via St. Petersburg, says that peace has been concluded with China, and that the Emperor had returned.

The attempted assassination of Col. Dunn of the Sicilian army had given rise to the report that Garibaldi had been assassinated.

Among the passengers by the Canada is the French pastor, Father Chiniquy.

It was stated that 2000 Pontifical troops were about to march against the town of Ponteronvo, to overthrow the provisional government established there.

It is asserted that England and France have certainly insisted on Francis II.'s departure from Gaeta, to prevent a useless effusion of blood.

The bombardment of Gaeta was again suspended on the 9th and not resumed.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The marriage of the Princess Alice with Prince Louis of Hesse Darmstadt will not take place until 1862, when the second daughter of Her Majesty will have attained the age of nineteen.

FRANCE.

It is reported that M. Fould, the Ex-Minister, is going to Italy on a secret mission.

There is also a rumor that the Emperor wishes to bring the Villafranca scheme before a Congress, pointing out the anarchy in the Two Sicilies, an anarchy which the Paris letter of the Daily News says is probably purposely exaggerated, and the courageous resistance of Francis II. as evidence that Italian unity is a chimera.

AUSTRIA.

VIENNA, Dec. 14. The Ostdeutschen Post, in a leading article says, the accumulation of arms and ammunition in Moldavia and Wallachia and the organization of foreign legions in Italy are to be attributed to an extensive scheme which partly aims at the separation of these provinces from the Porte, and partly at a rising of several other nationalities—not only a Hungarian, but also a Polish legion has been organized. In view of this state of things, Russia has dispatched a threatening declaration to Prince Couza, and has concentrated 12,000 men in Bessarabia.

The Patrie and Opinion Nationale both state that Garibaldi is preparing to take the field in the spring. Several of his old generals have been to Caprera to confer with him, and he is said to have written a letter to M. Tacchi, begging him and M. Bertani to collect money and arms, and to have a thousand gallant men ready to follow him on the 1st of March. The Turin papers publish the following proclamation, bearing the signature of Garibaldi, and dated November 28:

ITALY AND VICTOR EMMANUEL.

That programme the people of Italy must not swerve from. Victor Emmanuel alone is indispensable in Italy. All the men of our peninsula must rally round him. Whether his minister's name be Cavour or Cattaneo, matters little, though the second is better than the first. What is important, and what all Italians must insist on is, that on the 5th of March, 1861, Victor Emmanuel should be at the head of 500,000 soldiers.

G. GARIBALDI.

The Turin correspondent of the Paris Debats says General Benedek has informed his troops that they must be prepared for war in the spring, and that it is at Mantua he means to crush Garibaldi. The Turin Gazette,—a very moderate journal,—likewise says that the Venetian question must be settled; and no ministry could stand for a single day which gave up Venice.

ROME, Dec. 15. The Piedmontese have occupied Ponto Corvo since the 11th inst. Some reactionary movements have taken place at Cagli and Gubbio. The King of Naples has issued a manifesto, calling upon the Neapolitans to make a last effort to preserve their nationality. He guarantees to maintain their liberties, and to [illegible] parliaments to the Two Sicilies.

DOMESTIC.

Charleston, Dec. 27.—Fort Moultrie was evacuated last night and the guns spiked.

The Fort is now being demolished by fire. Only four soldiers were left in charge.

The troops have all been conveyed to Fort Sumpter. There is intense excitement.

Charleston, Dec. 27.—Later intelligence from Fort Moultrie represent that only the gun carriages have been burnt. It is reported that a train has been laid below the fort to blow it up. The excitement and indignation is increasing.

Major Anderson states that he evacuated Fort Moultrie to allay the discussion about that post, and at the same time strengthen his own position.

Charleston, Dec 27.—1 P. M. Capt. Foster, with a small force remains in Fort Moultrie. Several military companies are ordered out. A collision is expected.

Charleston, Dec. 27—2 P. M. The military are ordered out to protect the magazines and arsenals in this locality. It is reported that military companies in the interior are on their way here. The agent of the Associated Press has had an interview with Capt. Foster, now in command at Fort Moultrie, who says that Major Anderson has acted on his own responsibility. Fort Moultrie has not been set fire to, and Capt. Foster is still in command, with a few regulars.

Washington, Dec. 27.—The administration having received a dispatch relative to Major Anderson's movements, a cabinet meeting was called, which was in session several hours, and then adjourned until 8 o'clock to-night.

New York, Dec. 28.—It is reported that the secessionists in Charleston have taken possession of the telegraph offices, and will not allow any dispatches to be sent North until satisfactorily passing their surveillance.

The Tribune Washington correspondent says that the Charleston populace have seized the public property to retaliate upon the movement of Maj. Anderson, and the Cabinet consultation was upon that and other points connected with the policy to be pursued.

Dec. 20.—The Washington correspondent of the Herald says that Secretary Floyd stated in writing to the President, that unless Major Anderson was withdrawn he should resign. The President declined to withdraw Major Anderson, and the Secretary resigned.

It is generally believed that Gen. Scott submitted to the President several days since plans for the blockade of Charleston and for strongly reinforcing all Southern garrisons, and suggesting other military preparations which, it is said, were not received favorably.

Washington, Saturday evening, Dec. 29.—The Cabinet refused, to-day, after a session of many hours, to order Major Anderson back to Fort Moultrie, as demanded by the Commissioners from South Carolina.

Secretaries Thompson, of the Interior, and Thomas, of the Treasury, threaten to withdraw at once.

Exciting times are at hand.

The Cabinet broke up to-night, after a five hours' session, without coming to any conclusion relative to the disposition of the troops at Charleston. The impression prevailed that a conflict was inevitable.

A dispatch received to-night by a member of the Cabinet says that troops are pouring into Charleston from all directions

The opinion was expressed by a prominent member of the Cabinet to-night to me that war is begun. Georgia troops, at last accounts, were coming in to join the South Carolina forces.

Troy, N. Y., 31.—Gen. Wool has written a letter favoring the putting down of rebellion.

He declares that if Fort Sumpter is surrendered to the secessionists in twenty days twenty thousand men will be ready to take vengeance on all who betray the Union.

Washington. Dec. 31.—Hostilities have probably been commenced at Charleston by distributing the arms contained in the United States Arsenal to the South Carolina troops, and bombarding Fort Sumpter, as the Commissioners feel their dignity insulted, and have telegraphed home to that effect, by the refusal of the President to degrade Major Anderson.

Letters have been received at Washington from Democratic politicians throughout the country, commending the stand taken by Major Anderson at Charleston. These communications report that he is universally sustained.

Of the hundreds of South Carolina Postmasters only twelve have thus far resigned.

No mail contractors in South Carolina have abandoned their contracts on account of the attitude of the State. They still recognize the Federal Government.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

Notice.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting held at New Durham Ridge, N. H., commencing Jan. 18th, at two o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. All that love our Lord in sincerity and truth are invited to attend and help in the good cause. Come, brethren and sisters, make one more effort to do good and honor God in this place Come in a condition to preach, pray, exhort and sing, and all in the Spirit.

JOHN BILLINGS.

Advent Conference at Lee, N. H.

This meeting will commence Jan. 19th, 1861, in the Union meeting-house, at 1 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the two following Sundays. Our brethren there extend a cordial invitation to the saints in all the region to come to the meeting ready to help in the work. Leave all, and come together in the name of the Lord, and exhort one another. The day of God is approaching.

The object of this meeting is, by the preaching of the life-giving word, to arouse, awaken and reclaim the wayward and save the sinner. We hope to have one of the Lord's free meetings, where the Spirit and word may have free course and be glorified. Those coming from the East or West by first train will find a stage at New Market Junction to bring them to the meeting. All will be provided for. Brn. D. Churchill, Wm. H. Mitchell and others, as the Lord will, may be expected to preach the word.

L. BOUTELL.

Shelburne Falls.

There are a few here who look for eternal life through Jesus at his coming. Our village is nine miles west of Greenfield, on the line of the Troy and Greenfield R. R., and we ought to have some preaching here. Will not some of the Lord's servants come this way? In behalf of the Committee,

O. SHEPARD, Cor. Sec.

Life of Hiram Munger.

A second edition of the above work is now in the hands of the printer, and will be ready about the first of the new year. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, containing some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; besides a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts. Our friends will please send in their orders soon, as we anticipate a rapid sale of the book.

Change of Time for Yarmouth Meeting.

The brethren and sisters in this place, feeling anxious to make extra efforts to save souls and help along the cause of the Lord in this vicinity, propose having a protracted meeting in "Institute Hall," commencing Jan. 18th, 1861, at 6 1-2 o'clock in the evening, and continuing as long as may be thought best. Brethren O. R. Fassett, and other ministering brethren are expected to be present to preach the word; and we cordially invite brethren and sisters generally, to come to the meeting to labor together for the good of souls. We shall do what we can to take care of all who come. In behalf of all interested,

R. R. YORK.

Lift your Head, Brother Pilgrim.

[illegible]

Lift your head, brother pilgrim, the day draweth near
When the heavens will open and Jesus appear,
With millions of angels in glory will come
To set up his kingdom and take us all home.

CHORUS.

Soon from all sorrow the saints shall be free,
Immortal in beauty our King we shall see.

Hark! the watchmen are sounding their notes loud and clear,
The virgins to comfort that Jesus is near;
And soon will descend and the trumpet shall sound
To awake all the nations that sleep under ground.

Old Babylon is trembling and wailing full sore,
Her garments are reeking with saints' purple gore,
The smoke of her torment we soon shall behold,
As John in his vision hath clearly foretold.

Soon her Kings and her nobles, alas! loud will cry,
As the smoke of her burning ascendeth on high;
She'll sink as the millstone was cast in the sea,
With might by the angels, and never more be.

The highlands of Eden by faith we behold,
The bright burnished city of gems and pure gold;
There the once weeping pilgrims forever are blest,
With the Savior and brethren eternally rest.

Spread of Pre-Millennialism.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

In 1851, the Congregationalist, the organ of a very respectable religious body, informed its readers that "in various ways the leaven of Millenarianism is working in the community, some in nearly all denominations being its advocates." Truly said! A great movement, significant, stirring, and onward, is progressing in this direction. The following facts and figures speak for themselves. Will Christian men ponder them well, and tell us what they mean?

The first pre-millennial work written and printed in America was put forth by Samuel Hutchinson, of Boston, in 1667. About ten other works of this kind appeared in New England in the seventeenth century. Of thirty Christian writers in the same century, who either issued prophetical works or alluded to prophecy, eight of the number taught the pre-millennial advent and personal reign, while the writings of a majority of the remaining twenty-two exhibit a tendency to our view. In the eighteenth century the number of pre-millennial works published in this country amounted to over twenty-five, being written by about twenty different authors of this view. In the year 1800, Benjamin Farnham published a clear little work of this character, of one hundred and fifty-five pages, at East Windsor, Ct. Many similar productions soon after appeared, until 1833, when William Miller's first work a pamphlet of sixty-four pages, was printed at Brandon, Vt. His lectures on Christ's coming in 1843, were first put forth in volume in 1836. He was the author of about sixteen pre-millennial works, large and small.

Within the last two hundred years, since 1660, there have been published in America over seven hundred books, pamphlets, and treatises of a distinctive prophetical character, five hundred and fifty of which bear date in the present century, showing a vast increase in the study of prophecy and a corresponding increase of prophetical works within the past sixty years. Of the total number since 1660, a decided majority are of the premillennial class, while of the five hundred and fifty printed since 1800 over two hundred are issued by the denomination of Pre-millennial Adventists. Of these, over half a million have been scattered far and wide within the past twenty-five years, some reaching a circulation variously from five thousand to eight thousand printed copies.

The first religious newspaper ever published in the world, viz., the Herald of Gospel Liberty, by Rev. Elias Smith, a Christian Baptist minister, at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1808, advocated pre-millennialism, and nearly every other distinctive view now held by the Adventists in relation to our Lord's soon coming. The second journal of this kind was published by John Thomas, M. D., in 1834. The third was established by Rev. Joshua V. Himes, in 1840. The two papers last mentioned still exist, and are devoted to the advocacy of the doctrines in question. No less than sixteen different prophetical sheets have been started within the past quarter of a century, in advocacy of the pre-millennial and speedy coming of Christ, whose period of existence has varied from one to twenty years. Eight or nine are still published, whose average weekly, monthly, and quarterly issues form a circulation of about twenty thousand copies. It is computed that since the year 1834 the number of Adventist and prophetical sheets published and circulated in America is not less than fifteen millions; probably double this amount.

Such is the extraordinary promulgation through the agency of the press, of the doctrine of our Lord's pre-millennial, personal coming and glorious reign on the renewed earth. The result is a vast increase in numbers of the soon expectants of his kingdom, both among the ministry and laity. Public writers in 1848 estimated the number of ministers then preaching these doctrines in America, at three hundred. Recent statistics show twice this number among the Adventists alone, whose ministry has now reached six hundred. This ministerial force exceeds that of at least sixteen other minor evangelical sects noticed by Dr. Baird in his work, Religion in America, while by a strange omission the Adventists are passed unnoticed, though found in nineteen different States, Canada and Nova Scotia. The number of believers of this persuasion is correctly estimated at not less than fifty-four thousand, while their congregations amount to over one hundred and fifty thousand.

The number of pre-millennialists among the ministry and laity of the various churches is unknown, though it is undoubtedly very great, and on a rapid increase. They are found among all Protestant denominations, and among Roman Catholics. The cry, "Behold, He cometh!" is destined soon to be the grand watch-cry of the church of God. Happy are those who faithfully look, wait, and watch for the coming Lord. He is preparing a people for his kingdom, and will ere long be manifested to the everlasting joy of all who love his appearing. Amen.—Voice of the Prophets.

Dansville, N. Y.

Condition of the Papacy.

Never did the Papacy appear more undignified than at the present moment. The cloud which was about to burst was clearly foreseen, when M. About's celebrated pamphlet appeared on the day the Emperor left Paris on his way to Genoa. Every spiritual and every temporal weapon within reach of the Pope has been successfully brandished in the face of Europe. Excommunications have been fulminated from the Vatican, but in such a form as to show that they are spent thunder. The Pope was evidently afraid of the recoil of his own artillery, and feels that the days when Papal interdicts could avail to secure obedience, have passed away with the darkness of mediæval superstition. Every effort within reach of the College of Jesuits has been made to avert the impending castastrophe. The superstition of the Empress of the French has been worked upon to control her Imperial husband, and something has perhaps been done through this instrumentality, to manacle the man of whom the Romish Church still boasts as her "eldest son." In the British Parliament, Sir George Bower, impelled by the zeal of a pervert, and his new decorations, has done all he could to work upon the fears of the British Government, aided by Messrs. Hennessy, Maguire, and other emissaries whom the Papal hierarchy contrive to return to the House of Commons.

Of the greatness of the peril of the Pope, we might the better judge from the evident dismay of his adherents. The Pope's prelates in Ireland, not satisfied with mere bluster, proceeded to beat the drum ecclesiastic as the recruiting sergeants of the Pope's Brigade. But who shall write the history of that brigade, which, chiefly through mismanagement of the Pope's officers, has melted away without striking a blow for the Holy Father, with the exception of the small companies in the garrison of Spoleto, who appear to have made a gallant stand against the superior Sardinian forces, before they surrendered?

But every effort to defend the Pope has been unavailiing. Austria was the main prop of the unhallowed tyranny of the Papacy. Metternich long ago said, "Rome rests upon Austria, and Austria rests upon Rome." The hopes of assistance from Austria perished on the fields of Magenta and Solferino, and Austria owed much of her weakness to the Concordat forced on the weakness and bigotry of the youthful Emperor by his mother, who is one of the coheiresses of our second James, and seems to have inherited the abject spirit of submission to Rome which cost him the crown of Britain. It ought not to pass without notice, that the calamities now falling on the Pope, date nearly from the time when Pio Nono consummated the darling project of the Papacy, by decreeing the immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin, and giving divine honors to her as the Queen of Heaven. Whoever has traveled through Italy, or even in southern climes, within the last five years, must have remembered the great doings in honor of the Virgin. How, for example, cathedrals and churches in all the Italian towns and villages were all in a blaze to celebrate the nativity of the Virgin; with what pomp did the Pope inaugurate her new statue in the Pizza di Spagna at Rome, in October, 1857; and how the Papacy was once more committed to the guardianship of the Queen of Heaven. When we remember what calamities have followed the bestowal of these divine honors, we can hardly smile at the infatuation of those votaries of Rome, who, in their ignorance, have scarcely refrained from charging the Holy Virgin with ingratitude. A more enlightened observation may suggest the inquiry whether these acts of idolatry, or rather the decree of the Pope, did not fill up the measure of Papal iniquity, and usher in the time when we are told "that ten horns shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."

Assuredly, the loss of Rome's temporalities is imminent, when we see province after province throwing off the hated yoke, and the flag of the conquerors floating almost within sight of the Quirinal. Worse than all, there is no sympathy for the Pope. "The eldest son of the Papal" occupies Rome, and has planted a French flag within a circuit of five miles round the Vatican. But what avails such protection? It has been well compared to the protection given to the parrot when hung up in an iron cage to save it from the claws of Grimalkin. It is obviously for his own purposes, and not for the sake of the Pope, that Napoleon thus proclaims himself the master of Rome. The march of the Sardinian armies into the Papal dominions has sealed the fate of the Pope's mercenaries, not without bringing some discredit on General Lamoriciere, who is no friend of the Emperor.

What is to be the final issue of the Italian drama it would be presumptuous confidently to predict. But knowing, as we do, that Babylon is foredoomed, we cannot but look with intense interest to the events which seem to be hastening forward the time when the Romish apostasy shall be cast down, and He shall come whose right it is to reign.—London Record.

For the Crisis.

To my Mother.

BY MISS S. F. Y.

I think of thee, my mother,
At evening's holy hours,
When darkness dims the woodland,
And the night winds shut the flowers.

I think of thee at morning,
When the heart goes up in prayer,
And while I bow to worship,
Thou art always with me there.

Though absent from thee, mother,
From those I hold most dear,
Yet forms of loved ones hover
Around me even here.

My mother, be thou ever
My guardian angel still,
And teach my erring nature
To do my Maker's will.

Modern Unbelief of the Resurrection.

BY REV. J. PANTON HAM, ENGLAND.

(Concluded.)

But to proceed. Does popular Christianity, then, disbelieve any kind of resurrection? By no means. It believes that there will be a resurrection of the body. The same body? we ask. We would remind those who may be disposed to answer in the affirmative, of their notions of this same body—how they are accustomed to describe it now, as the soul's prison house, the soul's entombment, and so forth. Surely the resurrection of the same body cannot be a thing to be desired! No doubt many will be ready to respond, the body which shall rise again shall be a suitable tenement for the soul, one that shall be adequate to its vast capacities and purposes, and which is called therefore, "a spiritual body." But pause—this is not the same body, the body which the soul once inhabited, but another body, with different attributes and functions, how then can you say that the body rises again? According to this theory, the former body does not rise again, but a new body is created by this so-called resurrection, or rising again. Such a theology, therefore, logically denies also its own dogma of the resurrection of the body. To get off the Scylla of its own contemptuousness with regard to the body, it gets into the Charybdis of denying the resurrection of the body altogether!

But some will forget their contemptuous mode of speaking of the body when, for orthodoxy's sake, they look forward to the resurrection of the body, and therefore we must use another argument with such persons. These, despite all inconsistencies, and physical impossibilities, will hold on to the creed that the same body rises again in the resurrection. We must, therefore, remind these believers that the body, as a separate part of the man, has no inherent life; it has never lived by itself, and therefore cannot die by itself, nor rise again by itself. If any should say, the body possessed vegetative life, and it is this vegetative life which is taken away by death and restored by resurrection; we reply by another question—has the body vegetative life apart from the soul? The proof that it has not, is furnished by the fact, that as soon as the soul, so called, is separated from it, all its vegetative functions cease, and the process of decomposition commences. The theory, therefore, again fails before the light of reason and common sense.

And that it fails before Scripture is most evident, for the apostle Paul, who has written with great particularity on the subject of the resurrection, in his first epistle to the Corinthians, distinctly affirms, that the same body or material organism is not raised again in the resurrection, but another and physically different body. "Thou sowest not that body which shall be," he writes, when thou sowest wheat or any other grain. The body which germinates is the stately plant. The analogy, of course, is not perfect, nor should it be expected to be, nevertheless, it supplies the apostle's purpose, which was merely to show that another body or organism is bestowed in the resurrection, and not the same body. Hence he adds, "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." Here then is plain, apostolical authority to support the deductions of reason that, the same body does not rise from the dead, and therefore, the theology that teaches that the soul is the human being, and this never dies, is left without any doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. As we have seen, the doctrine of the resurrection of the body is contrary to sound reason and Scripture revelation. The Bible nowhere speaks of the resurrection of the body, but uniformly of the resurrection of the dead. We reiterate, therefore, our charges against the theology of the extant churches, that they deny the great christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and are logically left without any doctrine of resurrection at all. To them, therefore, Paul's query has a special appropriateness, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?

Modern christendom disbelieves the christian doctrine of resurrection, for the same reason that the Sadducean Agrippa, and the Pagan Festus disbelieved it,—that is, because they cannot understand it. The teachers of this doctrine now, like Paul, are thought to be beside themselves. Christian philosophy of the nineteenth century, rejects the total decease of the conscious being in death, because it cannot square such a doctrine with its vague notions of personal identity. And Christian sentimentality rejects it, for the very self-sufficient reason, that it does not like it. This latter prefers the dreams of poets and painters, to the deliverances of prophets and apostles. It is useless to argue against a faith which is begotten of the fancy, and is the mere foster-child of the feelings. But of our philosophical friends we would ask, Is your philosophy of identity so definitely shaped to your own perception, that you can venture to say that our interpretation of death and resurrection denies the preservation of personal identity in the being which dies and rises again? Let our objectors publish their philosophy of personal identity, and furnish irresistible evidence of the proposition that God cannot extinguish consciousness, and rekindle the identical consciousness again at his pleasure. Until this proposition be proved, the hacknied objection falls to the ground. Will our objectors deny that God first created a self-conscious, thinking being from nothing? He who could say, Come, ye children of men from the nothingness of the past, can surely say, Return ye children of men to your original nothingness, and, Come again ye children of men. A hundred years ago, both writer and reader had neither consciousness nor existence; that Power, then, which has given both can surely take them away, and restore the identical gift again. Away with the flimsy objection about personal identity. Away with the impertinence which balances man's ignorance against the wisdom and power of the Almighty. If our inability to comprehend a profound mystery is to be the reason for repudiating that mystery, then consistency ought to oblige us to a universal scepticism, for, as one has well said, "Everything is mysterious, or nothing is mysterious."

To restore the christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead to the modern creed, it is first of all necessary to accept the Scripture theology of the constitution of man as a being, in no sense endowed with immortality or deathlessness, but dependent on organization for existence and all the functions of an intellectual, moral, and emotional nature. Proud man must bow his head in humility before the universal challenge, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" He must acquiesce in the Scripture philosophy, which teaches that "the dead know not anything, neither any that go down into silence;" that "the dead praise not the Lord;" that "in death there is no remembrance" of Him—"no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave" whither we are going. He must understand better that memorable deprecation by David and David's Lord, when he said, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hades, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." And while he needs more knowledge and humility in reference to this terrible fact of death—the wages of sin—he must cherish more faith in the word and power of God, by which the faithful are assured that, though, like their Lord, they die, yet they shall live again, when he, "the Resurrection and the Life," and the Holder of "the keys of hades and death," comes "the second time for salvation."—Examiner.

Hurried Devotions.

Probably, many of us would be discomposed by an arithmetical estimate of our communion with God. It might reveal to us the secret of much of our apathy in prayer, because it might disclose how little we desire to be alone with God. We might learn from such a computation, that Augustine's idea of prayer, as "the measure of love," is not very flattering to us. We do not grudge time given to a privilege which we love.

Why should we expect to enjoy a duty which we have no time to enjoy? Do we enjoy anything which we do in a hurry? Enjoyment pre-supposes something of mental leisure. How often do we say of a pleasure, "I wanted more time to enjoy it to my heart's content." But of all employments, none could be more dependent on "time for it," than stated prayer.

Fugitive acts of devotion, to be of high value, must be sustained by other approaches to God, deliberate, premeditated, regular, which shall be to those acts like the abutments of a suspension bridge to the arch that spans the stream. It will never do to be in desperate haste in laying such foundations. This thoughtful duty, this spiritual privilege, this foretaste of uncorporeal life, this communion with an unseen Friend,—can you expect to enjoy it as you would a repartee or dance?

In the royal gallery at Dresden, may be often seen a group of connoisseurs, who sit for hours before a single painting. They walk around those halls and corridors, whose walls are so eloquent with the triumphs of Art, and they come back and pause again before that one masterpiece. They go away, and return the next day, and again the first and last object which charms their eye, is that canvass on which Genius has pictured more of beauty than on any other in the world. Weeks are spent every year in the study of that one work of Raphael. Lovers of art cannot enjoy it to the full, till they have made it their own by prolonged communion with its matchless forms. Says one of its admirers: "I could spend an hour every day for years, upon that assemblage of human, and angelic, and divine ideas, and on the last day of the year discover some new beauty and a new joy."

I have seen men standing in the street before an engraving of that gem of the Dresden gallery, a longer time than a good man will sometimes devote to his evening prayer. Yet, what thoughts, what ideals of grace, can Genius express in a painting, demanding time for their appreciation and enjoyment, like those great thoughts of God, of heaven, of Eternity, which the soul needs to conceive vividly, in order to know the blessedness of prayer? What conceptions can art imagine of the "Divine Child," which can equal in spirituality, the thoughts which one needs to entertain of Christ, in the "prayer of faith?" We cannot hope, commonly, to spring into possession of such thoughts, in the twinkling of an eye.—The Still Hour.

The Golden Rule.

This golden lesson, short and plain,
Give not the mind or memory pain,
And every conscience must approve
This universal law of love.

"And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Luke 6: 31. The principle here laid down by the Savior, is, by way of convenience, sometimes called the "golden rule." And well it may be. Says Jesus, "This is the law and the prophets." Here is the substance of our duty to our neighbor.

"Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord." Lev. 18: 18. "And let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart."

"O may it be our noble aim
To elevate our brother—man;
Onward to speed the glorious work
Which Christ, our Lord, began."

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

This rule is to be lived out in all our intercourse with all men, at all times, under all circumstances, with the saint and the sinner, friend and neighbor. "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the God of Israel."

The Golden rule embraces a spirit of forgiveness. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Matt. 6: 14, 15.

The spirit of the golden rule leads us to labor also for the salvation of such as may err from the truth, or be overtaken in a fault. "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5: 19, 20.

"Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Gal. 5: 1. Important injunction; "Considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

"Give me to feel my brother's woe,
And lightly him condemn,
If from the channel he should go,
As we the current stem;
I'll kindly whisper that he must
The shoals and breakers flee;
And when I need it, I would trust
He'll do the same by me."

O! for more of this charity which suffereth long, and is kind; that seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.

"Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 9–10.

"Let brotherly love continue. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." 1 Pet. 8, 8. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Ps. 83: 1. For this sweet union the Savior prayed. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Jonn 17: 21.

This blessed Golden Rule of our Savior, exemplified in every-day life, in thought, word and deed, removes all selfishness, all slavery, all oppression, the spirit of caste, all hatred, variances, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, and causeth the earth to blossom as the rose. "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

"This is the sum of every part,
To love our God with all our heart;
That we should love our neighbor too,
And what we wish from him, should do.

'Tis short and sweet, and good and plain,
Easy to learn and to retain;
May grace divine our souls renew,
And 't will be sweet to practice too."

—Golden Rule.

☞ A good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body: it preserves a constant ease and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions which can possibly befall us.

He has "Done Much for Me."

"Freely ye have received, freely give," is the injunction of the Savior to his disciples, and when christians have right ideas of their indebtedness to Christ, and of the manifold favors received from him, they cannot be niggardly or covetous.

A missionary laboring among the Caffres, was anxious to raise money for an important object; but the church which he had formed was so small and the members of it so very poor, that he resolved not to ask them to give even a penny. This was a grief to the good man; but as many of them were widows, as they earned the little money they had by carrying firewood to a town several miles off, and as he believed they were doing all they possibly could for the cause of Christ, he felt quite sure that he should not be right if he asked them to do more.

One day he told a native preacher that he was going to plead for the object with the white people in Graham's Town. Immediately the teacher said,

"Why don't you speak to us and ask us to do something?"

The missionary told him his reason, and said, "I really think you are not able to do more in raising money than you now do. But I wish you would feel more, and pray more."

He answered, "The Lord may put it into our hearts to try and do more."

The missionary was pleased, and called the people together. Still he scarcely expected any money, for he could not see where it could come from. But to his great surprise and delight, they came forward and subscribed about £14! Among those who gave there was a poor widow who had the very spirit of her whom the great Savior commended when he saw her cast her two mites into the treasury. This good woman came up to him with fifteen shillings in her hand. The missionary was almost afraid to take it, and told her that it was too much.

"But," he writes, "her reply silenced me: 'The Lord,' she said, 'has done much for me.'"

A short time afterwards she brought to him five shillings more, and told him that her heart would not be still until she made up the pound.

Going to Church.

"Mother, I don't want to go to church." The speaker, a little bright-eyed boy, looked up into his mother's face with evident doubt as to the propriety of saying what he had said. His mother, who had often heard the same remonstrance, sat down and drew him to her knee, saying,—"Charley, father and I tell you that it is best for you. Don't you think we know best?" Charley made a petulant reply, although obliged to go, yet went in a very unfavorable mood.

Years passed away. Charley had lived to be a man, and had long gladdened his mother's heart by living the life of a christian. Children growing up around him, were taught to tread the path in which he had been led before. One Sabbath, a friend spending the day with him, asked: —"Why do you endeavor to get all your children to church, whether they wish to go or not? You know that many do not approve of such a course." Turning to his friend, he replied,—"Because I owe it to my mother that I was saved from infidelity by the respect for the christian religion instilled into my heart when she sent me constantly to church."

The Unlucky Throw.

When I was a boy, like most other boys, I often did idle and foolish things. One day, for instance, as I was walking up street, I saw a broken china tea-cup in the road. Picking it up, instead of letting it alone, as I ought to have done, I began to toss it in the air. This I did several times, trying to throw it higher with each new effort.

At last, thinking to toss it as high as the cornices of the houses, I threw it with great energy. Alas for me! My arm struck my side, and the unlucky piece of china went crashing through the window of a dwelling-house.

Without thinking of my duty, I took counsel of my fears only, and ran home as fast as my feet could carry me. Nor did I either pause or look back until I turned a corner.

Shortly after this misfortune the son of the man whose window I had broken came home from play. Seeing the window broken, he stood outside with his hands in his pockets looking at it. A man passing said: "Your father will think you broke that window, my little fellow, and he'll tickle your back with a raw hide."

"No he won't," said the boy calmly, "for I shall tell him I didn't do it."

"You may tell him so, but will he believe you?" rejoined the man.

"To be sure he will. He always believes what I say!"

That was nobly said, and it was just so. That boy wore a diamond called truth on his heart, and his father knew that he could safely trust him.

Where was I? Well, I sneaked home, feeling that I had done a mean act in not going right to the owner of the house and confessing my misfortune.

For several days I carried my secret with me. It was like wearing a belt of burrs round my waist. It pained me badly. I was in torments, too, lest somebody had seen me and should, after all, tell my father.

At last my secret was dragged out. A person who knew me had seen me break the window and had told the owner of the house about me. That gentleman knew my father, and the first time he saw him told him what I had done. My father paid for setting a new square of glass, and on his return home called me to his side.

His face wore a stern expression. I trembled and blushed like a culprit, for I guessed he had found me out. Looking right in my eye, he said:—

"Peter, did you break Mr. Comerford's window a few days ago?"

"Yes, sir," I replied, holding down my head.

"What did you do that for?" asked my father, with less sternness in his manner.

The worst of my load was now gone. That secret mill-stone which, had been crushing me was now rolled off, and I told my father all about the affair.

THE CRISIS.

[illegible]

Lift your Head, Brother Pilgrim.

BY [illegible] BREWER.

Lift your head, brother pilgrim, the day draweth near
When the heavens will open and Jesus appear,
With millions of angels in glory will come
To set up his kingdom and take us all home.

CHORUS.

Soon from all sorrow the saints shall be free,
Immortal in beauty our King we shall see.

Hark! the watchmen are sounding their notes loud and clear,
The virgins to comfort that Jesus is near;
And soon will descend and the trumpet shall sound
To awake all the nations that sleep under ground.

Old Babylon is trembling and wailing full sore,
Her garments are reeking with saints' purple gore,
The smoke of her torment we soon shall behold,
As John in his vision hath clearly foretold.

Soon her Kings and her nobles, alas! loud will cry,
As the smoke of her burning ascendeth on high;
She'll sink as the millstone was cast in the sea
With might by the angels, and never more be.

The highlands of Eden by faith we behold,
The bright burnished city of gems and pure gold;
There the once weeping pilgrims forever are blest,
With the Savior and brethren eternally rest.

Spread of Pre-Millennialism.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

In 1851, the Congregationalist, the organ of a very respectable religious body, informed its readers that "in various ways the leaven of Millenarianism is working in the community, some in nearly all denominations being its advocates." Truly said! A great movement, significant, stirring, and onward, is progressing in this direction. The following facts and figures speak for themselves. Will Christian men ponder them well, and tell us what they mean?

The first pre-millennial work written and printed in America was put forth by Samuel Hutchinson, of Boston, in 1667. About ten other works of this kind appeared in New England in the seventeenth century. Of thirty Christian writers in the same century, who either issued prophetical works or alluded to prophecy, eight of the number taught the pre-millennial advent and personal reign, while the writings of a majority of the remaining twenty-two exhibit a tendency to our view. In the eighteenth century the number of pre-millennial works published in this country amounted to over twenty-five, being written by about twenty different authors of this view. In the year 1800, Benjamin Farnham published a clear little work of this character, of one hundred and fifty-five pages, at East Windsor, Ct. Many similar productions soon after appeared, until 1833, when William Miller's first work a pamphlet of sixty-four pages, was printed at Brandon, Vt. His lectures on Christ's coming in 1843, were first put forth in volume in 1836. He was the author of about sixteen pre-millennial works, large and small.

Within the last two hundred years, since 1660, there have been published in America over seven hundred books, pamphlets, and treatises of a distinctive prophetical character, five humdred and fifty of which bear date in the present century, showing a vast increase in the study of prophecy and a corresponding increase of prophetical works within the past sixty years. Of the total number since 1660, a decided majority are of the premillennial class, while of the five hundred and fifty printed since 1800 over two hundred are issued by the denomination of Pre-millennial Adventists. Of these, over half a million have been scattered far and wide within the past twenty-five years, some reaching a circulation variously from five thousand to eight thousand printed copies.

The first religious newspaper ever published in the world, viz., the Herald of Gospel Liberty, by Rev. Elias Smith, a Christian Baptist minister, at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1808, advocated pre-millennialism, and nearly every other distinctive view now held by the Adventists in relation to our Lord's soon coming. The second journal of this kind was published by John Thomas, M. D., in 1834. The third was established by Rev. Joshua V. Himes, in 1840. The two papers last mentioned still exist, and are devoted to the advocacy of the doctrines in question. No less than sixteen different prophetical sheets have been started within the past quarter of a century, in advocacy of the pre-millennial and speedy coming of Christ, whose period of existence has varied from one to twenty years. Eight or nine are still published, whose average weekly, monthly, and quarterly issues form a circulation of about twenty thousand copies. It is computed that since the year 1834 the number of Adventist and prophetical sheets published and circulated in America is not less than fifteen millions; probably double this amount.

Such is the extraordinary promulgation through the agency of the press, of the doctrine of our Lord's pre-millennial, personal coming and glorious reign on the renewed earth. The result is a vast increase in numbers of the soon expectants of his kingdom, both among the ministry and laity. Public writers in 1848 estimated the number of ministers then preaching these doctrines in America, at three hundred. Recent statistics show twice this number among the Adventists alone, whose ministry has not reached six hundred. This ministerial force exceeds that of at least sixteen other minor evangelical sects noticed by Dr. Baird in his work, Religion in America, while by a strange omission the Adventists are passed unnoticed, though found in nineteen different States, Canada and Nova Scotia. The number of believers of this persuasion is correctly estimated at not less than fifty-four thousand, while their congregations amount to over one hundred and fifty thousand.

The number of pre-millennialists among the ministry and laity of the various churches is unknown, though it is undoubtedly very great, and on a rapid increase. They are found among all Protestant denominations, and among Roman Catholics. The cry, "Behold, He cometh!" is destined soon to be the grand watch-cry of the church of God. Happy are those who faithfully look, wait, and watch for the coming Lord. He is preparing a people for his kingdom, and will ere long be manifested to the everlasting joy of all who love his appearing. Amen.—Voice of the Prophets.

Condition of the Papacy.

Never did the Papacy appear more undignified than at the present moment. The cloud which was about to burst was clearly foreseen, when M. About's celebrated pamphlet appeared on the day the Emperor left Paris on his way to Genoa. Every spiritual and every temporal weapon within reach of the Pope has been successfully brandished in the face of Europe. Excommunications have been fulminated from the Vatican, but in such a form as to show that they are spent thunder. The Pope was evidently afraid of the recoil of his own artillery, and feels that the days when Papal interdicts could avail to secure obedience, have passed away with the darkness of mediæval superstition. Every effort within reach of the College of Jesuits has been made to avert the impending castastrophe. The superstition of the Empress of the French has been worked upon to control her Imperial husband, and something has perhaps been done through this instrumentality, to manacle the man of whom the Romish Church still boasts as her "eldest son." In the British Parliament, Sir George Bower, impelled by the zeal of a pervert, and his new decorations, has done all he could to work upon the fears of the British Government, aided by Messrs. Hennessy, Maguire, and other emissaries whom the Papal hierarchy contrive to return to the House of Commons.

Of the greatness of the peril of the Pope, we might the better judge from the evident dismay of his adherents. The Pope's prelates in Ireland, not satisfied with mere bluster, proceeded to beat the drum ecclesiastic as the recruiting sergeants of the Pope's Brigade. But who shall write the history of that brigade, which, chiefly through mismanagement of the Pope's officers, has melted away without striking a blow for the Holy Father, with the exception of the small companies in the garrison of Spoleto, who appear to have made a gallant stand against the superior Sardinian forces, before they surrendered?

But every effort to defend the Pope has been unavailing. Austria was the main prop of the unhallowed tyranny of the Papacy. Metternich long ago said, "Rome rests upon Austria, and Austria rests upon Rome." The hopes of assistance from Austria perished on the fields of Magenta and Solferino, and Austria owed much of her weakness to the Concordat forced on the weakness and bigotry of the youthful Emperor by his mother, who is one of the coheiresses of our second James, and seems to have inherited the abject spirit of submission to Rome which cost him the crown of Britain. It ought not to pass without notice, that the calamities now falling on the Pope, date nearly from the time when Pio Nono consummated the darling project of the Papacy, by decreeing the immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin, and giving divine honors to her as the Queen of Heaven. Whoever has traveled through Italy, or even in southern climes, within the last five years, must have remembered the great doings in honor of the Virgin. How, for example, cathedrals and churches in all the Italian towns and villages were all in a blaze to celebrate the nativity of the Virgin; with what pomp did the Pope inaugurate her new statue in the Pizza di Spagna at Rome, in October, 1857; and how the Papacy was once more committed to the guardianship of the Queen of Heaven. When we remember what calamities have followed the bestowal of these divine honors, we can hardly smile at the infatuation of those votaries of Rome, who, in their ignorance, have scarcely refrained from charging the Holy Virgin with ingratitude. A more enlightened observation may suggest the inquiry whether these acts of idolatry, or rather the decree of the Pope, did not fill up the measure of Papal iniquity, and usher in the time when we are told "that ten horns shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."

Assuredly, the loss of Rome's temporalities is imminent, when we see province after province throwing off the hated yoke, and the flag of the conquerors floating almost within sight of the Quirinal. Worse than all, there is no sympathy for the Pope. "The eldest son of the Pope" occupies Rome, and has planted a French flag within a circuit of five miles round the Vatican. But what avails such protection? It has been well compared to the protection given to the parrot when hung up in an iron cage to save it from the claws of Grimalkin. It is obviously for his own purposes, and not for the sake of the Pope, that Napoleon thus proclaims himself the master of Rome. The march of the Sardinian armies into the Papal dominions has sealed the fate of the Pope's mercenaries, not without bringing some discredit on General Lamoriciere, who is no friend of the Emperor.

What is to be the final issue of the Italian drama it would be presumptuous confidently to predict. But knowing, as we do, that Babylon is foredoomed, we cannot but look with intense interest to the events which seem to be hastening forward the time when the Romish apostasy shall be cast down, and He shall come whose right it is to reign.—London Record.

For the Crisis.

To my Mother.

BY MISS S. F. Y.

I think of thee, my mother,
At evening's holy hours,
When darkness dims the woodland,
And the night winds shut the flowers.

I think of thee at morning,
When the heart goes up in prayer,
And while I bow to worship,
Thou art always with me there.

Though absent from thee, mother,
From those I hold most dear,
Yet forms of loved ones hover
Around me even here.

My mother, be thou ever
My guardian angel still,
And teach my erring nature
To do my Maker's will.

Modern Unbelief of the Resurrection.

BY REV. J. PANTON HAM, ENGLAND.

(Concluded.)

But to proceed. Does popular Christianity, then, disbelieve any kind of resurrection? By no means. It believes that there will be a resurrection of the body. The same body? we ask. We would remind those who may be disposed to answer in the affirmative, of their notions of this same body—how they are accustomed to describe it now, as the soul's prison house, the soul's entombment, and so forth. Surely the resurrection of the same body cannot be a thing to be desired! No doubt many will be ready to respond, the body which shall rise again shall be a suitable tenement for the soul, one that shall be adequate to its vast capacities and purposes, and which is called therefore, "a spiritual body." But pause—this is not the same body, the body which the soul once inhabited, but another body, with different attributes and functions, how then can you say that the body rises again? According to this theory, the former body does not rise again, but a new body is created by this so-called resurrection, or rising again. Such a theology, therefore, logically denies also its own dogma of the resurrection of the body. To get off the Scylla of its own contemptuousness with regard to the body, it gets into the Charybdis of denying the resurrection of the body altogether!

But some will forget their contemptuous mode of speaking of the body when, for orthodoxy's sake, they look forward to the resurrection of the body, and therefore we must use another argument with such persons. These, despite all inconsistencies, and physical impossibilities, will hold on to the creed that the same body rises again in the resurrection. We must, therefore, remind these believers that the body, as a separate part of the man, has no inherent life; it has never lived by itself, and therefore cannot die by itself, nor rise again by itself. If any should say, the body possessed vegetative life, and it is this vegetative life which is taken away by death and restored by resurrection; we reply by another question—has the body vegetative life apart from the soul? The proof that it has not, is furnished by the fact, that as soon as the soul, so called, is separated from it, all its vegetative functions cease, and the process of decomposition commences. The theory, therefore, again fails before the light of reason and common sense.

And that it fails before Scripture is most evident, for the apostle Paul, who has written with great particularity on the subject of the resurrection, in his first epistle to the Corinthians, distinctly affirms, that the same body or material organism is not raised again in the resurrection, but another and physically different body. "Thou sowest not that body which shall be," he writes, when thou sowest wheat or any other grain. The body which germinates is the stately plant. The analogy, of course, is not perfect, nor should it be expected to be, nevertheless, it supplies the apostle's purpose, which was merely to show that another body or organism is bestowed in the resurrection, and not the same body. Hence he adds, "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." Here then is plain, apostolical authority to support the deductions of reason that, the same body does not rise from the dead, and, therefore, the theology that teaches that the soul is the human being, and this never dies, is left without any doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. As we have seen, the doctrine of the resurrection of the body is contrary to sound reason and Scripture revelation. The Bible nowhere speaks of the resurrection of the body, but uniformly of the resurrection of the dead. We reiterate, therefore, our charges against the theology of the extant churches, that they deny the great christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and are logically left without any doctrine of resurrection at all. To them, therefore, Paul's query has a special appropriateness, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?

Modern christendom disbelieves the christian doctrine of resurrection, for the same reason that the Sadducean Agrippa, and the Pagan Festus disbelieved it,—that is, because they cannot understand it. The teachers of this doctrine now, like Paul, are thought to be beside themselves. Christian philosophy of the nineteenth century, rejects the total decease of the conscious being in death, because it cannot square such a doctrine with its vague notions of personal identity. And Christian sentimentality rejects it, for the very self-sufficient reason, that it does not like it. This latter prefers the dreams of poets and painters, to the deliverances of prophets and apostles. It is useless to argue against a faith which is begotten of the fancy, and is the mere foster-child of the feelings. But of our philosophical friends we would ask, Is your philosophy of identity so definitely shaped to your own perception, that you can venture to say that our interpretation of death and resurrection denies the preservation of personal identity in the being which dies and rises again? Let our objectors publish their philosophy of personal identity, and furnish irresistible evidence of the proposition that God cannot extinguish consciousness, and rekindle the identical consciousness again at his pleasure. Until this proposition be proved, the hacknied objection falls to the ground. Will our objectors deny that God first created a self-conscious, thinking being from nothing? He who could say, Come, ye children of men from the nothingness of the past, can surely say, Return ye children of men to your original nothingness, and, Come again ye children of men. A hundred years ago, both writer and reader had neither consciousness nor existence; that Power, then, which has given both can surely take them away, and restore the identical gift again. Away with the flimsy objection about personal identity. Away with the impertinence which balances man's ignorance against the wisdom and power of the Almighty. If our inability to comprehend a profound mystery is to be the reason for repudiating that mystery, then consistency ought to oblige us to a universal scepticism, for, as one has well said, "Everything is mysterious, or nothing is mysterious."

To restore the christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead to the modern creed, it is first of all necessary to accept the Scripture theology of the constitution of man as a being, in no sense endowed with immortality or deathlessness, but dependent on organization for existence and all the functions of an intellectual, moral, and emotional nature. Proud man must bow his head in humility before the universal challenge, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" He must acquiesce in the Scripture philosophy, which teaches that "the dead know not anything, neither any that go down into silence;" that "the dead praise not the Lord;" that "in death there is no remembrance" of Him—"no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave" whither we are going. He must understand better that memorable deprecation by David and David's Lord, when he said, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hades, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." And while he needs more knowledge and humility in reference to this terrible fact of death—the wages of sin—he must cherish more faith in the word and power of God, by which the faithful are assured that, though, like their Lord, they die, yet they shall live again, when he, "the Resurrection and the Life," and the Holder of "the keys of hades and death," comes "the second time for salvation."—Examiner.

Hurried Devotions.

Probably, many of us would be discomposed by an arithmetical estimate of our communion with God. It might reveal to us the secret of much of our apathy in prayer, because it might disclose how little we desire to be alone with God. We might learn from such a computation, that Augustine's idea of prayer, as "the measure of love," is not very flattering to us. We do not grudge time given to a privilege which we love.

Why should we expect to enjoy a duty which we have no time to enjoy? Do we enjoy anything which we do in a hurry? Enjoyment pre-supposes something of mental leisure. How often do we say of a pleasure, "I wanted more time to enjoy it to my heart's content." But of all employments, none could be more dependent on "time for it," than stated prayer. Fugitive acts of devotion, to be of high value, must be sustained by other approaches to God, deliberate, premeditated, regular, which shall be to those acts like the abutments of a suspension bridge to the arch that spans the stream. It will never do to be in desperate haste in laying such foundations. This thoughtful duty, this spiritual privilege, this foretaste of uncorporeal life, this communion with an unseen Friend,—can you expect to enjoy it as you would a repartee or dance?

In the royal gallery at Dresden, may be often seen a group of connoisseurs, who sit for hours before a single painting. They walk around those halls and corridors, whose walls are so eloquent with the triumphs of Art, and they come back and pause again before that one masterpiece. They go away, and return the next day, and again the first and last object which charms their eye, is that canvass on which Genius has pictured more of beauty than on any other in the world. Weeks are spent every year in the study of that one work of Raphael. Lovers of art cannot enjoy it to the full, till they have made it their own by prolonged communion with its matchless forms. Says one of its admirers: "I could spend an hour every day for years, upon that assemblage of human, and angelic, and divine ideas, and on the last day of the year discover some new beauty and a new joy."

I have seen men standing in the street before an engraving of that gem of the Dresden gallery, a longer time than a good man will sometimes devote to his evening prayer. Yet, what thoughts, what ideals of grace, can Genius express in a painting, demanding time for their appreciation and enjoyment, like those great thoughts of God, of heaven, of Eternity, which the soul needs to conceive vividly, in order to know the blessedness of prayer? What conceptions can art imagine of the "Divine Child," which can equal in spirituality, the thoughts which one needs to entertain of Christ, in the "prayer of faith?" We cannot hope, commonly, to spring into possession of such thoughts, in the twinkling of an eye.—The Still Hour.

The Golden Rule.

This golden lesson, short and plain,
Give not the mind or memory pain,
And every conscience must approve
This universal law of love.

"And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Luke 6: 31. The principle here laid down by the Savior, is, by way of convenience, sometimes called the "golden rule." And well it may be. Says Jesus, "This is the law and the prophets." Here is the substance of our duty to our neighbor.

"Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord." Lev. 18: 18. "And let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart."

"O may it be our noble aim
To elevate our brother—man;
Onward to speed the glorious work
Which Christ, our Lord, began."

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

This rule is to be lived out in all our intercourse with all men, at all times, under all circumstances, with the saint and the sinner, friend and neighbor. "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the God of Israel."

The Golden rule embraces a spirit of forgiveness. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Matt. 6: 14, 15.

The spirit of the golden rule leads us to labor also for the salvation of such as may err from the truth, or be overtaken in a fault. "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5: 19, 20.

"Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Gal. 5: 1. Important injunction; "Considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

"Give me to feel my brother's woe,
And lightly him condemn,
If from the channel he should go,
As we the current stem;
I'll kindly whisper that he must
The shoals and breakers flee;
And when I need it, I would trust
He'll do the same by me."

O! for more of this charity which suffereth long, and is kind; that seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.

"Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 9–10.

"Let brotherly love continue. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." 1 Pet. 8, 8. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Ps. 83: 1. For this sweet union the Savior prayed. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Jonn 17: 21.

This blessed Golden Rule of our Savior, exemplified in every-day life, in thought, word and deed, removes all selfishness, all slavery, all oppression, the spirit of caste, all hatred, variances, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, and causeth the earth to blossom as the rose. "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

"This is the sum of every part,
To love our God with all our heart;
That we should love our neighbor too,
And what we wish from him, should do.

'Tis short and sweet, and good and plain,
Easy to learn and to retain;
May grace divine our souls renew,
And 't will be sweet to practice too."

—Golden Rule.

☞ A good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body: it preserves a constant, ease, and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions which can possibly befall us.

He has "Done Much for Me."

"Freely ye have received, freely give," is the injunction of the Savior to his disciples, and when christians have right ideas of their indebtedness to Christ, and of the manifold favors received from him, they cannot be niggardly or covetous:

A missionary laboring among the Caffres, was anxious to raise money for an important object; but the church which he had formed was so small and the members of it so very poor, that he resolved not to ask them to give even a penny. This was a grief to the good man; but as many of them were widows, as they earned the little money they had by carrying firwood to a town several miles off, and as he believed they were doing all they possibly could for the cause of Christ, he felt quite sure that he should not be right if he asked them to do more.

One day he told a native preacher that he was going to plead for the object with the white people in Graham's Town. Immediately the teacher said,

"Why don't you speak to us, and ask us to do something?"

The missionary told him his reason, and said, "I really think you are not able to do more in raising money than you now do. But I wish you would feel more, and pray more."

He answered, "The Lord may put it into our hearts to try and do more."

The missionary was pleased, and called the people together. Still he scarcely expected any money, for he could not see where it could come from. But to his great surprise and delight, they came forward and subscribed about £14! Among those who gave there was a poor widow who had the very spirit of her whom the great Savior commended when he saw her cast her two mites into the treasury. This good woman came up to him with fifteen shillings in her hand. The missionary was almost afraid to take it, and told her that it was too much.

"But," he writes, "her reply silenced me: 'The Lord,' she said, 'has done much for me.'"

A short time afterwards she brought to him five shillings more, and told him that her heart would not be still until she made up the pound.

Reading for Youth.

Going to Church.

"Mother, I don't want to go to church." The speaker, a little bright-eyed boy, looked up into his mother's face with evident doubt as to the propriety of saying what he had said. His mother, who had often heard the same remonstrance, sat down and drew him to her knee, saying,—"Charley, father and I tell you that it is best for you. Don't you think we know best?" Charley made a petulant reply, although obliged to go, yet went in a very unfavorable mood.

Years passed away. Charley had lived to be a man, and had long gladdened his mother's heart by living the life of a christian. Children growing up around him, were taught to tread the path in which he had been led before. One Sabbath, a friend spending the day with him, asked:—"Why do you endeavor to get all your children to church, whether they wish to go or not? You know that many do not approve of such a course." Turning to his friend, he replied,—"Because I owe it to my mother that I was saved from infidelity by the respect for the christian religion instilled into my heart when she sent me constantly to church."

The Unlucky Throw.

When I was a boy, like most other boys, I often did idle and foolish things. One day, for instance, as I was walking up street, I saw a broken china tea-cup in the road. Picking it up, instead of letting it alone, as I ought to have done, I began to toss it in the air. This I did several times, trying to throw it higher with each new effort.

At last, thinking to toss it as high as the cornices of the houses, I threw it with great energy. Alas for me! My arm struck my side, and the unlucky piece of china went crashing through the window of a dwelling-house.

Without thinking of my duty, I took counsel of my fears only, and ran home as fast as my feet could carry me. Nor did I either pause or look back until I turned a corner.

Shortly after this misfortune the son of the man whose window I had broken came home from play. Seeing the window broken, he stood outside with his hands in his pockets looking at it. A man passing said: "Your father will think you broke that window, my little fellow, and he'll tickle your back with a raw hide."

"No he won't," said the boy calmly, "for I shall tell him I didn't do it."

"You may tell him so, but will he believe you?" rejoined the man.

"To be sure he will. He always believes what I say!"

That was nobly said, and it was just so. That boy wore a diamond called truth on his heart, and his father knew that he could safely trust him.

Where was I? Well, I sneaked home, feeling that I had done a mean act in not going right to the owner of the house and confessing my misfortune.

For several days I carried my secret with me. It was like wearing a belt of burrs round my waist. It pained me badly. I was in torments, too, lest somebody had seen me and should, after all, tell my father.

At last my secret was dragged out. A person who knew me had seen me break the window and had told the owner of the house about me. That gentleman knew my father, and the first time he saw him told him what I had done. My father paid for setting a new square of glass, and on his return home called me to his side.

His face wore a stern expression. I trembled and blushed like a culprit, for I guessed he had found me out. Looking right in my eye, he said:—

"Peter, did you break Mr. Comerford's window a few days ago?"

"Yes, sir," I replied, holding down my head.

"What did you do that for?" asked my father, with less sternness in his manner.

The worst of my load was now gone. That secret mill-stone which had been crushing me was now rolled off, and I told my father all about the affair.

"Peter, my boy," said my father, after hearing my story, "I am glad you did not deny your guilt. I regret you did not play the man, when your misfortune happened, by going to Mr. Comerford at once. But I honor you for frankly and truthfully answering my question. I have paid for the window. Go. Be more careful hereafter about tossing old china in the street, and, above all, if you ever should be unlucky or foolish enough to meet with a similar accident don't run away like a sneak. Act the part of a thoroughly honest boy, and own your fault at once."

I promised I would, and I tried to keep my promise. The advice my father gave me I commend to you, hoping that you will remember that it is honest, noble, and manly to confess a fault, while to conceal it is to act the part of a coward.—Sunday School Advocate.

A Word to Little Folks on Prayer.

"The Lord attends when children pray;
A whisper he can hear;
He knows not only what we say,
But what we think or fear."

Pray, little friends, do you? when, where, how often, how long? How do you pray? in what spirit, in what name? In the name and spirit of Jesus; meekly, humbly, penitently? Do you go to God as sinners, lost, forever lost without interceding mercy? Do you go on your bended knees of humiliation and self-abasement, and ask God for Christ's sake to pardon, cleanse, purify, make you meet for glory? Do you approach God thus, relying solely on the merits of Jesus, believingly? Do you go to Jesus as the only Savior, the only name given under heaven by which sinners can be saved? Do you go to Him in good earnest, feeling your need, great need of the immediate application of his precious blood to your sin-sick soul? Do you make conscience of regular, stated, closet visitations? Some little boys and girls tell us they pray, but on further inquiry and examination we find there is no soul in it, no life, no power, no saving faith, but mere lip-service, parrot-like. Frequently we ask our young friends, "Do you pray?" "O yes, to be sure we do," is the reply. But in nine cases out of ten, the heart is not in it, it's a formal, hap-hazard business!

Young readers, is this the way to heaven, peace on earth, peace evermore? When you pray, be sure the consecration of body, soul and spirit is perfect, complete; keep back no part of the price, bring all the tithes into the storehouse. "If I regard iniquity in my heart," saith the Psalmist, "the Lord will not hear me." See to it, that you "lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting." Finally, little folks, be regular at the mercy-seat, morning, noon, and even-tide, rising up, lying down, going out, coming in; "pray always, with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." What we say to one, we say to all, "watch, watch and pray; pray and watch."

"In every place 'tis good to pray,
At rising morn or close of day,
For God is present everywhere,
And in all places answers prayer.

When sorrows and afflictions roll,
And like a flood o'erwhelms our soul,
How sweet to know that even there,
The Lord will hear and answer prayer.

When friends desert and foes assail,
Our comfort and our courage fail,
And we are almost in despair,
'Tis good to bow to God in prayer."

—Golden Rule.

Picking up a Pin.

A young man once went to the city of Paris to seek a situation. He had letters of recommendation to a large banking establishment. He called on the gentleman who was at the head of it, full of hope and confidence that he should find employment. The gentleman heard what he had to say, looked over his letters hastily, and then handed them back to him, saying, "We have nothing for you to do, sir." The young man felt his heart sink within him. He was ready to burst into tears. But there was no help for it, so he made his bow and retired. As he was passing in front of the building, there was a pin lying on the pavement. He stooped down, picked it up, and then stuck it carefully away under the bosom of his coat. The gentleman with whom he had just been speaking was standing at the window, and saw what took place. In an instant the thought occurred to him that the young man who had such habits of carefulness as to stop in such a moment of disappointment, and pick up a pin, would make a useful business man. He sent immediately and called him back. He gave him an humble situation in his establishment. From that he rose by degrees, till he became the principal partner in the concern, and eventually a man of immense wealth and the chief banker in Paris. So much for good careful habits.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..............1.00
For a single copy 3 months..............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months..15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months..22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a-year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

Lift your Head, Brother Pilgrim.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Lift your head, brother pilgrim, the day draweth near
When the heavens will open and Jesus appear;
With millions of angels in glory will come
To set up his kingdom and take us all home.

CHORUS.

Soon from all sorrow the saints shall be free,
Immortal in beauty our King we shall see.

Hark! the watchmen are sounding their notes loud and clear,
The virgins to comfort that Jesus is near;
And soon will descend and the trumpet shall sound
To awake all the nations that sleep under ground.

Old Babylon is trembling and wailing full sore,
Her garments are reeking with saints' purple gore,
The smoke of her torment we soon shall behold,
As John in his vision hath clearly foretold.

Soon her Kings and her nobles, alas! loud will cry,
As the smoke of her burning ascendeth on high;
She'll sink as the millstone was cast in the sea,
With might by the angels, and never more be.

The highlands of Eden by faith we behold,
The bright burnished city of gems and pure gold;
There the once weeping pilgrims forever are blest,
With the Savior and brethren eternally rest.

Spread of Pre-Millennialism.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

In 1851, the Congregationalist, the organ of a very respectable religious body, informed its readers that "in various ways the leaven of Millenarianism is working in the community, some in nearly all denominations being its advocates." Truly said! A great movement, significant, stirring, and onward, is progressing in this direction. The following facts and figures speak for themselves. Will Christian men ponder them well, and tell us what they mean?

The first pre-millennial work written and printed in America was put forth by Samuel Hutchinson, of Boston, in 1667. About ten other works of this kind appeared in New England in the seventeenth century. Of thirty Christian writers in the same century, who either issued prophetical works or alluded to prophecy, eight of the number taught the pre-millennial advent and personal reign, while the writings of a majority of the remaining twenty-two exhibit a tendency to our view. In the eighteenth century the number of pre-millennial works published in this country amounted to over twenty-five, being written by about twenty different authors of this view. In the year 1800, Benjamin Farnham published a clear little work of this character, of one hundred and fifty-five pages, at East Windsor, Ct. Many similar productions soon after appeared, until 1833, when William Miller's first work a pamphlet of sixty-four pages, was printed at Brandon, Vt. His lectures on Christ's coming in 1843, were first put forth in volume in 1836. He was the author of about sixteen pre-millennial works, large and small.

Within the last two hundred years, since 1660, there have been published in America over seven hundred books, pamphlets, and treatises of a distinctive prophetical character, five hundred and fifty of which bear date in the present century, showing a vast increase in the study of prophecy and a corresponding increase of prophetical works within the past sixty years. Of the total number since 1660, a decided majority are of the premillennial class, while of the five hundred and fifty printed since 1800 over two hundred are issued by the denomination of Pre-millennial Adventists. Of these, over half a million have been scattered far and wide within the past twenty-five years, some reaching a circulation variously from five thousand to eight thousand printed copies.

The first religious newspaper ever published in the world, viz., the Herald of Gospel Liberty, by Rev. Elias Smith, a Christian Baptist minister, at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1808, advocated pre-millennialism, and nearly every other distinctive view now held by the Adventists in relation to our Lord's soon coming. The second journal of this kind was published by John Thomas, M. D., in 1834. The third was established by Rev. Joshua V. Himes, in 1840. The two papers last mentioned still exist, and are devoted to the advocacy of the doctrines in question. No less than sixteen different prophetical sheets have been started within the past quarter of a century, in advocacy of the pre-millennial and speedy coming of Christ, whose period of existence has varied from one to twenty years. Eight or nine are still published, whose average weekly, monthly, and quarterly issues form a circulation of about twenty thousand copies. It is computed that since the year 1834 the number of Adventist and prophetical sheets published and circulated in America is not less than fifteen millions; probably double this amount.

Such is the extraordinary promulgation through the agency of the press, of the doctrine of our Lord's pre-millennial, personal coming and glorious reign on the renewed earth. The result is a vast increase in numbers of the soon expectants of his kingdom, both among the ministry and laity. Public writers in 1848 estimated the number of ministers then preaching these doctrines in America, at three hundred. Recent statistics show twice this number among the Adventists alone, whose ministry has now reached six hundred. This ministerial force exceeds that of at least sixteen other minor evangelical sects noticed by Dr. Baird in his work, Religion in America, while by a strange omission the Adventists are passed unnoticed, though found in nineteen different States, Canada and Nova Scotia. The number of believers of this persuasion is correctly estimated at not less than fifty-four thousand, while their congregations amount to over one hundred and fifty thousand.

The number of pre-millennialists among the ministry and laity of the various churches is unknown, though it is undoubtedly very great, and on a rapid increase. They are found among all Protestant denominations, and among Roman Catholics. The cry, "Behold, He cometh!" is destined soon to be the grand watch-cry of the church of God. Happy are those who faithfully look, wait, and watch for the coming Lord. He is preparing a people for his kingdom, and will ere long be manifested to the everlasting joy of all who love his appearing. Amen.—Voice of the Prophets.

Condition of the Papacy.

Never did the Papacy appear more undignified than at the present moment. The cloud which was about to burst was clearly foreseen, when M. About's celebrated pamphlet appeared on the day the Emperor left Paris on his way to Genoa. Every spiritual and every temporal weapon within reach of the Pope has been successfully brandished in the face of Europe. Excommunications have been fulminated from the Vatican, but in such a form as to show that they are spent thunder. The Pope was evidently afraid of the recoil of his own artillery, and feels that the days when Papal interdicts could avail to secure obedience, have passed away with the darkness of mediæval superstition. Every effort within reach of the College of Jesuits has been made to avert the impending catastrophe. The superstition of the Empress of the French has been worked upon to control her Imperial husband, and something has perhaps been done through this instrumentality, to manacle the man of whom the Romish Church still boasts as her "eldest son." In the British Parliament, Sir George Bower, impelled by the zeal of a pervert, and his new decorations, has done all he could to work upon the fears of the British Government, aided by Messrs. Hennessy, Maguire, and other emissaries whom the Papal hierarchy contrive to return to the House of Commons.

Of the greatness of the peril of the Pope, we might the better judge from the evident dismay of his adherents. The Pope's prelates in Ireland, not satisfied with mere bluster, proceeded to beat the drum ecclesiastic as the recruiting sergeants of the Pope's Brigade. But who shall write the history of that brigade, which, chiefly through mismanagement of the Pope's officers, has melted away without striking a blow for the Holy Father, with the exception of the small companies in the garrison of Spoleto, who appear to have made a gallant stand against the superior Sardinian forces, before they surrendered?

But every effort to defend the Pope has been unavailiing. Austria was the main prop of the unhallowed tyranny of the Papacy. Metternich long ago said, "Rome rests upon Austria, and Austria rests upon Rome." The hopes of assistance from Austria perished on the fields of Magenta and Solferino, and Austria owed much of her weakness to the Concordat forced on the weakness and bigotry of the youthful Emperor by his mother, who is one of the coheiresses of our second James, and seems to have inherited the abject spirit of submission to Rome which cost him the crown of Britain. It ought not to pass without notice, that the calamities now falling on the Pope, date nearly from the time when Pio Nono consummated the darling project of the Papacy, by decreeing the immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin, and giving divine honors to her as the Queen of Heaven. Whoever has traveled through Italy, or even in southern climes, within the last five years, must have remembered the great doings in honor of the Virgin. How, for example, cathedrals and churches in all the Italian towns and villages were all in a blaze to celebrate the nativity of the Virgin; with what pomp did the Pope inaugurate her new statue in the Pizza di Spagna at Rome, in October, 1857; and how the Papacy was once more committed to the guardianship of the Queen of Heaven. When we remember what calamities have followed the bestowal of these divine honors, we can hardly smile at the infatuation of those votaries of Rome, who, in their ignorance, have scarcely refrained from charging the Holy Virgin with ingratitude. A more enlightened observation may suggest the inquiry whether these acts of idolatry, or rather the decree of the Pope, did not fill up the measure of Papal iniquity, and usher in the time when we are told "that ten horns shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."

Assuredly, the loss of Rome's temporalities is imminent, when we see province after province throwing off the hated yoke, and the flag of the conquerors floating almost within sight of the Quirinal. Worse than all, there is no sympathy for the Pope. "The eldest son of the Pope" occupies Rome, and has planted a French flag with in a circuit of five miles round the Vatican. But what avails such protection? It has been well compared to the protection given to the parrot when hung up in an iron cage to save it from the claws of Grimalkin. It is obviously for his own purposes, and not for the sake of the Pope, that Napoleon thus proclaims himself the master of Rome. The march of the Sardinian armies into the Papal dominions has sealed the fate of the Pope's mercenaries, not without bringing some discredit on General Lamoriciere, who is no friend of the Emperor.

What is to be the final issue of the Italian drama it would be presumptuous confidently to predict. But knowing, as we do, that Babylon is foredoomed, we cannot but look with intense interest to the events which seem to be hastening forward the time when the Romish apostasy shall be cast down, and He shall come whose right it is to reign.—London Record.

For the Crisis.

To my Mother.

BY MISS S. P. Y.

I think of thee, my mother,
At evening's holy hours,
When darkness dims the woodland,
And the night winds shut the flowers.

I think of thee at morning,
When the heart goes up in prayer,
And while I bow to worship,
Thou art always with me there.

Though absent from thee, mother,
From those I hold most dear,
Yet forms of loved ones hover
Around me even here.

My mother, be thou ever
My guardian angel still,
And teach my erring nature
To do my Maker's will.

Modern Unbelief of the Resurrection.

BY REV. J. PANTON HAM, ENGLAND.

(Concluded.)

But to proceed. Does popular Christianity, then, disbelieve any kind of resurrection? By no means. It believes that there will be a resurrection of the body. The same body? we ask. We would remind those who may be disposed to answer in the affirmative, of their notions of this same body—how they are accustomed to describe it now, as the soul's prison house, the soul's entombment, and so forth. Surely the resurrection of the same body cannot be a thing to be desired! No doubt many will be ready to respond, the body which shall rise again shall be a suitable tenement for the soul, one that shall be adequate to its vast capacities and purposes, and which is called therefore, "a spiritual body." But pause—this is not the same body, the body which the soul once inhabited, but another body, with different attributes and functions, how then can you say that the body rises again? According to this theory, the former body does not rise again, but a new body is created by this so-called resurrection, or rising again. Such a theology, therefore, logically denies also its own dogma of the resurrection of the body. To get off the Scylla of its own contemptuousness with regard to the body, it gets into the Charybdis of denying the resurrection of the body altogether!

But some will forget their contemptuous mode of speaking of the body when, for orthodoxy's sake, they look forward to the resurrection of the body, and therefore we must use another argument with such persons. These, despite all inconsistencies, and physical impossibilities, will hold on to the creed that the same body rises again in the resurrection. We must, therefore, remind these believers that the body, as a separate part of the man, has no inherent life; it has never lived by itself, and therefore cannot die by itself, nor rise again by itself. If any should say, the body possessed vegetative life, and it is this vegetative life which is taken away by death and restored by resurrection; we reply by another question—has the body vegetative life apart from the soul? The proof that it has not, is furnished by the fact, that as soon as the soul, so called, is separated from it, all its vegetative functions cease, and the process of decomposition commences. The theory, therefore, again fails before the light of reason and common sense.

And that it fails before Scripture is most evident, for the apostle Paul, who has written with great particularity on the subject of the resurrection, in his first epistle to the Corinthians, distinctly affirms, that the same body or material organism is not raised again in the resurrection, but another and physically different body. "Thou sowest not that body which shall be," he writes, when thou sowest wheat or any other grain. The body which germinates is the stately plant. The analogy, of course, is not perfect, nor should it be expected to be, nevertheless, it supplies the apostle's purpose, which was merely to show that another body or organism is bestowed in the resurrection, and not the same body. Hence he adds, "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." Here then is plain, apostolical authority to support the deductions of reason that, the same body does not rise from the dead, and, therefore, the theology that teaches that the soul is the human being, and this never dies, is left without any doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. As we have seen, the doctrine of the resurrection of the body is contrary to sound reason and Scripture revelation. The Bible nowhere speaks of the resurrection of the body, but uniformly of the resurrection of the dead. We reiterate, therefore, our charges against the theology of the extant churches, that they deny the great christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and are logically left without any doctrine of resurrection at all. To them, therefore, Paul's query has a special appropriateness, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?

Modern christendom disbelieves the christian doctrine of resurrection, for the same reason that the Sadducean Agrippa, and the Pagan Festus disbelieved it,—that is, because they cannot understand it. The teachers of this doctrine now, like Paul, are thought to be beside themselves. Christian philosophy of the nineteenth century, rejects the total decease of the conscious being in death, because it cannot square such a doctrine with its vague notions of personal identity. And Christian sentimentality rejects it, for the very self-sufficient reason, that it does not like it. This latter prefers the dreams of poets and painters, to the deliverances of prophets and apostles. It is useless to argue against a faith which is begotten of the fancy, and is the mere foster-child of the feelings. But of our philosophical friends we would ask, Is your philosophy of identity so definitely shaped to your own perception, that you can venture to say that our interpretation of death and resurrection denies the preservation of personal identity in the being which dies and rises again? Let our objectors publish their philosophy of personal identity, and furnish irresistible evidence of the proposition that God cannot extinguish consciousness, and rekindle the identical consciousness again at his pleasure. Until this proposition be proved, the hacknied objection falls to the ground. Will our objectors deny that God first created a self-conscious, thinking being from nothing? He who could say, Come, ye children of men from the nothingness of the past, can surely say, Return ye children of men to your original nothingness, and, Come again ye children of men. A hundred years ago, both writer and reader had neither consciousness nor existence; that Power, then, which has given both can surely take them away, and restore the identical gift again. Away with the flimsy objection about personal identity. Away with the impertinence which balances man's ignorance against the wisdom and power of the Almighty. If our inability to comprehend a profound mystery is to be the reason for repudiating that mystery, then consistency ought to oblige us to a universal scepticism, for, as one has well said, "Everything is mysterious, or nothing is mysterious."

To restore the christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead to the modern creed, it is first of all necessary to accept the Scripture theology of the constitution of man as a being, in no sense endowed with immortality or deathlessness, but dependent on organization for existence and all the functions of an intellectual, moral, and emotional nature. Proud man must bow his head in humility before the universal challenge, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" He must acquiesce in the Scripture philosophy, which teaches that "the dead know not anything, neither any that go down into silence;" that "the dead praise not the Lord;" that "in death there is no remembrance" of Him—"no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave" whither we are going. He must understand better that memorable deprecation by David and David's Lord, when he said, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hades, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." And while he needs more knowledge and humility in reference to this terrible fact of death—the wages of sin—he must cherish more faith in the word and power of God, by which the faithful are assured that, though, like their Lord, they die, yet they shall live again, when he, "the Resurrection and the Life," and the Holder of "the keys of hades and death," comes "the second time for salvation."—Examiner.

Hurried Devotions.

Probably, many of us would be discomposed by an arithmetical estimate of our communion with God. It might reveal to us the secret of much of our apathy in prayer, because it might disclose how little we desire to be alone with God. We might learn from such a computation, that Augustine's idea of prayer, as "the measure of love," is not very flattering to us. We do not grudge time, given to a privilege which we love.

Why should we expect to enjoy a duty which we have no time to enjoy? Do we enjoy anything which we do in a hurry? Enjoyment pre-supposes something of mental leisure. How often do we say of a pleasure, "I wanted more time to enjoy it to my heart's content." But of all employments, none could be more dependent on "time for it," than stated prayer.

Fugitive acts of devotion, to be of high value, must be sustained by other approaches to God, deliberate, premeditated, regular, which shall be to those acts like the abutments of a suspension bridge to the arch that spans the stream. It will never do to be in desperate haste in laying such foundations. This thoughtful duty, this spiritual privilege, this foretaste of uncorporeal life, this communion with an unseen Friend,—can you expect to enjoy it as you would a repartee or dance?

In the royal gallery at Dresden, may be often seen a group of connoisseurs, who sit for hours before a single painting. They walk around those halls and corridors, whose walls are so eloquent with the triumphs of Art, and they come back and pause again before that one masterpiece. They go away, and return the next day, and again the first and last object which charms their eye, is that canvass on which Genius has pictured more of beauty than on any other in the world. Weeks are spent every year in the study of that one work of Raphael. Lovers of art cannot enjoy it to the full, till they have made it their own by prolonged communion with its matchless forms. Says one of its admirers: "I could spend an hour every day for years, upon that assemblage of human, and angelic, and divine ideas, and on the last day of the year discover some new beauty and a new joy."

I have seen men standing in the street before an engraving of that gem of the Dresden gallery, a longer time than a good man will sometimes devote to his evening prayer. Yet, what thoughts, what ideals of grace, can Genius express in a painting, demanding time for their appreciation and enjoyment, like those great thoughts of God, of heaven, of Eternity, which the soul needs to conceive vividly, in order to know the blessedness of prayer? What conceptions can art imagine of the "Divine Child," which can equal in spirituality, the thoughts which one needs to entertain of Christ, in the "prayer of faith?" We cannot hope, commonly, to spring into possession of such thoughts, in the twinkling of an eye.—The Still Hour.

The Golden Rule.

This golden lesson, short and plain,
Give not the mind or memory pain,
And every conscience must approve
This universal law of love.

"And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Luke 6: 31. The principle here laid down by the Savior, is, by way of convenience, sometimes called the "golden rule." And well it may be. Says Jesus, "This is the law and the prophets." Here is the substance of our duty to our neighbor.

"Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord." Lev. 18: 18. "And let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart."

"O may it be our noble aim
To elevate our brother—man;
Onward to speed the glorious work
Which Christ, our Lord, began."

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

This rule is to be lived out in all our intercourse with all men, at all times, under all circumstances, with the saint and the sinner, friend and neighbor. "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the God of Israel."

The Golden rule embraces a spirit of forgiveness. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Matt. 6: 14, 15.

The spirit of the golden rule leads us to labor also for the salvation of such as may err from the truth, or be overtaken in a fault. "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5: 19, 20.

"Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Gal. 5: 1. Important injunction; "Considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

"Give me to feel my brother's woe,
And lightly him condemn,
If from the channel he should go,
As we the current stem;
I'll kindly whisper that he must
The shoals and breakers flee;
And when I need it, I would trust
He'll do the same by me."

O! for more of this charity which suffereth long, and is kind; that seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.

"Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 9–10.

"Let brotherly love continue. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." 1 Pet. 8, 8. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Ps. 83: 1. For this sweet union the Savior prayed. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Jonn 17: 21.

This blessed Golden Rule of our Savior, exemplified in every-day life, in thought, word and deed, removes all selfishness, all slavery, all oppression, the spirit of caste, all hatred, variances, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, and causeth the earth to blossom as the rose. "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

"This is the sum of every part,
To love our God with all our heart;
That we should love our neighbor too,
And what we wish from him, should do.

'Tis short and sweet, and good and plain,
Easy to learn and to retain;
May grace divine our souls renew,
And 't will be sweet to practice too."

☞ A good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body: it preserves a constant ease, and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions which can possibly befall us.

He has "Done Much for Me."

"Freely ye have received, freely give," is the injunction of the Savior to his disciples, and when christians have right ideas of their indebtedness to Christ, and of the manifold favors received from him, they cannot be niggardly or covetous:

A missionary laboring among the Caffres, was anxious to raise money for an important object; but the church which he had formed was so small and the members of it so very poor, that he resolved not to ask them to give even a penny. This was a grief to the good man; but as many of them were widows, as they earned the little money they had by carrying firewood to a town several miles off, and as he believed they were doing all they possibly could for the cause of Christ, he felt quite sure that he should not be right if he asked them to do more.

One day he told a native preacher that he was going to plead for the object with the white people in Graham's Town. Immediately the teacher said,

"Why don't you speak to us, and ask us to do something?"

The missionary told him his reason, and said, "I really think you are not able to do more in raising money than you now do. But I wish you would feel more, and pray more."

He answered, "The Lord may put it into our hearts to try and do more."

The missionary was pleased, and called the people together. Still he scarcely expected any money, for he could not see where it could come from. But to his great surprise and delight, they came forward and subscribed about £14! Among those who gave there was a poor widow who had the very spirit of her whom the great Savior commended when he saw her cast her two mites into the treasury. This good woman came up to him with fifteen shillings in her hand. The missionary was almost afraid to take it, and told her that it was too much.

"But," he writes, "her reply silenced me: 'The Lord,' she said, 'has done much for me.'"

A short time afterwards she brought to him five shillings more, and told him that her heart would not be still until she made up the pound.

Going to Church.

"Mother, I don't want to go to church." The speaker, a little bright-eyed boy, looked up into his mother's face with evident doubt as to the propriety of saying what he had said. His mother, who had often heard the same remonstrance, sat down and drew him to her knee, saying,—"Charley, father and I tell you that it is best for you. Don't you think we know best?" Charley made a petulant reply, although obliged to go, yet went in a very unfavorable mood.

Years passed away. Charley had lived to be a man, and had long gladdened his mother's heart by living the life of a christian. Children growing up around him, were taught to tread the path in which he had been led before. One Sabbath, a friend spending the day with him, asked:—"Why do you endeavor to get all your children to church, whether they wish to go or not? You know that many do not approve of such a course." Turning to his friend, he replied,—"Because I owe it to my mother that I was saved from infidelity by the respect for the christian religion instilled into my heart when she sent me constantly to church."

The Unlucky Throw.

When I was a boy, like most other boys, I often did idle and foolish things. One day, for instance, as I was walking up street, I saw a broken china tea-cup in the road. Picking it up, instead of letting it alone, as I ought to have done, I began to toss it in the air. This I did several times, trying to throw it higher with each new effort.

At last, thinking to toss it as high as the cornices of the houses, I threw it with great energy. Alas for me! My arm struck my side, and the unlucky piece of china went crashing through the window of a dwelling-house.

Without thinking of my duty, I took counsel of my fears only, and ran home as fast as my feet could carry me. Nor did I either pause or look back until I turned a corner.

Shortly after this misfortune the son of the man whose window I had broken came home from play. Seeing the window broken, he stood outside with his hands in his pockets looking at it. A man passing said: "Your father will think you broke that window, my little fellow, and he'll tickle your back with a raw hide."

"No he won't," said the boy calmly, "for I shall tell him I didn't do it."

"You may tell him so, but will he believe you?" rejoined the man.

"To be sure he will. He always believes what I say!"

That was nobly said, and it was just so. That boy wore a diamond called truth on his heart, and his father knew that he could safely trust him.

Where was I? Well, I sneaked home, feeling that I had done a mean act in not going right to the owner of the house and confessing my misfortune.

For several days I carried my secret with me. It was like wearing a belt of burrs round my waist. It pained me badly. I was in torments, too, lest somebody had seen me and should, after all, tell my father.

At last my secret was dragged out. A person who knew me had seen me break the window and had told the owner of the house about me. That gentleman knew my father, and the first time he saw him told him what I had done. My father paid for setting a new square of glass, and on his return home called me to his side.

His face wore a stern expression. I trembled and blushed like a culprit, for I guessed he had found me out. Looking right in my eye, he said:—

"Peter, did you break Mr. Comerford's window a few days ago?"

"Yes, sir," I replied, holding down my head.

"What did you do that for?" asked my father, with less sternness in his manner.

The worst of my load was now gone. That secret mill-stone which had been crushing me was now rolled off, and I told my father all about the affair.

"Peter, my boy," said my father, after hearing my story, "I am glad you did not deny your guilt. I regret you did not play the man when your misfortune happened, by going to Mr. Comerford at once. But I honor you for frankly and truthfully answering my question. I have paid for the window. Go. Be more careful hereafter about tossing old china in the street, and, above all, if you ever should be unlucky or foolish enough to meet with a similar accident don't run away like a sneak. Act the part of a thoroughly honest boy, and own your fault at once."

I promised I would, and I tried to keep my promise. The advice my father gave me I commend to you, hoping that you will remember that it is honest, noble, and manly to confess a fault, while to conceal it is to act the part of a coward.—Sunday School Advocate.

A Word to Little Folks on Prayer.

"The Lord attends when children pray;
A whisper he can hear;
He knows not only what we say,
But what we think or fear."

Pray, little friends, do you? when, where, how often, how long? How do you pray? in what spirit, in what name? In the name and spirit of Jesus; meekly, humbly, penitently? Do you go to God as sinners, lost, forever lost without interceding mercy? Do you go on your bended knees of humiliation and self-abasement, and ask God for Christ's sake to pardon, cleanse, purify, make you meet for glory? Do you approach God thus, relying solely on the merits of Jesus, believingly? Do you go to Jesus as the only Savior, the only name given under heaven by which sinners can be saved? Do you go to Him in good earnest, feeling your need, great need of the immediate application of his precious blood to your sin-sick soul? Do you make conscience of regular, stated, closet visitations? Some little boys and girls tell us they pray, but on further inquiry and examination we find there is no soul in it, no life, no power, no saving faith, but mere lip-service, parrot-like. Frequently we ask our young friends, "Do you pray?" "O yes, to be sure we do," is the reply. But in nine cases out of ten, the heart is not in it, it's a formal, hap-hazard business!

Young readers, is this the way to heaven, peace on earth, peace evermore? When you pray, be sure the consecration of body, soul and spirit is perfect, complete; keep back no part of the price, bring all the tithes into the storehouse. "If I regard iniquity in my heart," saith the Psalmist, "the Lord will not hear me." See to it, that you "lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting." Finally, little folks, be regular at the mercy-seat, morning, noon, and even-tide, rising up, lying down, going out, coming in; "pray always, with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." What we say to one, we say to all, "watch, watch and pray; pray and watch."

"In every place 'tis good to pray,
At rising morn or close of day,
For God is present everywhere,
And in all places answers prayer.

When sorrows and afflictions roll,
And like a flood o'erwhelms our soul,
How sweet to know that even there,
The Lord will hear and answer prayer.

When friends desert and foes assail,
Our comfort and our courage fail,
And we are almost in despair,
'Tis good to bow to God in prayer."

—Golden Rule.

Picking up a Pin.

A young man once went to the city of Paris to seek a situation. He had letters of recommendation to a large banking establishment. He called on the gentleman who was at the head of it, full of hope and confidence that he should find employment. The gentleman heard what he had to say, looked over his letters hastily, and then handed them back to him, saying, "We have nothing for you to do, sir." The young man felt his heart sink within him. He was ready to burst into tears. But there was no help for it, so he made his bow and retired. As he was passing in front of the building, there was a pin lying on the pavement. He stooped down, picked it up, and then stuck it carefully away under the bosom of his coat. The gentleman with whom he had just been speaking was standing at the window, and saw what took place. In an instant the thought occurred to him that the young man who had such habits of carefulness as to stop in such a moment of disappointment, and pick up a pin, would make a useful business man. He sent immediately and called him back. He gave him an humble situation in his establishment. From that he rose by degrees, till he became the principal partner in the concern, and eventually a man of immense wealth and the chief banker in Paris. So much for good careful habits.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..............1.00
For a single copy 3 months..............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months..15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months...22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

For the Crisis.

Time Hastens.

Time hastens on, ye longing saints,
Then raise your voices high,
And magnify that holy word
Which speaks redemption nigh.

Not many years their course shall run,
Not many mornings rise,
Ere we behold fair Canaan's land,
With unbeclouded eyes.

Then bless the Lord, my soul,
His promise bear in mind,
Forget not all his benefits,
He is to all so kind.

He pardons all our sins,
Prolongs our feeble breath;
He healeth our infirmities,
And saves our souls from death.

Then come, ere life expire,
Send down thy power to save,
For who shall sing thy name in death,
Or praise thee in the grave?

For the Crisis.

Discourse

On the death of Sister Mary S. Fike, preached Dec. 2d, 1860, at Bone Prairie, by Eld. S. A. Chaplin.

"For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers; our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding."—1 Chron. 29: 15.

This is not the place of the saints' rest. The faithful of all ages have been pointed forward, by the Spirit, to an inheritance lying beyond the drear deserts of this present world. Abraham, the friend of God, and Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him to the same covenanted possession, sojourned in the land of promise itself as in a strange country; dwelling in moving tents, and passing from place to place, trusting the unfailing word that pledged a "heavenly country," and "a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Moses refused all the allurements and honors of royalty, and cheerfully chose "to suffer afflictions with the people of God, rather than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; having respect to the recompense of reward." David felt himself a sojourning stranger in Salem's regal courts, on the royal throne of Israel. He looked beyond the typical history of his people. Egyptian bondage was an apt emblem of the sinner's miserable condition; the scenes of service and trial in the wilderness, of the church in this present world; and Canaan, of the future inheritance in God's kingdom, beyond the dark, deep, river of death. As types are shadowy, and evanescent, his prophetic eye foresaw the coming desolation of all that constituted the glory of earthly Israel. "Jerusalem in heaps—the holy and beautiful house burned with fire, the bodies of its inhabitants, a prey to the beasts of the earth, and the fowls of heaven, their blood poured out like water, and the mourning captives bewailing the desolations of Zion by the rivers of Babylon, while their harps hung silent on the willows"—and he longed for the permanency of an eternal home. When contemplating the brevity of life,—that a hand-breadth would span his days, and a line of comparative nothingness, his years, he yearned for unending existence.

The stipulated blessings of the new covenant are also prospective. "I am not of this world," was the emphatic declaration of the great Captain of salvation; "My kingdom is not of this world," is the motto on the gospel banner; and "Ye are not of this world," is the badge of the christian soldier. Said a celebrated modern chieftain, to his invincible legions, whose fiery energy rivaled the indomitable prowess of those ancient warriors, who carried Rome's victorious eagles to the ends of the world:—"Soldiers! in recompense of the love you may show your country, I offer you hunger, thirst, cold, war and death,—who accepts the terms, let him follow me!" and every noble-hearted Italian fell into line. "In the world ye shall have tribulation," said a greater than Guiseppe Garibaldi; "Ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake," said Jesus Messiah; and he set losses, crosses, privations, prisons, racks, nameless tortures, and deaths, with cruel mockings and scourgings, before the christian soldier: "Whoso is willing to forsake father and mother, brother and sister, wife and children, and lay down his life, let him take up his cross and follow me!" And a host mightier than ever rallied after the standard of earth's proudest conquerors, have forsaken all to the heart most dear, and waded through floods of tears, and rivers of blood to an agonizing death, to show how powerless is "death or life, or angels, or principalities, or powers, things present, or things to come, height or depth, or any other creature, to separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Though this bush has burned for ages, it has never been consumed. This people that "has fallen by sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days," still exists. Christ's church, is deathless. That "the disciple may be like his Master, and the servant like his Lord," afflictions are bequeathed to the believer. "Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his name's sake." Accordingly it has been the experience of each humble follower of the "Man of sorrows," that this world is a "wilderness of wo." From "the poor of this world," God chooses many "heirs of the kingdom." A multitude travel through hunger and thirst, —through cold and nakedness,—in the mazes of pinching poverty, to gain incalculable and enduring riches. That a son of opulence now and then may be saved, God wings his wealth, and makes the loser "rich in faith," and bestows a title to joint-heirship with his Son to an "incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance." How natural is the love of approbation; but instead of "being highly esteemed among men," God gives to some lofty spirits the privilege of becoming the "offscouring of all things" in this life, that he may make them the "angel equals" in the world to come. From the votary of pleasure and fashion he takes "the robes of purple and fine linen," and the "sumptuous fare every day," and clothes him with the beggar's rags, and feeds him with the "bread of sorrow, and the water of affliction," that he may one day wear "white robes," and "eat of the tree of life" and drink the stream that gladdens the city of God. Surely earth is a "vale of tears" all the journey through to the "sacramental host of God's elect"; not only has "sin entered into the world, but death by sin," and sooner or later all fall victims to the "king of terrors." His barbed arrow once pierced the heart of an idolized young prince, and the royal father exclaims in bitter grief—"O my son Absalom! My son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O, Absalom, my son, my son!" Another princely child, in a still later age, finds a grave beneath the surges of the deep, deep sea; and England's crown, the honors of its proud and stately court; the beauty of the young and fair, the festal bowl, and the melody of the minstrel's harp, are all nothing. A load of grief crushed the father's heart and a veil of sorrow always covered the monarch parent's face—

"He never smiled again!"

But a heathen poet long ago has said:—

"Pale death with equal foot strikes wide the door
Of royal halls, and hovels of the poor."*

The terror-crowned comes to every household. One day, the kind husband and father ceases all labors and cares for "the loved ones at home," and leaves a loving wife, and trusting child, disconsolate mourners, amid the conflicts and calamities of life—the one "to weep a widow's woes"—the other—to shed an orphan's hot tears.

Another day the grim-visaged monarch of the underworld, invades the unbroken band of another household. This time his ice-fingers clasp the fibres of the mother's heart; its warm currents congeal—and—stand still forever! Then there is "lamentation, and mourning, and wo," and an oft-visited grave-hillock is long moistened with the dews that exhale from the smitten heart. There comes an empty coffin along the shrub-lined path, and through the opened door. 'Tis sent for the father's hope and stay, and the fond mother's doating pride: a son with folded hands, and closed and tearless eye, is dressed in the habiliments that are never changed for fashion's beck, or summer's heat or winter's cold. His profound sleep demands the noiseless quiet of the narrow bed, and sympathising friends place the unsorrowing head to repose on the dreamless pillow,—and, "weep with those who weep, and mourn with those who mourn." See that long line that "darkens all the way." How sorrowfully it wends onward with measured tread, to—

"Where heaves the turf, in many a mouldering heap."

That hearse bears the jewel whose love-lit smile sent the sunlight of joy into every heart. The "effacing fingers" have darkened the radiancy of the lustrous eye, blanched bloom and beauty from the rosy cheek, and wreathed with paleness the majestic brow. Quenched is the sparkling of those rayless eyes, and faded those beauties like "the opening rose," "till the heavens be no more." When the "broken band" comes back from "the place of graves" a daughter is left to dwell "in the land of darkness as darkness itself: and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness." "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning. Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not." Why those passionate outbursts of despair? Those tiny forms are the miniatures of man that are rifled from maternal claspings, to fill those little chambers that are everywhere builded in the "house prepared for all living." Those mothers are weeping for the "infant of days,"—the flower-bud that was blasted before the "bloom ripened"—and—oh,—

"A mother's love is nature's feeling;
A mother's grief, o'erwhelming, killing."

The church itself is only on the sojourn in this present world. A little congregation walk together through all the joys and sorrows incident to the christian's course. With rapture they welcome the believing, repentant, sinner to the ordinances and fellowship of the house of God. They attend the follower of the Lamb to the baptismal stream,—give him a place at the table where the consecrated loaf and cup call up tearful remembrances of One whose "love was stronger than death"; and with songs of joy, and prayers of faith, they together march on through the desert's wastes toward the "promised land." Anon one departs, and a harp of Zion is unstrung and a "sweet singer of Israel" fallen. Soon another is missed from the assembly of the saints, and a voice of "effectual fervent prayer" no longer leads in worship at the throne of grace. Another goes—a son of exhortation no more tells of victory and eternal triumphs "when the King of kings comes." Another, and another descend to the tomb; till all the once praying voices, the once hymning tongues, are silent as their stone mementos.

Where are the churches that heard Peter, Paul, James and John? Where those that read epistles penned by apostolic hands? Where are all the martyr saints that lived in dens and caves, that pined in prisons, and met death in every horrid shape? Where all those noble reformers that gave God's blessed Bible to a sin-benighted world? Where those that praised, and prayed, and taught our childish lispings to repeat—"Our Father which art in heaven" —sweet prayer that Jesus taught? In fine, where are those that assembled with us a few short years ago? Churches of the apostolic age—of the martyr ages—of our own age—where are you? Gone, all gone. "Our fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?"—Where are Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Sarah, Rebekah and Leah? All in the cave of Machpelah in the field of Ephron. And the loved Rachel was buried on the way as Jacob journeyed, between Bethel and Ephrath. The prophets told of the kingdoms' rise and ruin,—of Jesus' sufferings and glory,—then were "gathered to their fathers." The apostles carried the message of "redeeming grace and dying love" to the ends of the earth,—then laid down their lives, and "slept in Jesus."

Death has scattered our own loved membership. One sleeps where Canadian snows whiten half the year—others, here and there, on the meandering branches of the "Father of waters,"—on the "prairies of the West,"—and the loved sister we now mourn has her grave amid the solitudes of the Great American Desert.

"She was the loved of all, yet none
O'er her lone bed may weep!"

But what hope has sustained the sojourning pilgrim from Eden's exiled Abel downward to these last lonely watchers who wait the dawning of the cloudless day when the Sun of Righteousness shall shine? One theme has enraptured all hearts, and tuned countless tongues to chanting lyrics such as Grecian or Roman bard never sung. "God is the God of the living." God is also the God of his people, and they are dead. Hence, they all must live again. Death must be nullified, that immortality may be triumphant. There will be a resurrection from the dead. Resurrection! How cheering the sound to the dying saint. How dreadful dying, how drear the grave, to the desert-wandering pilgrims, were there no waking from the night of death. Sin has imprisoned the "children of God" in the cells of mortality. But Christ holds the keys of those dreary dungeons. Death, in his mighty gatherings, has taken the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty" from every passing generation. But soon will his march of desolations be arrested by the "voice of the archangel and the trump of God." Then "green grassy graveyards and tombs of marble," must restore the treasured trust. All those disease-wasted, corruptible bodies that went to dust in all the weakness and deformity of sin-poisoned nature, start from the earth at the call the life-inspiring voice of the Son of God;—indestructible, ever-living, glorified forms, "fashioned like Jesus' glorious body," energized with the deathless vitality of that Spirit which animates, with the "power of an endless life," the "Lord of glory." How has language been taxed to tell of the glory of conquests won

"In battle's stern, magnificent array."

But what are all earthly achievements compared with the redemption of the countless hosts that will be brought up from death and the grave! There is righteous Abel from the long sleep of six thousand years, during which, time and death had drowned all human history in oblivion's deeps;—so that to him a dying pang and a moment's forgetfulness seemed only to separate an altar of sacrifice and a crown of life. One side the state of deep unconsciousness were the lost Eden, the exiled parents, and the murderer, Cain;—the other, are the "great multitude" in their "white robes," the "innumerable company of angels," and the Lord on the "throne of his glory."

Noah, who saw the world before the flood go to ruins; the one that now is emerge from the depths of a shoreless ocean; now is permitted to enter the "world to come" that will never be buried under the surges of a world-wide sea again. There are Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, from the cave of Machpelah, ready at last to inherit the land forever. They once dwelt in it as strangers, obtained a sepulchre in its sacred limits in which to pass the night of death, but now come to enjoy the covenanted possession as their heavenly home. Moses leaves his hidden grave in the valley of Beth-Peor, to enjoy the "recompense of reward." The prophets that foretold the Lord Messiah's reign now enter the kingdom that shall never be destroyed.

Paul from the "unclothed" state is vested in robes of "everlasting wear." Peter now receives that "crown of glory that fadeth not away," from Him whose throbbing temples once were wreathed with a diadem of thorns. The Twelve are all risen to sit on the thrones "in the regeneration." The malefactor that prayed with dying breath, "Lord, remember me," leaves sinning, crucifixion and the grave behind for blooming paradise. See, from every clime the "children of the resurrection" come. From Alpine rocks, where crushed and mangled martyrs were hurled down frightful steeps into graves of ice and snow at the precipices' foot; from Smithfield stakes and flames; from torturing deaths in dungeons deep and dark, where Satan's conclaves racked millions of God's elect, and gloated over agonies and expiring shrieks,—the martyred throngs come to exchange their horrible sufferings for the unalloyed transports of life everlasting. When expiring nature was dissolved, intensest anguish strung every fibre, till the distorted countenance at length settled into the solemn placidity of death; now the new-born life lights up the heavenly countenance with cherubic smiles. The "power of his resurrection" even stays the progress of disease, and snatches the victim from the very brink of the opening tomb. The voice that wakes the dead is heard by the expiring saint, and, in a moment, he is made well and immortal. Decrepit age is electrified into a youth of incorruptibility. The down-trodden slave leaves toil and tears, lashings and cursings, to rise and meet the great Emancipator. And all the living saints are changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye."

From Judah's hills and vales, from Afric's desert sands, from Greenland's ice and Siberia's snow, from the land of the date and the palm, from Europe's tombs, from Columbia's graves, from sea-girt isles, and from the low beds of the sea, they come—they come! "What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" and "We are your rejoicing, even as ye are also ours in the day of the Lord Jesus," was the language of the apostle. Here the parent and child, here the brother and sister meet in realms of glory.

"And they never will be parted any more."

Paul here meets the saints of Rome, of Corinth, of Thessalonica, and of all the other churches where he once preached, to all "be forever with the Lord" together. O glorious consummation! O great redemption! The saved of all ages, of all generations, of all congregations, "of every kindred, tongue and people," are all present. Here is Jesus' universal church. Here is "The General Assembly" of the firstborn. Glorious spectacle! The redeemed in the glorified state, all in white robes—not one guilt-stained sinner there. Jesus now beholds the purchase of his blood. The great scheme of redemption is now completely evolved. All the mysteries and intricacies of this world of trial are solved. How changed are all things. "The inhabitant shall no more say, I am sick," and "there shall be no more death." Disease wastes no more, and death itself has died. The "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away," becomes henceforth their home, where "tears are wiped from all faces." No whitening marbles tell of decay and dissolution in the land of restitution, when God has made all things new. Well, till that day the sojourners of the "church of the living God" must fill up what remains of suffering for Jesus' sake.

Till then the dead must sleep in darkness and silence. Yet that repose is undisturbed by all the cares and perplexities that vex the living. There "the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary are at rest," and the "intervening ages pass rapidly over those that sleep in dust." No time-keeping index points out the fleeting hours to the "lack-lustre" eye; no bell gives warning of the "lapse of time" to the "dull, cold ear of death"; no ever-swinging pendulum counts off duration's points; and heaven's circling lights no longer measure days, or months, or years, to the locked perceptions of the dwellers under ground. The ebb and flow of the busy sea of life rolls above them, but with them,—'tis silence all—'tis stillness all! The outbursts of joy, or wailings of grief, the clamors of war, or the triumphs of peace, send no echoes down to stir emotions there. Whether prosperity gladden the world, or adversity saddens the nations; whether dearest friends and most cherished cause come to honor, or come to nothing, the pallid sleeper remains unaffected. Though successive generations are brought and placed beside them; though the graven monuments that "date their exit and chronicle the passing ages" all crumble, still the slumberers "note not the long interval;"

"Even earthquakes rock unheedingly away!"

The centuries of silence and inanimation glide by like the short watches of a summer's night; and the solemnities of judgment stand in close proximity to the dying bed. So close, that the darkened eye seems hardly closed on the weeping circle of broken-hearted friends, till it opens on all the splendors of the day of God.

"O! 'tis but just a step between
This mortal state, and that unseen
Abode of myriads blest."

The brightness of coming glory has often shone so luminously into the valley of death, that the expiring saint has looked across the intermediate state into realms of blessedness beyond. Jesus and the holy angels have at times seemed very near to the raptured vision of the dying child of God; and the anguish of suffering has been lost in the ecstasy of the heavenly prospect. Stephen's eye penetrated heaven, and he welcomed the storm of stones, praying for his persecutors. Paul caught a glimpse of "unutterable things," and cheerfully entered the "unclothed" state that "mortality might be swallowed up of life." The eye of faith has discerned the "exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and the dying martyr has rejoiced in burning fires. Death is indeed a dark valley, but narrow to the follower of Jesus. Its sleep is very deep, but very short to those who "die in the Lord." All true christians will soon be on the other side of the river, in the heavenly Canaan, with palms of victory, and crowns of glory, to live forevermore. Soon, if faithful, we shall meet our Redeemer, and see our absent friends to part no more. Till then we must bid them farewell. We must say to them whom death has taken from our households, and from the households of our nearest friends on earth, FAREWELL! Farewell, father and mother, farewell, brother and sister, farewell, son and daughter, farewell, innocent babe, farewell, dear christian friend, till Jesus comes!

As a church, we must say concerning the prized sister, whose death we this day commemorate, farewell, Sister Fike! We remember well when we attended you to the baptismal stream, and saw you buried in the likeness of Jesus' death. We remember when you met us in the house of prayer and praise. We remember when you joined with us in showing forth the sufferings of our dying Lord. We remember all your kindness to the household of faith. And we sorrow, when we reflect that we have met in this world for the last time. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope. We trust that thy repose is that sweet "sleep in Jesus" from which none ever wakes to weep.

Then sleep, sister, till the church fulfills its mission in a sin-ruined world. Sleep, till earthly glory departs forever. Sleep, till republics are all revolutionized, and monarchies all subverted. Sleep, till crowns and diadems are all trampled in the dust. Sleep, till the parting skies reveal the great white throne and Him that sits thereon with opened books! Sleep, till the archangel's voice shall summon forth the "blessed and holy that have part in the first resurrection." Then wake in the likeness of the glorified Savior to die no more. Wake, to join the "general assembly and church of the First-Born, whose names are written in heaven." Wake, to enter with them into the "rest that remaineth for the people of God." Wake, to "be forever with the Lord." Amen.

Effects of Faith.

[TO SRS. ANNIE GOULD AND BLANCHARD.]

I felt truly glad to hear your testimony of the healing power of God, in raising you from a sick bed to health. I am your sister and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. James says, in the last days, while the rich are heaping their treasures together, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, even at the doors; then the sick may call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick; and if they have committed sins, they shall be forgiven. I was healed of the palsy by calling on the Elders Damman and Colby, and anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. I had been afflicted eight years and a half with that disease, and was wholly healed and have not had it since. Blessed be the name of the Lord for his preserving power in Jesus Christ; let his name be magnified. I was at Bro. Emerson's in Concord, when I was healed, during a tent meeting on the 17th day of Sept., 1853, after hearing a thrilling discourse by Bro. John Howell, on the abomination of desolation. Feeling my infirmity so great, the word kept following me, Call the elders and be anointed in the name of the Lord. Thanks be to God that I obeyed the gentle teaching of his Spirit, that led me to the Lamb of God, our blessed physician.

When I was smitten with that disease, I was paralyzed on my right hand, and instantly it went to my head and down my right side to my foot. I was unable to speak plain, or to use my hand for some time. My memory was greatly impaired; indeed, I was a poor invalid. I felt sick enough to die. One evening I was listening to the reading of the 118th Psalm, and when they came to the 17th verse—"I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of God," it impressed me powerfully. I believed in my heart that I should be raised from that bed of languishing and sickness to declare the works of the Lord. I fully realized it when I was healed. I never wanted to make a covenant with death, for he was the last enemy of our blessed Lord. I ever want to live and declare his works. I made my case known to Bro. Damman, and asked him to anoint my hand and pray for me. Soon after he began to pray, I felt a gentle, living heat on my hand, moving round and round upon it, till it reached my wrist; then it entered the joint and there it moved faster around and increased in strength of heat till it had done its work, and moved slowly up my arm; before it reached my elbow I said, Lord, I believe, help my unbelief. Then it entered the joint at the elbow, went its rounds with greater power and heat, than at the wrist, then it moved up to my shoulder and commenced its work there also, and then moved up to my head and down my right side in like manner; and then Bro. Damman concluded praying and Bro. Colby commenced praying, till it reached my foot; then the heat was powerful, and living heat, such heat as I never before felt, gentle, calm, heavenly, quieting every nerve, and taking away all my sins, so that I felt as I did when God first forgave my sins for Christ's sake. All things appeared new. A new and living atmosphere that looked clear as glass, new health, new strength, new confidence in God renewed by the Holy Ghost. I could enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh.

I had not been out to the evening meetings. That evening I went, and the sister that went with me (who now sleeps out in the far West,) said, "Hallelujah to Jesus! I know you are healed for I have dragged you along all the time since this meeting began, but now you are a step before me, did you know it? I cannot keep up with you." And when we returned from meeting coming up the hill where the tent stood, she had to run to overtake me. Yes, my feet were like hinds' feet. I walked upon the high places. The evening was cool and the tent was raised a little from the ground, the air drawing under it, and I sat on the end of the seat next to the walk in the middle of the tent. I was cold on my left side all the evening, but my right side was burning with heat. Bless God for this living witness. These words flowed into my mind and followed me everywhere: "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you: and ye need not that any man teach you: but the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in it."

I left my testimony in that meeting for Jesus, in honor to his name. And I am not ashamed of repeating this testimony before the whole world. No, no, Jesus is my life, he keeps me from day to day. He has healed me by his stripes he received in Pilate's hall. O, what a price he has paid! Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; and was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities; and the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. O astonishing love, and mercy toward us that we might be saved by his power!

Look one moment at the sufferings of the Son of God! After the Passover, his agony in the garden of Gethsemane became so intense that an angel came from heaven to strengthen him, while the bloody sweat rolled down his cheeks and dropped on the ground. The soothing and encouraging words of the angel strengthened him in a holy submission to his Father's will. Just as he had received strength to suffer, Judas appeared with a band of ruffians to apprehend him and bear him away to the High Priest. They reviled and mocked him all the way there, and left in their care during the night, offered him a thousand insults. There they blindfolded the blessed Lamb of God, and smote him on his face and spit on him. And Peter having followed into the judgment hall to see the end, upon very slight temptations, thrice wickedly, and at last with horrid oaths, denied in his presence that he ever had known him. O! how he was oppressed, afflicted, and wounded in the house of his friends. Judas had sold him for thirty pieces of silver, and Peter had denied him. The next morning the council early assembled and demanded if he was the Son of God! He replied, he was. The judges cried out that he deserved death for his blasphemy. Then they carried him bound to Pontius Pilate that he might ratify their sentence and give orders for its execution. He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb. Pilate sent him to Herod. And to the questions of Herod, Jesus answered nothing, he is dumb, he opened not his mouth. Herod to express his contempt of him, after mocking him a while, sent him back to Pilate, dressed as a mock king. Pilate, after permitting the soldiers to annoy him in purple, and crown him with thorns as a sovereign, caused him to be scourged. The dear Lamb of God was stripped, had his hands tied down to a low post, and then upon his bended back received forty lashes save one.

Dear sisters, that was done that we might be healed by his stripes and enjoy health. I hope we never shall be ashamed to own and declare it, for his wonderful mercy toward us. The Dragon power which stood before the woman to destroy this holy child Jesus, as soon as he was born, now in all its fury and rage, while they had the victim in their hands, applied the scourge to his naked back with the vengeance of demons in human shape. A few lashes break the skin, and the out-gushing blood is seen running down his sides and dropping on the floor, and the long furrows are seen on his back. O! what a mass of gory flesh is seen on the blessed Lamb of God! And they led him bleeding away to crucify him on a cross, faint for the loss of blood by the scourge, and the sufferings he had undergone in the garden; and the fatigue of the preceding night, having been hurried from place to place and obliged to stand the whole time of his trial; and hear their cruel mockings, smitings, and revilings, with malignant slanders, while they crowned him with thorns. With the maliciousness of devils, they commanded him to take up the heavy cross and bear it along, while his body was weltering in blood, and the anguish of his soul exceeding sorrowful,—he sank under the load. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which bewailed and lamented him. And Jesus turning unto them, said, "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me."

Who could have borne this but the Son of God? Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. He was strengthened by the angel in the garden to bear it all, in view of the glory that should follow his death and resurrection. And then they came to Calvary and nailed him to the cross, and raised him up for a shameful spectacle to look at. His clothes were taken from him, and his lacerated body exposed to every beholder. The blood running from his hands down his arms, and from his feet and back, he must hang there six long hours and hear the insulting language of his murderers, railing and reviling him. "Look! all ye that pass by, was there ever sorrow like my sorrow?" O! ye desponding souls that are sick and sorrowful, look and live! As Moses lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of God be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish. In the wilderness they were bitten by fiery serpents; but we have been bound by Satan with sickness, and we have looked up at his stripes and were healed. Blessed be his adorable name! The name of the Lord is a strong tower; we run into it and are saved. May we keep the word of his patience, that he may keep us from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. "For even hereunto were we called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps: who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously; who his own self bore our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed."

We must bear the tongue of slander if we would suffer with him, and endure it patiently for his name's sake; for he bore all this for us that we might be saved by his power. To have a part with his sufferings, we must eat his flesh and drink his blood, and receive the reproach that broke his heart, that we may be sharers of his glory.

Keep that which you have attained and let no man take your crown. And pray always that you may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man, is my desire toward you and all that have run unto his name to be healed. Endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, till the opening heavens reveal him in great power and glory, to be admired in all them that believe in him. Yours, looking for the everlasting kingdom of God when Jesus comes. D. TAYLOR.

Charity.

There is great lack of this among us, as people professing godliness, especially those who profess that they are waiting for translation. This great lack opens to our mind the words of the Psalmist,—"Every day they wrest my words." If we wrest God's word our next step tends to darkness rather than light. That heavenly influence spoke through Peter of the same perversion,—"The unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction." Nine tenths of people wrest this word (charity) from its right meaning. It may be the means of shutting them away from translation at the coming of Christ. Let us examine the real meaning of this word. Charity, (alms). Charity, (eleemosyna, love.) Charity, (liberalitate, a grant or gift.) Here we have just what the word means.

My Bro., are you a pretended minister of the gospel, and stand before your people telling them it means fellowship toward mankind, when a school-boy ten years of age will read a better and more correct meaning from your lexicon, much more from the word of God? When will men cease to peddle lies from the consecrated desk? Reader! If you are a preacher of any thing, and mean to have translating faith, make up your mind immediately to never try to preach again, until you can give the lexical meaning of words right; if you cannot give the Bible meaning as God's words represent things.

But to the text. The first meaning.

1. Charity,—alms. What kind of alms is this? David says,—"His righteousness is to such as keep his covenant, and those that remember his commandments to do them." "Shall the throne have fellowship with iniquity?" "What communion hath light with darkness?" Paul says, "When they perceived the grace that was given unto me." What was the gift here given or granted to Paul? It was the true charity from God, without which, he said, a man would become a "sounding brass," etc.

2. Charity,—love. What says Paul about this love? "That Christ may dwell in your hearts, by faith (true love or charity, that holy influence from God,) that ye being rooted and grounded in love."

3. Charity,—a grant. A grant is the same as a gift. It is something granted to man from God. I do not know of but one promise of a special gift from the Lord Jesus when he went away, and that was the Holy Spirit which should lead into all truth; and that is the true principle of charity, faith, and love of God, which every man must receive from the Father, in order to draw him to the great fountain of all good.

We will now consider a Biblical meaning of this charity. Paul: "Above all things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."—Col. 3:14. Jesus says, "I have given (a grant) them the words which thou gavest me, and they have received them." Here the word of God may be called the bond (that is, the written instrument of perfectness.) But all the written instruments in the world would do no good if they were not signed and sealed. What, then, is the signer of holy writ? You will readily say it must be the Holy Spirit of God. "For the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Christ says: "If ye love me, (that is, with your own spirit), keep my commandments;" and, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the spirit of truth." Here again is the real charity from God, which Paul said was above every thing else. Is not this the very time when we must be putting on that bond, and keeping the commands of Christ, that we may have the truth written on our hearts by the eternal Spirit, which in a short time shall quicken the dead saints, and change the living!

Brethren! the ten kings are receiving power with the beast:—"They shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." What says the eighth head of the beast? He now declares before the whole world that the power of the woman (of Rev. 17) must come to an end. Let us arise and declare the last message of God to this world, for the time is at hand,—awake to righteousness and sin not. B. H. COUCH.

Revival.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 24th, 1860.

A protracted religious meeting has been held every evening for the past two weeks, in the Second Advent Church, on Centre street, which has been attended by a large number of the citizens of this city. Elder M. Grant of Boston, and Elder Preble of this city, have done most of the preaching. Last evening the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to about seventy-five individuals, many of whom were new converts. Every christian, of whatever denomination, was invited to partake of the sacrament. The house was filled in every part with an intelligent and attentive audience, who gave the closest attention to the solemn scene. Thirty new converts have been made to the doctrines of the "second advent of the Son of man," and have publicly professed religion. Many more are seriously inquiring, "what they shall do to be saved?" Mr. Grant is an able and instructive preacher, and his efforts in this city have been successful. Mr. Preble, the resident pastor of the church, is well known as an able and sincere man, who labors incessantly for the good of his people. The meetings will be continued this week, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, afternoon and evening of each day. All are invited to come and hear, "without money and without price."—[Cor. Man. Mirror.]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 9, 1861.

To our Correspondents and Contributors.

To those who have so faithfully labored to enrich the columns of the Crisis with the interesting contributions from their pens, we would say, your efforts are appreciated, and we hope all will engage with renewed zeal in the glorious work of trying to arouse a careless world and stupid church, before the Bridegroom appears. We need a host of short, pithy articles, baptized with prayer, just such as you can write. Our supply is rather scanty, just at present. People are becoming more and more anxious to read the productions like those from your pens. Seize your rich thoughts, fasten them on paper, and let them come flying to us like doves with messages of mercy to a dying world, that we may scatter them far and wide among the thousands of our readers. But few are conscious of what they are capable of doing in this way. Come, take the pen, sit down at once, and begin. You may thus be the instrument in the hands of the Lord, of awakening some sinner, and comforting many saints.

We would remind those who preach the gospel, that the churches are especially anxious to read a word from them. A large number of our readers have no other preaching but what they get through the Crisis. Come, brethren, send them a few words of comfort. Please do. We entreat in behalf of the scattered ones. Send some articles on the coming of Christ, giving the plain evidences that his second advent is now emphatically at hand. They would do much good at the present time. Or, give us something on practical christianity, home religion;—that which is pure and undefiled; or any thing else that will "feed the flock of God." Let us have a ready and hearty response. The interests of the cause of truth are making an imperious demand for the greatest possible efforts on the part of every one of its lovers and defenders. Let not another moment pass before an active resolution is formed, the execution of which, shall tell with effective power on the enemies of the cross of Christ. A little while and all is over forever.

Castleton.

We are now (Jan. 2nd., '61,) at the happy home of Bro. Sherman in C. enjoying a very sweet peace of mind in the Lord. We arrived on Saturday, the 29th ult., and though weary, we were much rested in a good prayer meeting. One requested prayers, who had been much troubled with Spiritualism. Her husband also spoke, expressing an earnest wish to be in the right way, rejoicing that his companion was anxious to be a christian. He afterwards informed us that he was a member of a church in the place, but on account of the cold formality therein, he had become discouraged, and had sought for satisfaction in the winding labyrinths of Spiritualism, but found none. He is now resolved to take the Bible as his only rule of faith and practice. The truth in that holy book is an effectual remedy for all the delusions of the day.

Sabbath morning at 9 1-2 o'clock, we met again, as usual, for a love-feast, and had a very heavenly scene. It was a soul-cheering place. The Lord has truly done a great work in this place during the last ten months, and it has not stopped yet. The watch-word is—onward. A large and attentive audience was present all day to listen to the evidences of the speedy coming of Christ. There are many here, who can say with a full heart, "Come Lord Jesus," and "come quickly." They long for the day of his coming, as does every faithful christian.

Monday evening, the last one of the year 1860, was a season of deep interest. We commenced our meeting about 6 o'clock with a prayer meeting, which continued a little over an hour, when we listened to an interesting discourse from Bro. M. Batchelor, pastor of the Rutland church. He was obliged to leave at 9 o'clock and return home, on account of his sick son, whose health is continually declining. We then had the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which was an occasion of much comfort to the saints. This was followed by a love-feast which continued till after 11 o'clock, and was a time of refreshing from the Lord. Many were much strengthened and comforted. It seemed as though the hardest heart would melt at some of the thrilling testimonies of those who, a few short months since, were among Satan's most faithful subjects, but are now happy in the Lord, with their families. We could not help exclaiming, "What hath God wrought!"

We preached a short sermon, and closed the year in silent prayer on our knees before the Lord. It was a solemn, yet glorious scene, that will be long remembered by those present. One rose for prayers, determined to be a christian, notwithstanding bitter opposition from a bosom companion. Thus we closed the old year and began the new, rejoicing in the Lord, determined, if spared another year, to spend it better than any one in the past.

Tuesday evening, Jan. 1st, we met again, and had one of the best meetings we have ever had in this place. Fourteen came forward for prayers, resolved to be christians. Others are under deep conviction, and we think they will soon yield to Christ.

We think the church in C. has never stood so well as at the present time. Many said, "I never loved Jesus as I do now, nor felt so determined before to be a whole hearted christian." Praise the Lord. "The best of all is, God is with us."

Good News.

We learn from Bro. Couch, pastor of the church in New Bedford, Mass., that the work of the Lord is onward in their meetings. Some twenty-five have been converted or reclaimed, and others are seeking.

Bro. Preble, pastor of the church in Concord, N. H., writes the revival is still progressing there, with bright prospects in the future. Every child of the Lord should be actively engaged in trying to bring sinners to Christ. We do not show the spirit of our Master unless we are continually making efforts for the present and eternal welfare of those around us.

"Ho! reapers of life's harvest,
Why stand with rusted blade,
Until the night draws round thee,
And day begins to fade?
Why stand ye idle, waiting
For reapers more to come?
The golden morn is passing,
Why sit ye idle, dumb?"

Let every christian gird on his armor, and engage in the last great struggle between truth and error with an earnestness worthy of a cause so noble. Let none be daunted at the sight of the finger of scorn from a wicked world or a formal church steeped in pleasure and enslaved by fashion; but, like one worthy of the name of christian, let him defend in all places the cause of his blessed Master, who will soon return to gather all the faithful.

"Oh! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad;
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God."

We need live men for these times. The embattled legions of the enemies of our King are all awake, sparing no effort to accomplish their wicked purposes. Shall we sleep in such an hour? Come, let us

"Mount up the heights of wisdom,
And crush each error low;
Keep back no words of knowledge
That human hearts should know.
Be faithful to thy mission,
In service of thy Lord;
And then a golden chaplet
Shall be thy just reward."

State of Europe.

Every movement in Europe indicates a preparation for a terrible conflict between the people and their oppressors, as well as between the great powers themselves. The political earthquake and volcano are about to convulse and bury the nations in awful ruin. The war clouds of revolution look more than ever threatening. They are also hanging over our nation and ready to burst upon it in terrible grandeur. Some idea of the state of Europe may be formed from the following extract from a Paris correspondent, under date of Dec. 14th, '60, He says:—

"It is evident that the great Powers of Europe are preparing for a coming struggle. As I said in my last, England is arming in the most formidable manner the ports of Corfu and Malta, while the already impregnable fortress of Gibraltar is being rendered doubly so by replacing the heavy cannons that lined its ramparts with Armstrong guns of a calibre that surpasses what we have hitherto regarded as the most formidable weapons of destruction. Austria has done all that could be done, and is now on a war footing such as must inevitably force upon her war or bankruptcy. France is, to my certain knowledge, steadily preparing for any emergency, and her naval forces are being most effectually organized and increased. She has at this moment the most serviceable navy in the world in case of war; better equipped and manned, and really more formidable than that of Great Britain. The armed or blindee frigates are a great success, as they are swift, easily managed, and proof against any ordinary shot. Some three or four of them are nearly ready for sea, and in a few months the government will have at least eight frigates in armor, ready for immediate and most effective service. The army is being organized on a footing of efficiency such as no military leader in Europe ever before witnessed, and means of transport, swift and comfortable, are even now being devised by the Emperor and his counsellors.

Russia is, as all Europe now knows, better prepared for war than she ever was, while in Germany an uneasy feeling is dominant. Why is all this? Because Austria will not listen to any proposals as to the sale or cession of Venetia, and because all foresee that in a few weeks the Italians will attack her forces in that province; because all feel that Hungary is at last ready for action, as is evinced by the audacity of the rebellious acts of her people, and finally because even in Poland a feeling of agitation, of revolutionary ardor is awakened."

It is evident, we think, that the battle of Armageddon is not far in the future. Let all be upon their watch-towers, waiting for the return of the Son of man.

☞ Idolatry may be a child of the imagination; but it is a child that has forgotten its parent. Idolatry is the worship of the visible. It mistakes forms for substances, symbols for realities. It is bodily sight and mental blindness—a doting on the outward, occasioned by the want of the poetic faculty. So that religion has suffered its most grievous injury, not from too much imagination but from too little.—Guesses at Truth.

For the Crisis.

The New Year.

The funeral knell of the old year has died away. The New Year emerges into life. While some are saluting their friends with a "Happy New Year," others are sorrowing over the past. The mother mourns the loss of her babe,—the husband his companion,—the child a parent,—there are many families that have had some tie broken the past year, and as they enter upon the new, the scenes of the past pass vividly before them. Some have the hope of the gospel to sustain them through future scenes,—others have no hope beyond this world, and refuse to be comforted,—while others are trusting to a false hope. The business man is mourning over his failures, and is planning new schemes for future success,—money is his God. Others have sailed down the stream of prosperity, and are seeking happiness from the amusements of earth—pause not, but rush madly on to ruin, unless, perchance, they are arrested in their downward course.

But how is it with the christian, as he stands upon the shore of the old year, ready to launch out into the new? The question arises, how has the past year been spent? Has it all been to the glory of God? Alas! as the past is scanned, many find sins and unfaithfulness to mourn over; but we read in the Word, "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins."

May this be a time, when all that believe we are living amid the closing scenes of earth, to confess and forsake sin; where discord and busy-bodies have scattered the lambs of the flock, may this be a time when the love of Jesus shall unite them together, and gather the lambs again into the fold.

As we look abroad over the land, we see much that indicates that we are living amid the last scenes of earth.—Darkness hovers over the land. A world is going down to death. Those that have seen the truth and embraced it as it has been unfolded to their view in all its beauty and glory, should be beacon lights before this ungodly world. Every child of God, however weak, has a work to do. We are all workers in the vineyard of the Lord.

Brethren and sisters, may we all commence the year with a strong determination that we will by the help of the Lord, do every known duty,—that we will seek a closer conformity to the example of our divine Master,—seek to know the will of our Father concerning us—arm ourselves for the conflict—march boldly forward beneath the standard of truth—live up to our high profession, and embrace each heavenly privilege;—get so imbued with the love of Jesus that we can take the poor sinner by the hand and point him to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world,—invite him to share the glories of the world to come. We have much to stimulate us to action. All is ours if we are faithful. A little while, and our sorrows end. Yet a little while and we shall dwell amid the unfolding glories of the world of light.

For the Crisis.

Human Creeds.

I had not realized until recently, how formidable a matter it is to run against a human creed. It does seem to elicit more wry faces and uneasy gestures among many who profess to be the Lord's, than a point-blank contradiction of a "thus saith the Lord"! And if after coming in contact with this "great Diana of the Ephesians," one takes the liberty to use the great battering ram of God's Word until every vestige of this magnificent goddess is leveled with the dust, he immediately hears a cry analagous to that of Micah's when the Danites took from him all his paraphernalia of worship. Said he, "Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the priest, and ye are gone away: and what have I more?" Please read the whole account in Judges 17th and 18th.

But are there not some good things contained in creeds? Yea, verily. Why then attempt their destruction? I do not recollect that our Savior ever did so, unless such creeds were likely to supplant Divine authority and thus make the commandments of God of none effect. Neither do we ever see him meddle with the peculiar manners and customs of the different classes of society with which he mingled, whether it were among elegant and refined courtiers, or the crude fishermen and tax-gatherers,—all, all were alike to him, providing their manners and customs did not conflict with the Word of God. But when these creed-folks found fault with his disciples for non-observance of their darling system, he immediately exculpates them, and then addressing not only his disciples, but "he called the multitude" and then gave them a special charge that every one should hear and understand the important saying he was about to utter. "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." But, says one, I cannot see why such importance should be attached to this saying, and why such a special charge to every one of the multitude that they understand it. It may appear thus to a superficial observer, but when we consider the circumstances that called out this declaration, it will be obvious that he used this as a powerful lever directly aimed at their darling creed which they appeared to hold as tenaciously dear as moderns do the natural immortality of man, and with arguments about as ostensible—not a word of proof in God's Word for either.

Let us for a moment glance briefly at the circumstances under which Christ uttered this declaration, as it will make the point more apparent. He had just held—if not a camp meeting, a great outdoor meeting, in which he had made a grand demonstration of his miraculous power by feeding the vast multitude with five loaves and two fishes; then immediately following this great meeting he gives Peter power to walk on the surging billows of the boisterous deep, which seemed to inspire the people with such faith in his miraculous power they immediately collect together all the diseased persons in "all the country round about," and he healed them; all of which seemed to awaken quite a revival interest, which evidently aroused the somnolent spirit of the Scribes and Pharisees of Jerusalem, and they make Jesus a call! And for what? In order to examine God's Word with him and see whether these things were so, and whether indeed he was the very Christ delineated in the prophetic Scriptures? This is the way they should have done, as they were the professed religious teachers of the people. They ought to have been sufficiently posted in the prophecies, to show whether he fulfilled the characteristics of the true Messiah. But instead of presuming to quote any thing from God's Word, to prove him an impostor, they have no hesitancy in manifesting their captiousness at once, by finding fault with his disciples because, forsooth, they had gone against their creed, or as they termed it, "the tradition of the elders," which was a ceremonial ablution of their hands just prior to partaking of each meal, and also of certain vessels, etc., made use of at their meals, which they made more binding than a "thus saith the Lord."

Let us now notice the manner our Savior disposed of these dignitaries of the church, who had waited on him, and see if our worldly prudence would not have dictated otherwise. When they accuse his disciples of transgressing the traditions of the elders, he immediately turns and accuses them of transgressing, not human traditions or creeds, but, the commandments of God! Then cites them to one so often reiterated in the Law that it should have stood out in bold relief; but they had twisted and turned it in their articles of faith, until they had made it of none effect. Then he boldly addresses them as "ye hypocrites"! then proceeds to tell them they were the very class designated in Isaiah's prophecy, and that they were so deeply steeped in this base sin, they had the impudence to think they could play the part of the hypocrite with God, they drew near him with their mouth but their heart was far from him! Then plainly tells them their worship was all in vain, because they teach for DOCTRINES, the COMMANDMENTS of men, instead of God's Word. What if they did claim a learned ministry, a large and respectable congregation, a great zeal in making proselytes, and that they were Moses' disciples, their worship was all, ALL in vain. By this time Christ feels apparently he had given these dignitaries the dressing they really needed; then, as if he would preserve not only his disciples but the multitude from the impositions of these gross pretenders, he called the multitude and made the declaration before named, that to eat with unwashen hands did not cause moral defilement; whereupon they were angry, but probably thought it best policy to conceal this moral virus, at least, from him who had so faithfully exposed them; but the disciples understood the matter and informed Jesus of the fact, whereupon Christ solemnly asserts, "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up."

So we can see here the end of human creeds and traditions; our heavenly Father will root them up! However tenderly and cautiously we may have nourished these human plants, and watered them with our tears, and replenished them with the valuable soil from our pockets, our heavenly Father will root them up! Why not then spend our money and our tears on something "that cannot be shaken" or "rooted up"? God's Word will never pass away or be rooted up! But now would not the more prudential have advised Christ to have pursued a different course? When these learned church dignitaries found fault with his disciples for non-observance of their rules, would they not have advised that he should have apologized somewhat for the crude manners of the Gallilean fishermen, and then whispered a word of caution in the ears of the disciples that they be as conciliatory as possible, that it would do them no injury to wash their hands even if they were not soiled, and thus suppress a world of unpleasant emotions? Why stir up such strife and anger for causes so trivial? But here is danger of God's Word being supplanted by the words of man, which fault will admit of no leniency. God is very jealous of his Word, and he utters awful denunciations against those who presume to add to, or diminish from it, or that make any human machinery more consequential!

For the Crisis.

Reply to Queries of "J. H."

I am requested by "J. H.," to answer the following questions:

1. Did Christ exist prior to his advent, as a separate person from the Father?

2. Will Christ always retain the body that he had when he left the earth?

3. If so, is not his first personality lost?

To the first two questions, I answer in the affirmative.

To the third, I answer in the negative. Before Christ's advent, he lived, but not in the flesh. After his advent he lived in the flesh. He changed his mode of living, but not his personality. By coming into the world in the seed of Abraham, he no more lost his personality, than will the saints lose theirs when they put on immortality. They will then live in another condition, but they will be the same persons. So Christ, when he came into this world, lived in another condition, yet he was the same person who was with the Father before the world was, and by whom the worlds were made. The one who "came down from heaven."

Jesus said, "What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before?" That is, where he was before he came down from heaven, for that is where he ascended. Before he came down, he was not the Son of Man, still he spake of himself as if he were the same person. When he became the Son of Man, or, as John has it, when he, the Word, became flesh, he became the last Adam; but he was the same person as when he had glory with the Father before the world was. Amen. J. S. WHITE.

An Antidote.

The tried christian should never dwell on his troubles. Trouble comes to furnish him with a message to the Lord, and to drive him out of his present state and condition: therefore many of the Lord's people have found great relief in trouble, by actively engaging in the Lord's service. My tried friend, go, if thou canst, to the chamber of the sick, and speak of Jesus to them. Go to the desolate home of the widow, and endeavor to dry her tears. Take her fatherless children by the hand, and speak loving words to them of a Father in heaven. Go to the poor laborer's cottage, where there are many wants and few comforts, and represent Jesus there, speaking of him and acting for him. Look at the sufferings of others, and try to relieve them. Look at the ignorance of others, and endeavor to instruct them. It is by doing good that we get good. Be active for thy Savior, and thou shalt be comforted by thy Savior. The way to increase sorrow is to dwell upon it; and the way to obtain relief from sorrow is to act for Jesus notwithstanding it. The action of fresh air on the nerves, the action of God's truth on the mind, and the action of another's sorrow on thy heart, will relieve, reanimate, and restore to comfort those who go forth as messengers of mercy; while those who confine themselves at home, dwelling on their griefs and woes, will continue depressed and sad. While, therefore, you rely on the Lord's promise, be active in the Lord's service, and energetic in the Lord's cause. "The hand of the diligent maketh rich; but the slothful soul shall suffer hunger." This is as true in spirituals as in temporals.—Strong Tower.

Correspondence.

From M. Cawkins.

BRO. GRANT:—I am very thankful to some unknown friend for the Crisis, of which I have received four numbers. I am very glad if there are a people whose minds can be somewhat turned off from sordid earth, and be brought to strive for an inheritance in the New Jerusalem. As a general rule, all men are striving to become rich; yet a man is perfectly satisfied with merely nothing about him, while he has food and raiment, provided he has some large possession in the West, or some other unavailable property. Now why should the children of this world be wiser than the children of light? And why not rather say, while I have a good and indisputable title to a town lot in the New Jerusalem, whose walks are of gold, whose gates are pearls, and whose light is the shining of the face of God, and whose ruler is our own elder Brother, and we, ourselves, both "kings and priests,"—are we not rich? And how foolish to neglect such riches for the sake of laying up where moth and rust corrupt.

I have been an Adventist for more than thirty years, yet it was never my lot to hear an Adventist preach. I have had frequent conference with Advent believers where I have lived in New York, Ohio, Illinois, and now in Kansas Territory; and am led to believe that if there is a uniformity, there have been changes—perhaps progress. But still I am far from being posted in its principles. I believe the doctrine of the unconsciousness of the dead and the final destruction of the wicked are Bible doctrines; and though new, yet much taught by the popular and in the Orthodox desk.

One thing, in particular, I wish to inquire about. I see in the papers that many Methodist terms are used, (not that I have aught against method,) but such terms as conference, love feast, etc., etc., might lead some to say they are a species of Methodist. I would simply inquire whether the present organization is episcopal or republican?

If my paper shall continue to come, you shall hear from me on several topics. If I shall not be deemed orthodox, it may lead to discussion which will throw light upon some subject. But if my paper shall not continue as the bounty of my friend, surely famine in Kansas will preclude my taking one this year.

Wilmington, K. T.

From Sr. Georgianna.

Bro. Grant:—I feel to praise God that his children can, amid all the confusion and strife that now fills our land, look up and rejoice. While men's minds are filled with perplexity and they do not know what to do, the child of God still keeps his eye fixed on the kingdom; he is not looking for any better state of things, but expects, according to the Word, that the wicked will do wickedly, and iniquity will abound; and because it does the love of many will wax cold, and many will depart from the faith. But, thank God, he will have a people that will endure unto the end. Some counted the cost, and found it would take all they had to gain an entrance into the kingdom, and they to-day confess that they are pilgrims and strangers on the earth, and are willing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. But how sad a state the professed church are in, going hand in hand with the world; they have a form of godliness but deny the power. Why this state of things? They are not walking in Christ Jesus as they received him; how humble when first they loved the Lord, how anxious to obey him in all things. But, alas! they have left their first love, and to-day fashion is ruling them instead of the Spirit of God. Only a close walk with God will save us. We are weak mortals, easily led away by the influences around us; only the grace of God will help us. My sisters, like holy women of old, let our adorning be of a meek and quiet spirit, not the wearing of gold, and putting on of apparel. We are nearing the day of the Lord. Signs portend that Jesus' coming is near at hand. Soon we shall see him whom we love, and be made like him. And in view of this let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us. A few more trials, a few more nights of weeping, and we shall enter the land of rest, the saints' eternal home. What a morning of joy that will be to the saint! I think it worth enduring all we may have to pass through here, to hear the Savior bid us enter the pearly gates of the city, and to eat fruit from the tree of life. I am glad that I am one of the homesick ones, and like David I shall not be satisfied until I awake in the likeness of my Savior.

"Ye who rose to meet your Lord,
Ventured on his faithful word;
Faint not now, for your reward
Will be quickly given.

Let your lamps be burning bright,
In God's Word is beaming light,
Live by faith and not by sight,
Crowns are your reward."

East Kingston, N. H.

From Bro. T. Carpenter.

Bro. Grant:—I am thankful that you have still continued to send your paper. It is to me like water to a thirsty soul. You do not know how I appreciate it. It has been doing its work as a silent messenger. I have used it in the place of tracts, and have circulated it in almost every part of the county. Had I some tracts to circulate, I think they would accomplish great good, but I am not able to buy them, so I use the paper.

There is a good field here for an efficient man to labor. I think with proper means a good church might be raised up in this place. The population of the two towns together, only one mile apart, is about three thousand, and the country well populated around them. The people are generous-hearted, and I think have an ear to hear, and many of them would gladly receive the word.

I am here alone, and have been for six years, without any of like precious faith, yet I am joyful in hope, and still will pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth some of his laborers to this field, for I am aware that the field is already white, and the Lord of the harvest is about to come.

Obituary Notices.

My father-in-law, Nathaniel Smith, died in the Lord at Wardsboro, Windham Co., Vt., on the 28th Nov., 1860, aged seventy-six years.

The great movement of 1843 found him in the religious faith of the times, having been for many years a member of the M. E. church. But the doctrine of Christ's speedy coming found a place in his soul, and for seventeen years past he has been an Adventist, generally reading the "Herald' or "Crisis." More latterly he read the "Voice of the Prophets," and his lagging hope seemed to revive in view of speedy redemption. Among his dying messages for the absent was this, "Tell D—— to preach Jesus' coming, for I believe with all my soul his advent will occur ere 1868 passes away." He possessed a strong and vigorous frame, and disease invaded it but slowly; but catarrhal-asthma at last culminated in consumption of the lungs, and the final hour drew on. Pouring out his heart in prayer, he laid hold of the all-sufficient Savior, and received the eternal blessing. All was peace. "Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death," he exclaimed, "I shall fear no evil." In this frame of mind he passed away. Mr. Ober, the Congregational clergyman, attended at his funeral. His wife, one son and daughter at home, and numerous absent children mourn his death; but we expect soon to meet this kind parent, this saint of ripe age, in eternal glory. Let the weepers be comforted, for the resurrection cometh. Break, thou endless morning! Break over the long sad night of the tomb! My soul, prepare to meet Him!

D. T. Taylor.

Died, in Barnstead, N. H., Dec. 28th, 1860, Bro. Thomas P. Hodgdon, aged sixty.

He was a great sufferer for the most part of the time for the last three years of his life, but all was borne with true christian patience. Bro. H. was a man highly esteemed in all the different relations of life; and for years held different offices of trust, conferred on him by his fellow townsmen.

He professed religion when about eighteen years old, and maintained it till his death. He was among the first to embrace the doctrine of Christ's coming in 1843, and thus continue to look for the "blessed hope" till the last. He expressed strong faith that he should not "sleep" long in the grave, for it was his firm belief that Jesus would soon come "the second time;" and he would often repeat,—"I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death," etc. He made all the arrangements for his funeral, and even prayed for the one who might preach his funeral sermon, that God would bless him in so presenting the truth, that more good might be done at his death than in his life. He arranged all his worldly matters so as to have as little as possible to be done after his death. When he had thus arranged his affairs, he told his dear wife that he was ready and waiting for the enemy death

A vast concourse was present at his funeral, and listened to a discourse founded on 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23.

T. M. Preble.

Fell asleep, at Rocky Brook, R. I., Oct. 31st, 1860, Phebe, daughter of Stephen and Abby Holland, aged seventeen months and seven days.

LINES COMPOSED BY HER SISTER.

We've removed the empty cradle,
Her clothing put away,
And all her little playthings
With our choice treasures lay.

But we'll strive to check the tear drops,
That fall like summer rain,
The sun of Hope shines through them,
We shall see her face again.

Also, on the 21st Dec., 1860, quietly fell asleep in Jesus, in hope of a glorious resurrection, Emma, (the author of the above lines on the death of her sister.)

Emma was a meek, gentle girl, of whom no one could say any harm. She was baptized and united with the church at Rocky Brook on the 4th day of last March, but her career of usefulness was soon closed; she had to yield to the superior power of the enemy. That fell disease—diptheria—has deprived our brother and sister of their youngest and eldest. The prattling voice of little Phebe is no longer heard, and the presence of gentle Emma is no longer enjoyed. But the light of Hope shines through the gloom and views the land of rest. Faith says, I'll meet my lost ones there, glory to God! They sorrow not as those who have no hope. Of dear Emma we can say,—

Thy conflicts are o'er, thy warfare is ended,
Cut down in the morning of life thou art gone;
Thy low, quiet voice, thy laugh that once blended
With ours, is silent, now hushed in the tomb.

There is hope in thine end, thy young heart was given
To Jesus, thy sins by his blood washed away,
Though by thy lost presence fond hearts are now riven,
We'll all meet again in eternal day.

Died, at Worcester, Mass., Dec. 11th, 1860, Bro. Daniel W. Bailey, aged thirty-three years.

Bro. Bailey was eminently one of those chosen in the furnace of affliction—a child of suffering and sorrow. He had long looked and waited with joyful expectation the time when he should sleep in Jesus. He was afflicted by a complaint upon the brain, which for several years had manifested itself in various forms, and for the last two he had often been brought so near the gates of death that none could hope for his recovery or continuance Yet by a singular and strange tenacity of life he remained to endure the most terrible physical pain. No one could estimate his excruciating sufferings, which he ever bore with christian resignation—never murmuring or complaining against the hand of God.

He was patient and meek, taking the correct view that all these things were fitting him for the kingdom of heaven. It has been manifest that these light, momentary afflictions wrought a preparation for the Master's glory. Seven years ago he was taken with an abiding pain in the head, from which he became nearly blind. Two years ago he became, all at once, entirely deaf, and has appeared the embodiment of suffering for three long and weary months, during which he has enjoyed the peaceful consolation of a lively hope in Christ; and during which time, also, his mother, who has been caused to pass through deep floods of affliction, has taken the care of him—having, as for many years, the holy assurance of infinite mercy as her abiding support.

He died in peace with God, and, as he said feebly as his end approached, in love and good will with all men. He said, "I am going a short journey—soon to return." He affectionately sent his love to all the brethren in Christ, and exhorted faithfully his kindred to meet him in the heavenly rest.

The faith he had professed was his hope and stay at last. With strong assurance and lively hope he departed to the dark shores of the enemy's domain, willing to await in the gloom of the sepulchre the time with patience, until the change to immortality shall come, by the power of the Son of God. Adieu! to thee, Daniel. Rest sweetly in the Lord, after thy dreary day of anguish, till the morning breaks. Hail to the Savior! the glory! the man! in the glorified future. David leaves a large circle of friends to mourn and remember his christian virtues and submission.

The funeral was attended at the house of Bro. W. A. S. Smyth, where a large and attentive audience, with many weeping friends, assembled. The services were performed by the writer, assisted by Eld. A. Ross The text for the occasion was Job 17: 11-15.

W. S. Campbell.

Died, in Roxbury, Dec. 26th, 1860, John R. Boston, son of E. M. and Mary Boston, aged thirteen years.

Little John was a lovely boy. May the Lord sanctify this affliction to the parents' spiritual and everlasting good.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The European Times thus summarizes the news from the Continent:

"The foreign intelligence is principally of a negative character. The Constitutionnel contains an article which shows that the interest of Austria lies in selling Venetia rather than braving the perils of war. It is significant as showing the impression which prevails in the Tuileries on this ticklish question. The King of Gaeta better known as the ex-King of Naples, cannot be induced to give up possession, and it is added that great exertions are made by the powers friendly to Francis the Second to induce the Emperor Napoleon to continue to extend to him the hand of protection, and that these exertions will be successful. We doubt this statement. A financial crisis is impending in Rome, which may bring affairs there to a crisis. Assassinations in Naples are said to be frequent, and it is stated that they indicate a widespread conspiracy against the Sardinian Government, which appears to be unpopular with the two extreme parties—the Republicans on the one part and the friends of the Bourbon on the other."

A Naples letter of Oct. 27th says that next day Father Gavazzi (the converted Romanist) was to preach his first sermon in the principal church of the Jesuits.

DOMESTIC.

A Voice from Tennessee for the Union.—A letter from an old and reliable banking house at Nashville, Tenn., to one of our oldest mercantile houses in this city, which came to hand this morning, contains the following extract:

"Never have we witnessed such a scarcity of money as at the present, and such a lack of confidence; never so before. Our troublous political times have brought about much of the present state of affairs. What is to become of our beloved country? Everything is dark in the future; our only hope is in God; let us trust in him, for he is a God of mercy, and will cause the wrath of man to praise him. We think the 4th prox. will be generally observed with us as a day of fasting and prayer for the peace of the country—for the preservation of our glorious Union. God's people from one end of the land to the other, ought to wrestle, Jacob like, that our Father in Heaven may pity us and bring order out of confusion, and save us from severation. My father in the Revolution fought for our freedom. Can I sit by and not defend that Union, bought by the blood of our ancestry? No! never!"

Washington, Jan. 3.—Fort Moultrie had been repaired, the guns remounted, and would be ready to re-open fire on Wednesday. New batteries are being erected around Fort Sumter by the secessionists.

Major Anderson has determined not to renew his request for a reinforcement, but will perish bravely in his fort. His men have sworn to stand by him until death.

A combination is forming to take forcible possession of Washington on or before the 4th of March, but the exact time is not yet determined This statement is from a reliable source. Gentlemen here condemn the inactivity of the President, contending that if he would follow the advice of General Scott all would be safe.

Savannah, Jan. 4. The forts are in possession of the State troops, who are busily engaged in cleaning out the guns. The State has also taken possession of the revenue cutter.

(Cor. of Journal.)—Washington, Jan 6th.—President Buchanan will send a message to Congress to-morrow, in which he will take Jacksonian ground, insisting upon the enforcement of the law, with all the power of the army and navy.

Fort Washington has been garrisoned by marines from this city, and a detachment arrived to-day from Portsmouth, N. H.

Forty-two tons of ammunition are now on the way from New York to Louisiana, under the charge of Adams & Co.'s express. The freight amounts to over six thousand dollars.

Charleston, Jan. 5. A. B. Longstreet, of the South Carolina College, issues a pamphlet entitled "Shall South Carolina Begin War?" He earnestly desires that the Collector on board the Harriet Lane be allowed to land, treated politely, introduced to Mr. Colcock, and every means used by the two Collectors to settle their respective claims in a spirit of courtesy and kindness.

If the forts were reinforced there would be an unfair conflict; hundreds of our sons would be slain; Moultrie would become deserted, and the wrath of the United States be brought on our devoted city. He implores his fellow-citizens to let the first shot come from the enemy.

The Governor has received a telegram from Mayor Munroe, of New Orleans, stating that New Orleans fully sympathized with Charleston in the perils to which she is exposed, and will not fail to support her when occasion requires.

Horrible Murder by Slaves.—Weldon, N. C., Jan. 6.—Lucius Woodruff, a wealthy citizen of Northampton county, has been murdered by his slaves under horrible tortures The negroes have been arrested. There are rumors that Abolitionists are at the bottom of the crime.

Baltimore, Jan. 6.—The ringleader in the murder of Mr. Woodruff at Weldon, N. C., has escaped. There is great excitement. A determination is expressed to hang all the slaves concerned in the affair immediately.

From the World's correspondence.—"Eminent men freely express their opinion that the Union will be preserved; indications are in favor of their returning hopes.

Mr. Crittenden says the fog lifts, and he has hopes of the Union yet, because of the firm stand the adminstration takes against the secessionists.

No orders dispatching additional troops to Charleston have been issued through the Adjutant General's office—the channel through which such orders have heretofore been invariably issued."

New York, Jan. 7.—Mayor Wood, in his message, recommends the secession of the city from the State, and the formation of a free city. He is not prepared, however, to recommend violent measures.

Baltimore, Jan. 7.—A company of light artillery has just arrived at the Carlisle barracks.

Baltimore, Jan. 7.—The troops that arrived to-day were cavalry, not infantry. They are destined for Harper's Ferry.

What Does it Mean?—A dispatch from the South states that "forty-two tons of ammunition are on the way from New York to Louisiana." There seems to be quite a difference in the minds of the secessionists and of the Administration, as well as between ammunition and men. The sending of the smallest number of men is "cause for war," but "forty-two tons of ammunition," without the men, will be very peaceably received, especially while Uncle Sam is good enough to defray the "six thousand dollars frieght" on it.—Journal.

Preaching in Theatres.—The following from the London Record illustrates the peculiar nature of the services now again held in the theatres of that city:

"At the Victoria Theatre, Lambeth, there were two services. In the afternoon the place was speedily crowded by a strange audience, such as one is very unaccustomed to see in places of public worship. It was very evident, indeed, from the demeanor of the people, that the large majority of them had never been in any place of worship before, although it must be said on their behalf that, with few exceptions, they conducted themselves with tolerable quietness, if not very reverently. As soon as the theatre was filled, there were some of the usual calls from the pit to the gallery and from the gallery to the pit, while those persons who occupied boxes—all places being thrown open indiscriminately—were bantered by their friends on their good luck. As soon, however, as the committee and the gentleman who was to conduct the service, appeared on the stage, all noise was hushed, and many appeared to wonder what sort of proceedings were about to take place."

Spiritual Destitution in New York.—The Christian Advocate says:—"It is stated on good authority that of 170,000 children in this city, between the ages of five and sixteen, 100,000 at least never enter a Sunday school; and that of the 700,000 adults of our population, not 200,000 are in the habit of attending church. Near half a million of pagans within sound of the church bells of the metropolis!"

The Cities of the Union.—According to the recent census, the ten principal cities of the Union rank in population as follows:—New York 1st, Philadelphia 2d, Brooklyn 3d, Baltimore 4th, Boston 5th, New Orleans 6th, St. Louis 7th, Cincinnati 8th, Chicago 9th, Buffalo 10th.

To make Newspapers go safer.

Frequent complaints are made by isolated subscribers respecting the non-receipts. We are glad to say such difficulties are fast being obviated by the very means which an exchange recommends in the following clever paragraph. That many more may profit by it, we annex the paragraph.

"We would like to have all single packets doubled, tripled, quadrupled, or more, if more might be. It is troublesome to send out these single packets—very troublesome in proportion to the gain. We can put up two or three papers for the mail nearly as soon as we can one. Besides, we always realize a feeling of anxiety in regard to these small packets, in sending one paper by itself so far. We feel for them in their lonely and uncertain journey. As to the large packets, their very bulk will command some respect from post office clerks. But these solitary little fellows, in their seeming insignificance, may probably be kicked into some corner, or miss their way, and be lost among the bills and hollows. A small packet does not arrive so certainly at its destination as the large one. We have a remedy to propose for this state of things. Let each subscriber who gets a "single packet," now that the paper is so cheap, obtain another subscriber or two, whose papers may go along with his for company. It is a pity to have one paper take such long journeys as some of them do, "solitary and alone." Give them company, and they will travel more swiftly, and reach their destination more surely."

To Subscribers.

Our papers fell short last week; for which reason some new subscribers did not get their first number, which we regret.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Notice.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting held at New Durham Ridge, N. H., commencing Jan. 18th, at two o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. All that love our Lord in sincerity and truth are invited to attend and help in the good cause. Come, brethren and sisters, make one more effort to do good and honor God in this place Come in a condition to preach, pray, exhort and sing, and all in the Spirit.

John Billings.

Advent Conference at Lee, N. H.

This meeting will commence Jan. 19th, 1861, in the Union meeting-house, at 1 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the two following Sundays. Our brethren there extend a cordial invitation to the saints in all the region to come to the meeting ready to help in the work. Leave all, and come together in the name of the Lord, and exhort one another. The day of God is approaching.

The object of this meeting is, by the preaching of the life-giving word, to arouse, awaken and reclaim the wayward and save the sinner. We hope to have one of the Lord's free meetings, where the Spirit and word may have free course, and be glorified. Those coming from the East or West, by coming Monday, Wednesday or Friday, first train, will connect with a regular stage line at New Market, that will bring them to the meeting. All will be provided for. Bro. D. Churchill, Wm. H. Mitchell and others, as the Lord will, may be expected to preach the word.

L. Boutell.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts. Our friends will please send in their orders soon, as we anticipate a rapid sale of the book.

Change of Time for Yarmouth Meeting.

The brethren and sisters in this place, feeling anxious to make extra efforts to save souls and help along the cause of the Lord in this vicinity, propose having a protracted meeting in "Institute Hall," commencing Jan. 18th, 1861, at 6 1-2 o'clock in the evening, and continuing as long as may be thought best. Brethren O. R. Fassett, and other ministering brethren are expected to be present to preach the word; and we cordially invite brethren and sisters generally, to come to the meeting to labor together for the good of souls. We shall do what we can to take care of all who come. In behalf of all interested,

R. R. York.

Yarmouth, Me., Dec. 3d, '60.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Lines,

ON THE DEATH OF EDWARD A. GAGE.

Three years have rolled past, three sad, weary years,
Since the light faded out from our home,
And joy from our crushed hearts, and sunshine and song,—
Oh, we've wandered three years in the gloom!

Can it be the same sunlight illumines earth now,
Setting valley and hill-top aglow—
The same laughing stars, peeping out from the blue,
That sparkled three long years ago?

Does the sun sink to rest in an ocean of pearl,
Intermingled with amber and gold,
While rainbow-hued clouds, bathed in silvery light,
Float above and around, as of old?

It may be,—but oh, there's a sadness at heart,
That shroudeth all nature in gloom!
And mourning seems written on every leaf,
Since our Edward was laid in the tomb.

The flowers he planted, and thought were so sweet,
That were dipped in such rich, gorgeous dyes;
One half their perfume must have drawn from his breath—
Half their brilliancy caught from his eyes.

The vine climbs the trellis less lovingly now,
That his hand may no more its course guide;
And its delicate, low-drooping branches, dew-bathed,
Half mournfully wave by our side.

O Edward! we miss thee in garden and hall,
Thou wast ever our comfort and joy;
But stronger the ties grew that bound us to thee,
In thy sick room, our lost darling boy!

So gentle, so kind, so submissive wast thou
To His will, who doeth all for the best;
Thy calm, pale, sweet face—we can see it e'en now,—
O! 'twas ripe for the heavenly rest.

Thou art waiting it now, where the low cypress waves,
And oh! as we gaze on thy tomb,
Our hearts in an agony breathe out the prayer,—
Lord Jesus, thou Life-giver, come!

Come quickly! the dust of thy martyred ones wait
The "Life-principle" hidden with Thee!
O speak! and the "covenant" brings forth its sons
In glory—immortal and "free!"

We watch for Thy coming—we've waited it long—
O scatter earth's darkness away!
Let the dead hear thy voice, and come up from the tomb!
Let "a nation be born in a day!"

What Some will Say.

"Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us."—Isa. 25: 9.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS. OF THE BLESSED HOPE:—Is it possible that the above text can ever be applied to us? I can say yes, with all my soul; for we are the only people at this day that are looking for that same Jesus that went up into heaven, and are expecting him, his identical person, to come back in like manner as he was seen to go up into heaven,—especially at this time. But we, dear waiting ones, are looking for the Lord himself to descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God. Then the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. "Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." So we see that it means us; for everybody knows we cannot comfort or please the world's people by telling them that Jesus is coming soon to set up his kingdom and to reign. No; it pleases them not. Neither can we please the nominal churches with the assurance that we are expecting the Nobleman soon to return and reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. But we can please all that are of like precious faith, or all that are looking for him, for unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time unto salvation.

But can it please those that are looking for Christ to come spiritually, or as one of the ministers in our place told me the other day, that Jesus comes every time one dies, which is 50,000 times every twenty-four hours? I wonder which would be the second time! Oh consistency! thou art a jewel. Yes, we can please with these words (the Lord himself shall descend from heaven,) all that love his appearing and none others. For if Bro. Paul's test question is applied, it comes out thus: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge SHALL give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto ALL them also that love his appearing." And it does seem to me that all those that love his appearing will rejoice so much the more as they see the day approaching. But when I see high professors look sad because some one thinks Jesus is coming back to earth soon, I think they do not love his appearing, but hate it.

So let me say in all kindness to those that wish to be in that company (that will say, "Lo! this is our God,") forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhort one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching. "Impossible!" says one in astonishment. But what says the blessed Son of God? Hear him. His answer to his disciples (Matt. 24: 3), "And what shall be the sign of thy coming?" Luke 21: 25.—"And there shall be signs in the sun and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth. For the powers of the heaven shall be shaken; and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Now, dear waiting ones, I think as surely as his disciples asked their Lord what sign should precede his coming, just so surely he told them of one sign,—sun supernaturally darkened, May 19, 1780, and in the moon (second sign,) the night following, the moon refused to give light (though in its full); so that a white sheet of paper one foot from the eye was as invisible as the blackest velvet. Third or next sign, stars fall from heaven, fulfilled in 1833, when they fell just like a fig-tree casting her untimely figs when shaken with a mighty wind. Fourth sign, "Distress of nations, with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth," which to me is now having its fulfillment. Fifth or last sign, "For the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall THEY see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." (What they? Most assuredly they that see the signs.) Then the Savior makes it more plain in verse 32: "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away"—or, as it might be rendered, this race, or those that saw the first sign in 1780, shall not all die before he, Jesus, shall come to set up his everlasting kingdom, or establish the kingdom of God in the earth. Says the Revelator (Rev. 3: 3,) "If therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." But the inference is, if we do watch we can know. Brethren, be ready, is my prayer. Amen.

My Experience.—No. 2.

But at that age my understanding was so small that I derived but very little comfort. I sometimes wished that I could find some one whose feelings were similar, but feeling afraid or ashamed to open my mind to any, I sought for books, the experience and lives of good people, to see if I could obtain relief there. I soon found John Bunyan's—a small book, the leaves very much shattered and soiled; but with what care and anxiety did I replace them, and commence reading its pages! But it being of so ancient date and style, and so far beyond my comprehension, it was poorly adapted to my wants, and I was still doomed to disappointment and distress. I again turned to the Bible, whose sacred pages I now perused with mingled emotions of hope and fear,—hope, that they contained words of encouragement and life, and fear that they would not be for me. Thus I continued seeking, desiring and hoping for peace, comfort and salvation, several months.

In the spring of 1827, while alone one day, meditating upon my sinful condition, my unprepared state to meet death, these words, as if spoken with an audible voice, were applied with such power that I could not misunderstand nor resist them: "Thus saith the Lord, set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not live." Though enjoying perfect health, I received it as a warning voice from God, and for the first time in my life, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, bowed the knee, and with fervent prayer and supplication earnestly commenced seeking the Lord aright.

During this summer my mother, who had long been a pilgrim Zion-ward, and who had been a great sharer in the sorrows, trials and sufferings incident to this life, was made glad and joyful in the conversion and baptism of my father, and likewise in the erection of the family altar, around which arose, morning and evening, holy incense to God. But instead of my poor heart receiving comfort thereby, it only enhanced my sorrow and increased my anguish.

As some christian families do in these days when christian friends and neighbors come in for an evening visit, so they would have religious conversation and prayer. At one of these interviews I well remember with what interest and delight I sat and listened while they discoursed of their experience and the dealings of God with them, till it drew near the hour of prayer, when I thought to retire and go to sleep, if possible, in order to avoid suffering and conceal my convictions. But instead of this, when the sound of prayer reached my ear, it seemed impossible to contain myself longer. O the deep distress, the bitter anguish, the aching heart, the flowing tears! all was too much to endure longer in silence. I arose from my bed, fell upon my knees, and continued pleading with God for mercy till they had ceased praying and retired. Could I have had courage and confidence sufficient to have gone into the room where they were praying, there is not a doubt but what God would have appeared for my deliverance. But being young and inexperienced, and naturally timid, I greatly suffered for the want of help.

These things served not to discourage me, but to drive me nearer the mercy-seat, where for three long dreary months, and three times in a day, I retired and pleaded for mercy and forgiveness. I had fully resolved to seek till I found, to die pleading at the feet of Jesus; sometimes despairing, and at others these words of the poet would shed a ray of light and hope upon my sinking heart:—

"Can Jesus hear a sinner pray,
And suffer him to die?
No, he is full of grace;
He never will permit
The soul that fain would see his face,
To perish at his feet.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

Over the mountains of Colerain, in the valley of Griswoldville, I found my week's work among a few despised believers in the promises of God made to Abraham. The little seed that Bro. McCullock sowed one year ago took effect in a few hearts. By being continually pounded, neither watered or fed, they grew weak and poor. When locked out of the school-house, they would get together in the fields and woods, and talk, pray and sing about the blessed hope. God heard and sent help. Their former adversaries came in as spies to criticise and report falsely to hinder our work; but their preacher formerly belonged to the church I did, and gave me a good reputation as a christian. The third day, two broke down; one a very wicked man, according to his own account, when he asked for prayers. Others were wounded, and the whole place in a ferment. But we kept at our work, and preached the truth straighter every time. Some got mad and swore, others fiddled and danced; some brought a pack of cards into meeting and passed them around. I told them what they had been doing,—some had lied, others had misrepresented, a number had made sport in the meeting, besides a few had played cards; but they wouldn't start us till they had got a coat that fitted them, and if there was no authority in the place that could subdue this rowdyism, I would, for I had come to stay a week, and should stay in spite of a few hypocrites, or some soft-headed, ignorant sectarians, that sat in the seat of the scornful, and all the rowdies in town. They gave good attention to this head of my subject. Some looked wild, and some left the house. Our meeting closed in peace.

That evening, after eight testimonies, the wicked young man spoke, and decided to serve God the rest of his days, which had a good effect. The next evening a very prominent man in the Methodist church came out and decided on the truth. This stilled the elements in a great measure. Others had used the Key I had sold them the second evening for three cents, with a warranty that if they would use it, it would unlock their Bible and show them the same treasures I had been preaching, which proved true in a number of cases. One said to me, "That little Key is doing wonders in convincing the people of your doctrines; it will kill Methodism in this place." Said another, "I never was interested in reading the Bible before." A number that had always stood aloof attended every meeting. Some of the time the Methodists had a meeting in the same building, but could not draw even all their own people. Said one of them, "We want something new, and can get it now, and I mean to have it."

After failing to cripple our efforts, they proposed uniting in a prayer and conference meeting. This was done to stop, if possible, the truth from being preached that evening in the same building. But in spite of sectarianism and rowdyism, the truth took deep root in many hearts. A number publicly acknowledged it, who were members of another church. A fine appearing young man the last evening rose and said he felt he was a sinner and wanted prayers. This took hold of the people. He was blessed in the first effort. We gained the victory. The next morning many hearts burned with the love of God, although mercury stood eleven degrees below zero. One old man and his son came seven miles over the mountain on foot to hear the truth, and returned the same evening, not starting from meeting till ten o'clock. He said to me, "I have got my pay."

People value the truth out on these barren mountains. Think of this some of you babies that have meetings within half a mile, and good roads, and let little trifles keep you at home. You ought to be kept on short allowance till your appetite comes. I hope you will be till you feel grateful for the privileges you have slighted. Both of these men did their duty, and started off rejoicing in the blessed hope of meeting in the kingdom. I was loth to leave the place, and so many just coming into the light. Even some of the rowdies began to be interested, after having their daguerreotypes taken, and character painted publicly, which I did with Paul's prophecy of the last days, 2 Tim. 3d chap. Some of them looked as if they thought the devil had a mortgage on them. One sectarian "peace and safety" hireling undertook to play some of his pranks as usual. It was so evident that he was a goat, I felt it my duty to tell his fortune, although a stranger. This turned to the glory of God and the satisfaction of the whole audience; even those belonging to the same church rejoiced, for they could not tell whether he was piping or trying to harp. I understood the next day that he did not think much of me.

Saturday, 15th. Went to Shelburne Falls and found a few disaffected scattered sheep that came together, but there was no unison. I had the whole load to draw until Sunday, when to my joy some twenty-two from Griswoldville, that had been invited the week before, came to my assistance. The work started. The converts took hold. This threw life into the meeting. Many confessed their backsliding, and requested prayers. There is a strong company at Shelburne Falls, but various imprudences killed their courage and stopped their testimony. Monday we had a business meeting, and their difficulties were all settled. A committee of three was chosen to take charge and establish meetings again. Tuesday I went back to Griswoldville to finish bombarding the place. This crippled rowdyism, and opened the eyes of many to see that the devil was trying to cheat them out of their real estate inheritance, by trading off his sky territory in the air for the real estate that God gave to Abraham and us, his heirs. The old farmers saw the figure, rallied for their rights, found the deed was sure, and rejoiced, which made sectarianism, that had opposed us for a week, hide itself. We took the ground, and fiddling and dancing, swearing and scoffing, stopped very suddenly. It will take some time for the devil to right things again in Griswoldville.

Some of the most intelligent of the Methodist church have come out straight. The last meeting they had only five members present, we over forty. This did not look much like running us off the track, as they undertook to do. "It is hard to kick against the pricks," or God's truth.

I next went to Vernon, Vt. Had a large and attentive congregation. Truth took a new and deep hold of many. To see young men wade through snow two feet deep, two miles, three times a day, looks like an interest to hear the truth. People generally want to hear something on the prophetic signs of the times, and will go to hear it if it is preached.

Come, brethren, start out again; there has a new crop come on to the stage of accountability since some of you have been lying idle. Our temporal loss will be somebody's spiritual gain.

For the Crisis.

Pre-existence of Jesus.

Brethren White, Bruce and Grew, have very kindly noticed my inquiries which appeared in a late number of the Crisis, in relation to the pre-existence of Jesus. Although my brethren have answered very well, it appears to me they have overlooked the main point in my inquiries. My point is this:

1. Did "JESUS" pre-exist before the world began?

2. Can we not tell how old JESUS is?

3. Is it not true that JESUS was and is that "holy thing" born of Mary; and was called, and is called, "the Son of God?" Is it not so, brethren?

4. Is there any thing in the New Testament which is called the "Son of God" except that "holy thing" born of Mary?

5. Is it not this same JESUS which is to come again to sit upon "the throne of his father David," and to "reign over the house of Jacob forever?"

6. If so, do not the Scriptures plainly give us his age? Is it not declared that he was "eight days" old when circumcised? "twelve years old" when in the temple at Jerusalem? and "about thirty years of age" when baptized?

7. If so, is JESUS, the Son of God, more than eighteen hundred and sixty-five years old now, according to the true era?

8. If so, how could "JESUS," the Son of God, pre-exist before the world was?

Selections.

"I Have Placed You."

There is often much comfortable suggestion in a single phrase, a word of inspired Scripture. Jesus said to his disciples in the hour of deepest grief and anxiety, (John 15: 16,) "I have chosen you and placed you." Our version renders it, "I have ordained you." But the original is simply "I have placed you. The place we occupy, then, is his appointment, his choice. We may not like it. It may be a low place, a narrow place. The work it requires may not afford much scope for energy or excitement to activity, or opportunity for distinction; it may not even be so directly spiritual, or have so proximate a relation as we could wish to the advancement of the kingdom of God. But if Christ by his resistless providence has allotted it to us, we had better be contented with it and make the best of it.

One of the titles of Christ is "the Captain of Salvation." No captain will permit a soldier to quit his place in the ranks because he thinks it below his merit, because it does not give him a good chance to show his courage, or to win distinction in the war. Whether he is placed in front or rear, in the forlorn hope or among "the reserves," whether he is attached to a scouting party or ordered to cover a retreat or guard the baggage, his part is bravely, watchfully, skillfully, cheerfully, to keep the place and do the duty assigned him. No act of disobedience would be more flagrant than to forsake it without orders for one more conspicuous. Even to murmur or "sulk" because of the inactivity or obscurity to which he was consigned would be regarded as disloyal, and expose him to rebuke, perhaps to degradation.

The captain of the Lord's host, the Captain of salvation, does not require a less prompt and absolute obedience than human commanders.

The most skillful and penetrating officer may be mistaken in his estimate of the capacity and skill of a subordinate. Christ can not be mistaken in us. He made us. He gave us whatever of talent or grace we have. He will not waste a particle of either. He knows

"The very niche we were designed to fill,"

and if we will humbly and observantly yield to his guiding hand, he will "drop" us into it.

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" was a prayer which began a glorious career of usefulness.

His own gracious words may calm our disquieting aspirations,—"He that is least among you all, the same shall be great."

The awards of the last day will greatly reverse the present order of things, and disappoint alike the sky-aspiring thoughts of one class and the lowly self-depreciation of another. There is something remarkable in the solemnity with which our Lord makes this declaration: "Behold! there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last."—Tract Journal.

The Social Christian Society.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." This affords us a topic of thought, rich in its aspect of duty, and full of delightful christian fruitage. We mean the social christian society. An utterly unsocial christianity would be a solecism—as much related to a true brotherhood as a sandy desert would be to "a field which the Lord hath blessed."

And not alone the exercises of the social principle on the church, but also on the impenitent world. It is here that the delinquency of church members is most palpable. Among themselves there is professional character enough to give some savor of social, christian life. Necessity, habit and choice, all conspire to some christian intercourse; but outside of this, our male membership is, in many cases, little better than negative quantities in algebra, which to the unmathematical eye, look like numbers; while the more there is of them, the less is the sum total. It is here, most signally and disastrously, for the spread of religion, that christian activity is transferred by our male constituency to the ministry; a proxy system which met, often and faithfully, to some extent cannot be fulfilled—thus leaving a measure of personal effort unaccomplished. The reserve of christian men in regard to religious matters towards the irreligious, impresses the latter unfavorably both towards religion and the character of professors. Every other thing in which men take an interest, they talk about; but this is ignored. If the heart be fully sensible of the value of piety to itself; if it have any appreciation of its value to others; if it have any generous promptings toward the spiritual well-being of others; if it have any sense of their danger without it—then out of the abundance of such a heart the tongue will speak. Even the woman of Samaria, in the newness of her knowledge of Christ, could run with alacrity among her fellow citizens, crying, "Come see a man who told me all that ever I did. Is not this the Christ?" And if the testimony of such a one led many of the Samaritans to believe on him, are there not trophies of grace to be won from the enemy, for Christ, by those who have long tasted that the Lord is gracious? Who will go abroad in the fullness of their experience, and in the earnestness of their love, like David, saying, "Come all ye that fear the Lord, and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul!"—Ob. Evan.

Submission.

To do or not to do, to have
Or not to have, I leave with thee;
To be or not to be, I leave:
Thy only will be done in me!
All my requests are lost in one—
Father! thy only will be done!
* * * * *
Welcome alike the crown, the cross!
Trouble I cannot ask, nor peace,
Nor toil, nor rest, nor gain, nor loss,
Nor joy, nor grief, nor pain, nor ease,
Nor life, nor death, but ever pray,
Father! Thy only will be done!

Carnal Security.

The old divines said much on the subject of carnal security, or false peace of mind. This is a kind of quiet into which the self-righteous and backslider often fall. It is quiet mixed with sin. It is undisturbedness of mind in the midst of dangers, which, through blindness, are not perceived. It is the stillness of nature preceding an earthquake. Rowland Hill says he once went to a poor man who had received a serious injury in one of his limbs. For a while he suffered great pain. After a while the physician said, "Do you feel much pain now?" "No, I do not," was the reply. "Is your pain all gone?" he asked. "Yes, it is." The physician touched the wound and said, "Did you feel that?" "No." "Then death hath begun its work and will soon spread over the whole body." He touched the feet. They were already cold. So when spiritual death has made rapid advances, it is often unperceived. Sin is a sorcery. It deludes with vain hopes that all is well, even when death is about to do its work. "Wo unto them that are at ease in Zion," is the awful message of a jealous God to the carnally secure. The signs of false peace are chiefly these: 1. No very distressing sense of personal unworthiness. 2. Not much conflict with temptation. 3. Lack of tenderness of conscience. 4. Insensibility under chastisements and ordinances.—Ex.

☞ No man is rich whose expenditure exceeds his means; and no one is poor whose incomings exceed his outgoings; it is no small commendation to manage a little thing well. He is a good wagoner who can turn in little room.

☞ Never anticipate wealth from any other source than labor; especially never place dependence upon becoming the possessor of an inheritance. "He who waits for dead men's shoes, may have to go a long time barefoot."

Religious Interest in Jamaica.

"A most remarkable religious awakening has broken out in the western part of the Island, and is spreading on every side among the people. The manifestations are similar to those which characterized the late revival in Ireland, Scotland, and the United States. Already have numerous conversions taken place, and much good it is expected will result from this movement. The rum shops have been in a great measure deserted; the churches and chapels are thronged; and large numbers of penitents are seeking admission into the different religious bodies. As usual some people disbelieve in it, but the most experienced ministers pronounce it to be a genuine work of God.

"Where the movement has run into fanaticism, it has in my opinion been from want of sufficient and judicious pastoral oversight.

That it is the work of God is evident from the fact that it has closed the rum-shops, and the gambling houses, which were such a hindrance to our usefulness; reconciled husbands and wives who had long been separated; led prodigal children to return to their parents; caused scores of banns to be published in this parish—an evidence that the people are forsaking the state of concubinage, in which multitudes of them live, for that of honorable marriage—excited the rage of the ungodly, whom it has not humbled, crowded every place of worship, quickened the zeal and animated the hopes of ministers of the gospel; is purifying the churches, and bringing many sinners to repentance. No one has asked any among us to confess anything, but when they begin to pray, they pour out everything before God in audible prayer, during which they are utterly indifferent as to consequences. In some places the disclosures have been truly astounding and even horrible."

Blessedness in God.

Let thy mercy's wings be spread
O'er me, keep me close to thee;
In the peace thy love hath shed,
Let me dwell eternally.
Be my All; in all I do
Let me only seek thy will;
Where the heart to thee is true,
All is peaceful, calm and still.

EDUCATION.—Train the understanding. Take care that the mind has a stout and straight stem. Leave the flowers of wit and fancy to come off themselves. Sticking them on will not make them grow. You can only engraft them, by grafting that which will produce them.

Another rule of good gardening may also be applied with advantage to the mind. Thin your fruit in spring, that the tree may not be exhausted, and that some of it may come to perfection.—"Guesses at Truth."

KEEPING PROMISES WITH CHILDREN.—A gentleman of nervous temperament once called on Dr. Dwight, President of Yale College. One of the Doctor's boys was rather boisterous, and pestered the nervous gentleman somewhat, whereupon he said to him, "My boy, if you will keep still while I am talking to your father, I will give you a dollar." Instantly the boy hushed down gentle as a sleeping lamb. At the close of the gentleman's remarks, he attempted to leave without giving the boy a dollar; but Doctor Dwight was too fast for him. He put a dollar into the man's hands, saying, "You promised my boy a dollar for good behavior. Give him that, as you promised. If, sir, we lie, our children we be liars also."

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Dyspepsia.

[Dr. Hall's Health Tracts.]

Dyspepsia is the inability of the stomach to prepare from the food eaten the nourishment requisite to sustain the body, and to supply it with pure blood, which, in its impure, unnatural condition, is sent to every fibre of the system; hence there is not a square inch of the body which is not liable to be affected with uneasiness or actual pain, and that portion will suffer most which has been previously weakened, or diseased, or injured in any way. Hence among a dozen dyspeptics, no two will have the same predominant symptoms, either in nature or locality; and as these persons differ further in age, sex, temperament, constitution, occupation, and habits of mind and body, it is the height of absurdity to treat any two dyspeptics precisely alike; hence the failure to cure in many curable cases.

Dyspeptics of high mental power and of a bilious temperament, are subject to sick headache; those who are fat and phlegmatic, have constipation and cold feet; while the thin and nervous have horrible neuralgies, which make of life a continued martyrdom, or they are abandoned to forebodings so gloomy, and even fearful sometimes, as to eat out all the joy of life, and make death a longed-for event. Some dyspeptics are wonderfully forgetful; others have such an irritability of temper as to render companionship with them, even for a few hours, painful, while there is such a remarkable incapacity of mental concentration, fixedness of purpose, that it is impossible to secure any connected effort for recovery.

There are some general principles of cure applicable to all, and which will seldom fail of high advantages.

1. The entire body should be washed once a week with soap, hot water, and a stiff brush.

2. Wear woolen next the skin the year round, during the daytime only.

3. By means of ripe fruits and berries, coarse bread, and other coarse food, keep the bowels acting freely once in every twenty-four hours.

4. Under all circumstances, keep the feet always clean, dry, and warm.

5. It is most indispensable to have the fullest plenty of sound, regular, connected, and refreshing sleep, in a clean, light, well-aired chamber, with windows facing the sun.

6. Spend two or three hours of every forenoon, and one or two of every afternoon, rain or shine, in the open air, in some form of interesting, exhilarating, and unwearying exercise—walking, with a cheering and entertaining companion, is the very best.

7. Eat at regular times, and always slowly.

8. That food is best for each which is most relished, and is followed by the least discomfort. What may have benefited or injured one, is no rule for another. This eighth item is of universal application.

9. Take but a teacupful of any kind of drink at one meal, and let that be warm.

10. Confine yourself to coarse bread of corn, rye, or wheat—to ripe, fresh, perfect fruits and berries, in their natural state—and to fresh lean meats, broiled or roasted, as meat is easier of digestion than vegetables. Milk, gravies, pastries, heavy hot bread, farinas, starches, and greasy food in general, aggravate dyspepsia by their constipating tendencies.

11. It is better to eat at regular times as often as hungry, but so little at once, as to occasion no discomfort whatever.

12. Constantly aim to divert the mind from the bodily condition, in pleasant ways; this is half the cure in many cases.

Protection for Woman's Foot.

Women must go much in the open air at all seasons of the year, or become pale and feeble. But in order to do this, their boots must be radically changed.

As preliminary to this greatly needed reform, we must first get rid of the strange hallucination that where a strong man needs cowhide, a feeble woman needs only morocco; that where a strong man needs an inch of hard, impervious sole, a feeble woman needs only a quarter inch of soft, spongy sole; that where the strongest Irishman needs thick woolen socks, a delicate, consumptive lady needs only a gauzy silk stocking. This singular madness must be first scattered.

But surely one need not seriously discuss such a matter. If women must go much in the open air at all seasons of the year, (and no one with five grains of common sense doubts it,) then it needs no argument to show that women should wear as much protection on their feet as men find it necessary to wear. Neither can it require much argument to show that those rubbers which prove so pernicious to the feet of men, must, to say the least, be quite as unhealthy for women.

PRESCRIPTION FOR A LADY.

Madame, allow me to prescribe for you. I have had a long experience in the management of delicate women, and I believe I can give you some important advice. For the present, I prescribe only for your feet.

1. Procure a quantity of woolen stockings, not such as you buy at the store, under the name of lamb's wool, that you can read a newspaper through, but the kind that your Aunt Jerusha in the country knits for you, thick as a board, that will keep you dry and warm, in spite of wind and weather.

2. If you want to be really thorough, change them every morning, having the fresh ones hang by the fire during the night.

3. Procure thick calf skin boots, double uppers, and triple soles, and wear them from the first of October until the first of April. Make frequent applications of some good oil blacking.

4. Avoid rubbers altogether, except a thick layer, which you should have cemented on the bottoms of the soles.

5. Hold your feet in cold water an inch deep, five or six minutes before going to bed, and have them rubbed hard with some one's naked hand.

6. Now, Madame, go much out of doors at all seasons, and believe me not only will your feet have a good circulation, but, as a consequence, your head will be relieved of its pain and congestion, and your heart be relieved of its palpitation because relieved of its accumulations.

Why do Animals need Salt?

Prof. Jas. E. Johnston, of Scotland, says: "Upwards of half the saline matter of the blood (57 per cent,) consists of common salt; and as this is partly discharged every day through the skin and the kidneys, the necessity of continued supplies of it to the healthy body becomes sufficiently obvious. The bile also contains soda (one of the ingredients of salt,) as a special and indispensable constituent, and so do all the cartilages of the body. Stint the supply of salt therefore, and neither will the bile be able properly to assist digestion, nor the cartilages to be built up again as fast as they naturally waste."

☞ Pork, especially when fattened in pens, often produces scrofula. Those who doubt it have been challenged to produce a Jew who had scrofulous taint.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

Like the weaver's shuttle the yea s pass by,
And their record is kept by One on high.
He knoweth the good and the evil done
By all who exist beneath the sun.
How many hearts have been rendered sad
By the unkind deed, or how many glad
By the words of kindness and acts of love
That have their origin from above.
And He gives the credit due to all,
Whether the deed be great or small.
The miser's grasp is recorded there,
When the homeless wanderer breath'd a prayer
In his ear for aid, while he harshly said—
"Away, and find elsewhere home and bread!"
And the rich man's grinding of the poor,
When he turned him sorrowful from his door,
With the smallest pittance for labor done,
Through a long, hard day, 'neath a scorching sun.
And the mark of the oppressor too
Is recorded there, and full in view.
How he robbed his brother of rights that were given
Just like his own, by the God of heaven;
While the gushing tear and heartfelt prayer
Of the humble christian are noted there;—
The "widow's mite" and the words of cheer
That were gently breathed in the mourner's ear.

The year is past—with its hopes and fears,
Its joys and sorrows—its smiles and tears;
And the mystic future to Him alone,
Who holdeth the sands of time, are known.
Yet His word affirms we shall meet one day
The record of years that have passed away,
When all who have lived beneath the sun
Shall receive their reward for actions done;
And tokens on every side appear,
Declaring that Day of God is near.

A NEW YEAR'S SERMON.

DELIVERED AT CHAPMAN HALL, BOSTON, JAN. 6TH, BY ELD. P. B. MORGAN.

"And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

The instruction of the apostle in this Scripture is, to urge a practical godliness in consideration of the period of time in which we live. And when is such a consideration more becoming than upon the present occasion—upon this first Lord's day of a new year? Where is it more befitting that we pause—if pause we can amid the whirl of these times—and look out upon the world around us;—take observation,—inspect the surrounding forces,—make our reckoning, and from hence calculate our course? Never did a mariner take observation with more interest previous to a storm, or a commander-in-chief reconnoitre, notice the lines of battle, and adjust his forces with a more intense interest, than ought we to have in commencing the journey of this another year.

My brethren, we have greeted the dawn of many a new year, some of us thirty, and others twice that number; but never did any of us hail the approach of such a new year's morning as that brought us by the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one. Aye, more. Is it too much to say, that such a new year the world never saw? a year so pregnant with hopes or fears of all that is interwoven with the weal or woe of universal man?

With what impatience have men pushed on from one new year to another from time immemorial! Dissatisfied with the gifts and providences of the old year, they longed for the coming of a new one; ever dreaming, ever hoping for "a good time," of which, though they knew not how, neither from whence it was to come, yet all hearts instinctively said, It is before us—it is somewhere in the future. And with this it was no marvel; it was a thing just and right that the impassioned youth, the substantial man of mid-life, and the gray-haired sire should smilingly greet each the other with, "I wish you a happy new year!" Life's burdens were thereby made lighter, its ills more easily borne. It was a new sunbeam in life's horizon, and with the new light friend rejoiced with friend, and took new courage in breasting the storms and fighting the battles of life.

But with the greetings of this new year, how many have experienced a new and strange feeling in their hearts. May be there were the same hopes of last year, but how were they commingled with instinctive foreboding! how did hope hesitate and wrestle with fear,—"looking after those things which are coming upon the earth!"

The mother of this land feared lest the boy that long nestled in her affections, and been the acknowledged pride of her heart—now perhaps just ready to burst into manhood,—she feared that he who so recently mingled his voice in the loud huzzas of the political throng, should shortly be called at the sound of drum and fife,—not to go with the rush of nations to the battle of Armageddon,—for none but the students of prophecy dreamed of such things,—but it was lest the son, and peradventure the father too, might be called to lie down in their gore in the midst of that most terrible of scourges—a civil war. But though she knew her womanly instinct was wont to keep pace with the march of sterner logic, she dismissed her fears, and said to each as usual,—"a happy new year!"

But it was not our mothers only who had fears mingled with hope. The farmer and the mechanic; the merchant and the manufacturer; the importer and the exporter; the politician and the president; all confessed the same weakness, if weakness it should be called. They have said the threefold cord that has bound together this great nation is about to be loosed. A most sanguinary civil war is now largely talked of. The cry of treason is heard echoing through the length and breadth of our country; and what scourgings the God of nations shall inflict upon this land of the free,—and of the slave,—none but they who have their sittings in the council-chamber of Heaven can determine.

But it is not over this land only that dark clouds lower, and men's hearts quake with fear. The same is true of all lands; of Europe, Asia, Africa, Central and South America.

In the year 1848, two kingdoms of Europe were revolutionized in six months; and shortly others, to the number of twenty-seven in all. It then seemed as if the war demons of ages had formed a grand alliance, and taken possession of that continent. Yet comparatively little blood was shed. That revolution was an unexpected and overwhelming shock, demonstrative of forces in operation, and of what might come afterwards. It was the more strange because the cause could not be traced to the efforts of any single man or body of men. True, it was productive of many an able political chieftain,—like a Kossuth, a Mazzini, and a Garabaldi; but it was evidently not produced by them. It was too general and simultaneous to yield traces any thing like the engineering of a great master spirit, such as Napoleon I., Charlemagne, or Alexander. It was rather like the operation and effects of principles—very like the principles of democracy, long shut up, but meanwhile fermenting in the political meal,—and now bursting forth like a frenzied spirit to lift its voice and arms in defiance of a combined and crushing despotism. It was not strange that the Hon. Rufus Choate should have then said,—"It has seemed to me as if the prerogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the hoarded-up resentments of a thousand years, were about to unsheath the sword for a conflict, in which blood shall flow, as in the Apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away." Kossuth said,—"The mene, tekel, upharsin of Europe is written on her sky in characters of fire."

But the calm that follows the storm, came to Europe. A franchise was granted the people. They acknowledged they were not statesmen,—did not wish to shed the blood of their fellows,—accepted the constitutional rights that were professedly guaranteed them, and turned again to the enjoyment of home and peace. Shortly, a foreign correspondent writes,—"The democrats of Europe say the last has been a war of revolution, but they swear the next shall be a war of extermination." But this was a mistake. The year 1853 came, and with it the fierce and bloody war of the Crimea, in which was witnessed the anomalous scene of despot and democrat, Romanist and Protestant, united in support of the effete power of the Mohammedan. The year 1859 finds France and Austria in a war that but slightly fails to embroil all Europe. But the peace of Villa Franca restores quiet again for a time; and the "war of extermination" has not yet come.

Meanwhile, Europe has been arming on a scale that surpasses any thing and every thing ever before heard of. And the democrats, without arms, have, nevertheless—with their grievances, their cogitations and their murmurings, kept pace with coeval events. The Carbonari and other political secret societies boast that they have pushed on their daring enterprises, until, like a Guy Fawkes' gun-powder plot, they have projected their political slow-match under the very thrones of t eir rulers.

And now, the year of our long absent Lord, 1861, has come. Still the clouds in the political horizon are not dissipated, but, on the contrary, are darker and denser than ever before. All Europe is this day in a state of uneasiness. A spirit of fearful foreboding has seized all hearts, from the palace to the straw-thatched cottage. Garabaldi has been glorified by the European democrats as a second Washington. Victor Emanuel has been constituted a democratic king. "Rome, around which," says Gibbon, "the history of Europe arrayed itself for twelve centuries," has again become the centre of attraction in the European political world. The Pope—long venerated by the great Latin Ecclesiastical party, as the vicegerent of Christ, but better known by his heathen appellation of Pontifex maximus, sovereign High Priest,—is again in distress. Poor man! scourged by the Germans and Spaniards under Charles V. (1527); menaced and put at defiance by Joseph II., emperor of Austria (1781); most provokingly treated by that schismatic and incorrigible Luther; rebelled against by Henry VIII., of England: taken prisoner by Alexander Berthier on behalf of the French; treated with contempt by Napoleon; narrowly escaping with his life to find protection at Gesta in 1848,—is now again disturbed, and fears lest, as an intolerable nuisance, he be cast out of the political world, and perhaps from thenceforth counted as good for nothing. The peasants of Ireland and the Romish bishops of America rally to his aid.

Anon, he is reputed to think of bartering his civil power away—as if to make the most of it—for the sum of one million dollars for himself, and ten thousand to his Cardinals each, annually. But then who shall pay this annual stipend, for really nothing? and what will he and his then do with themselves? are questions that wait an answer. To remain in Italy would be to ignore the whole difficulty. France already talks of making its own head, Napoleon III., its Pope. Austria, notwithstanding the Concordat, has enough to do in taking care of itself and Hungary. Spain is imbecile. And to talk of migrating to America—though so large and broad—would be too surely putting very old wine into a new bottle which would break,—if indeed it does not break by the fermentation of its own wine.

In Asia, we see the breaking up of Paganism, and the existence of belligerent armies. Turkey, since 1453 commanding the Bosphorus, and forming the link between the Orient and the Occident, has since 1820 been waning, and now only needs the existence of another massacre of Christians within its borders; when it is probable its very name would cease among the nations of the earth. Finally, the whole world seems on the qui vive for a battle; and one so mighty, so awful, and so universal as was never entered upon the page of history, or heard of by the ear of man.

And what means this universal up-rising of nations? What is it that threatens the world, and moves all spirits at this particular time? Why this universal, "irrepressible conflict"? Why said the London Episcopal Recorder some time since—"There is an undefinable impression abroad upon all spirits, of a coming crisis, and a better day. All things seem to travel onward to a general crisis and a new era"? But what is this crisis, and in what shall it ultimate? Coming events cast their shadows before; but who can divine this thing? Who tell the sum of the matter?

My brethren, these are important questions. Questions you cannot forbear to ask, neither can the world. But is there no answer? To know the hand-writing before us, what shall we do? To say the world is governed by chance, we cannot. Where, then, is our answer? Shall we disgorge the entrails of some living beast, and while yet its flesh is quivering, seek this knowledge of some heathen oracle? Or shall we, like Saul, turn away from Israel's God and consult the dwellers in darkness—"spirits that peep and mutter"? Are there from hence no watchmen of God upon the walls of Zion that can tell "what of the night"? Church of Christ! where are thy watchmen? Where thy light in this the time of midnight darkness?

My christian brethren, you, who dare read your Bibles for yourselves, know God is in history. You who, notwithstanding the mistakes and disappointments growing out of the weakness of our fallen nature, have yet dared to face the anathemas of even your Protestant brethren, and persist in your investigations as students of prophecy, to which St. Peter hath said we do well to "take heed . . . until the day dawn" (2 Pet. 1: 19);—you see and feel—

"We are voyagers on an ocean,
And our destiny we know—
For our chart, it hath pointed out the way."

You know God hath not left us without a calendar. He who, out of the infinite abyss of his incomprehensible mind, brought the great plan of salvation through Jesus Christ for a lost world, hath also of his own will given to us the "word of prophecy"—the prophecies of the Old Testament and of the New—the consecutive and discursive prophecies—prophecies spanning the whole arch of time, describing the more important events with great minuteness. We did not ask them of God, we could not; but he, in wisdom that should put to shame the wisdom of man, of his own will gave them to us, and said, "Blessed is he that readeth." How important the "word of prophecy" becomes to us at this time, is most apparent.

That the prophetic periods were ever given to us so that we might calculate to an hour or a day, either their commencement or their terminus, I do perceive; neither that in the nature of things such knowledge is needful. But to study them, with a view to know all they do mean, has for its support the fact that they are a part of the Word of God, all of which was given by inspiration and is profitable. 2 Tim. 3: 16. That they may in a very considerable degree strengthen and corroborate the general points sustained by the historical and discursive prophecies, is most probable. But it is by these, the consecutive and discursive prophecies, that we are so amply prepared to say with our text—"And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."

By these we know the four universal Gentile monarchies of Daniel are in the past,—that we are now in the "time of the end," when, according to these lines of prophecy, the next grand event must be the demolition of these kingdoms, and the reign of Christ be established in their stead, "under the whole heavens."—Dan. 7: 27. By these we know the seals, the trumpets, and the plagues, have each, but the last of the respective seven, filled their course.—Rev. 6; 8; 9; 16. By these we know the time must come—and perhaps is already upon us—when the seat of the apostate church—the Papacy—must be hated by the kings of the earth, who shall "eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."—Rev 17: 16. By these we know the time of universal perplexity and trouble must come, ere the Prince of Peace comes.—Dan. 12: 1; Luke 21: 25; Rev. 11: 18. The nations must rush, and the battle of Armageddon must be fought.—Isa. 17: 13; Jer. 25; Rev. 16: 14—16.

It is by the prophecies we know "the notion that the righteous shall engross the earth before the day of judgment, is a doctrine of the devil," as said Martin Luther. Or that, as said the late Bishop Henshaw, "The commonly received opinion of a spiritual millennium, consisting in the universal triumph of the gospel and conversion of all nations for a thousand years, before the coming of Christ, is a novel doctrine, unknown to the church for the space of sixteen hundred years." By the prophecies we learn the last days are to be perilous days; that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."—2 Tim. 3. It is by these we see God has his hand upon the Papacy; and that the world is speedily ripening for a great harvest day, when the tares shall be gathered in bundles and be burned, and the wheat gathered to the garner of God; when Jesus Christ, the King of glory, shall break through the din of war and strife of nations, overthrow the empire of Satan, break the bands of death, give immortality to his saints, and punish all his enemies with irremediable destruction.

Two kind of Watchmen.

1. God's watchmen. Isa. 6: 7; John 3: 34. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, oh Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace, day nor night, till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God." Gen. 2: 17.—"But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. 3: 19.—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Num. 14: 21.—"But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Ps. 24: 1.—"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." Ps. 37: 10, 11, 20, 29, 38. "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth. . . . . But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away. . . . The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever. . . . But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off." Ps. 49: 15, 20—"But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he shall receive me. . . . Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Ps. 93: 1.—"The Lord reigneth, he is clothed with majesty; the Lord is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath girded himself: the world also is established, that it cannot be moved." Ps. 92: 7.—"When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Ps. 96: 10.—"Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved." Ps. 104: 35.—"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Ps. 115: 16.—"The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Prov. 11: 31.—"Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner." Dan. 7: 27.—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."—Mal. 4: 1.—"For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

Matt. 5: 5.—"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 24: 45, 47.—"Who then is a faithful and wise servant whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them meat in due season. . . . Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing; verily I say unto you that he shall make him ruler over all his goods." Matt. 25: 34.—"Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat." Rom. 6: 23.—"For the wages of sin is death." Rev. 5: 9, 10.—"And hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth.

2nd Class. Isa. 56: 10, 11.—These watchmen are "blind; they are all ignorant; they are all dumb dogs; they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." Gen. 3: 4, 5.—"And the serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be open, and ye shall be as gods." Jer. 23: 1, 2, 21.—"Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord. Therefore saith the Lord God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people: Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away. and have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord. . . I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied." Ezek. 13: 6, 22.—"They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word. . . . Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life." Micah 3: 5, 11.—"Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that biteth with their teeth and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths they even prepare war against him. . . . The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord and say, is not the Lord among us? None evil can come upon us."

Matt. 15: 7, 9, 14.—"Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you. . . . But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. . . . Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." Matt. 25: 48, 50, 51.—"But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of; and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Philippians 3: 2.—"Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision." Rev. 22: 15.—"For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

Now, dear brethren and sisters, since God has two kinds of watchmen, let us diligently examine his word, so that we may know which kind we are led by; for those that God sends will speak his words, and not the old serpent's. Amen.

The Sabbath Question.—Who is right?

I have heard and read a great deal about the Sabbath day, whether its observance is binding or not, under this dispensation. But still I am unsettled. Each side seems to prove its theory from the Bible, but both cannot be right, therefore the question with me is, who is right? I will give my opinion on the subject, impartially, to enable the interested to know where I stand.

First, then, I do not consider the Sabbath day obligatory upon us for these reasons: The Law (Mosaic) was our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ, and when we are led to him, we are to hear him.—Matt. 47: 5. Then we have no further need of the Law, for we are to be instructed in the way of salvation by our blessed Lord and Master; and he nowhere tells us to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Now why did he not, if our salvation depended upon it? But perhaps it was because it was an established fact already. Were that the case, and it could be proved, no further argument would be needed. But we dare not suppose so, for want of proof.

The law was given by Moses. John 17: 17. "The law and the prophets were until John, since that time the kingdom of God is preached."—Luke 16: 16. "Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith."—Rom. 3: 27. If, then, Moses' law is excluded by the law of faith, the gospel law, I cannot see the necessity of keeping the Sabbath, unless we find it taught in the gospel; which we fail to find.

But notwithstanding this plain argument, (though I have not collected all that might be brought on this side of the question; but enough,) I have reason to believe that we ought to observe and keep the Sabbath, from this fact, the Sabbath is the seventh day of the week, a day of rest, a type of the seventh thousand years, or millennial rest, promised to the saints. We are baptized to show our faith in the death and resurrection of our blessed Lord, and why is it not lawful to keep the seventh day to show our faith in that day of rest to come, the thousand years? It is a certain fact that the thousand years reign with Christ, is yet future; (though some, I believe, hold that those thousand years are in the past; I wonder if such regard the Sabbath as lawful, and keep it? I should like to know,) and can we have any part with Christ in that reign, unless we keep the type? (the Sabbath day.)

This is the only argument that I deem of any importance on this side of the question; and could that be displaced by Bible facts, my mind would be clear as sunshine! Or, on the other hand, if those arguments that I have adduced to disprove the practicability of Sabbath keeping, can be removed by Bible facts, then all will be plain; I will cheerfully obey.* I want the truth, that through the truth I may be sanctified, soul and body,—prepared for that peaceful abode with the saints in glory, when Eden shall bloom again.

WOMAN AND CHRISTIANITY.—That sex which almost alone was friendly to the Savior,—which anointed his feet with ointment, and followed him with tears to his cross,—which prepared sweet spices for his burial, and was the first to hail his resurrection, has, in turn, been especially befriended by his gospel. It has raised her from the degrading condition of a slave, or her still more degrading condition as a mere instrument of passion, to be a refined and purifying influence in society, and to lend to home dignity and the grace of the mother, wife, sister and daughter.—Rev. Dr. Chapin.

For the Crisis.

Too Low an Aim.

I remember to have once read the remark, made by a man of distinguished learning, "Set your standard high! He who aims at the sun, to be sure may not reach it; yet his arrow will fly higher than if he aimed at some inferior object."

That which is true in a literal sense, may also be true in a spiritual point of view; or at least, if we would attain to a higher degree of grace, we must with all our hearts aim at it. But unlike him who aims at the sun, we may confidently expect to gain our mark.

We must aim at the Bible standard. Does the great Teacher say, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect"? Rest assured, he requires nothing more than what is in the highest degree reasonable. And think you he will withhold sufficient grace to enable us to obey this his most explicit command? Nay, verily. Are we commanded, "Be ye holy for I am holy"? This is no unmeaning command: for "WITHOUT HOLINESS, NO MAN SHALL SEE THE LORD."

But what is holiness; not partially such, but what is complete, or entire holiness? Jesus defines it thus; "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Matt. 22: 37. This takes hold of our entire being. It leaves no room for the least selfishness whatever. Whatever we do, must be done in God, and for God. All is on God's altar. Our time, talents, property, physical, or mental labor, social influence, reputation, or character, yea, our very being itself; all, ALL, have been given to the Lord; and are no more our own, than if we had never possessed them.

Now is this too high an aim? Ah! my brother, it is a slight view of that spotless character, which you, and I, must not only aim at, but experience, or be shut out of the soon coming kingdom of God.

Day of the Lord.

"Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come."—Joel 1: 15.

"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the earth tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh; IT IS nigh at hand. A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness as the morning spread upon the mountains. . . . And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army, for his camp is very great; for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible: and who can abide it? See also 3d chapter, and Amos 1: 2; Jer. 25; 50, etc. But I need not quote all these words, which are "thus saith the Lord," to all those who are of the faith of Abraham, and I only do it to add that I am one of the few strong in the faith that now is the time of the fulfillment of these glorious promises to God's people and destruction of the wicked, as in '43, '44.

A Tabooed Subject.

It is a noticeable fact, that in most social circles the subject of religion is excluded by common consent. No matter how much interest those present may personally take in the subject, if any one happens to introduce it, he is set down as "eccentric," and the company labors under a feeling of constraint till a different topic of conversation is started. A theological argument, if it is true, is often indulged in without fear. But as for natural, outspoken conversation about religious duties and feelings, there is very little of it in any class of society. Perhaps the aversion to it arises from the fact that it is sometimes introduced as if it were "lugged in" from a sense of duty. We all feel the need of more religious conversation, which shall be serious without cant, and unrestrained without levity. A missionary in Burmah recorded that a pious Burmese woman startled her one morning, by asking her, "Have you prayed this morning?" in very much the same way in which she would have asked, "Have you been to breakfast?" Something of this child-like directness, in speaking about religion, should be nowhere regarded as out of place. There are few people who do not reflect much about their spiritual condition. Surely, then, it should be spoken of as freely as the thousand-and-one subjects of minor importance.—Examiner.

☞ There is nothing on earth so beautiful as the household in which christian love forever smiles, and where religion walks, a counsellor and a friend. No cloud can darken it, for its twin stars are centred in the soul. No storms can make it tremble, for it has a heavenly support and a heavenly anchor.

Infidelity.

Infidelity has no creed. It acknowledges no rule of faith and practice. "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God;" and the sceptical voluptuary, whose pent up passions struggle to break forth in lawless gratification, would be glad, could he persuade himself beyond the possibility of a doubt, that no being exists to survey his conduct and bring him to a solemn account. Of all the false systems of religion which the ever erring heart of fallen man has devised, scepticism is the most baseless absurdity. The vagaries of Joanna Southcott, or Joe Smith, though wild in the extreme, are but innocent fanaticisms compared with infidelity. Its bold denial of self-evident axioms and demonstrations shows that it offers the grossest insult to the reasoning faculties of the human mind. It would have you believe, in spite of yourself, that the globe we inhabit is but the result of a blind chance; although, at every step you take, you behold the "footsteps of a God." It would have you believe that the Holy Scriptures are but the artifices of designing men, while on every page you behold the internal marks of a glorious divinity, and the literal fulfillment of prophecy, uttered thousands of years ago. It would have you disbelieve the existence of a God, while our own being proves the very existence it denies. Overpowered by this conviction, the Russian poet exclaimed—

"I am, O God, and surely thou must be."

The infidelity of the last century boasted of the literary and scientific attainments of its votaries, and dazzled with its specious pretensions. Many of the vain and unthinking were lured to cluster around its standard, and test its unsubstantial pageantry. But what literary blessing did it ever confer on mankind? Of what great discovery could its abettors boast, except a knowledge that there is not a God, a pretension which involves infinitude?

The advocates of infidelity have laid claim to a superior reason, but it was perverted reason. They claimed to be men of cultivated taste, but their writings corrupted the public morals. They held up divine revelation to public scorn without investigation, "and spake against those things which they knew not," and their arguments were but mere sophisms. They laid claim to logical acumen; but it was the logic of negation.

Could we, for a moment admit the Infidel's theory to be correct,—could we grant that his arguments deserve the least respect, how valueless to man! how cheerless to know that earth with its vast resources, its wonderful productions, its millions of sentient beings, all bearing the impress of a Divine hand, is but a wild chaos thrown in promiscuous confusion from the lap of Nature, and man, with his vast powers of mind, the helpless creature of a hapless chance, doomed to sorrow and toil;—to be borne down by the iron arm of cruel oppression without the hope of justice here or hereafter, with the only consolation to support his dying moments, that "death is an eternal sleep."

It is not in the abstract reasoning of Voltaire and his associates of the French school,—or Herbert, Hobbes, Shaftsbury and Hume of the English, that we can see infidelity to the best advantage. Its constant aim has been to subvert every principle of our holy religion; to uproot every divine and benevolent institution; to overturn government of every kind and introduce a desolating anarchy. The horrid blasphemies which it uttered were indeed shocking to the christian ear; but when it undertook to educate the morals of France, it brought on that unhappy nation one of the most fearful revolutions which has ever fallen to the lot of history to record.

But it is not with the infidelity of the past that the christian minister has to contend at present. It still exists, industriously pursuing its dark path of deception; but consulting the ever shifting taste of society, it has assumed new forms; it has thrown around its deformity a dress of fashionable respectability. The pulpit and the press have been called to assist, and it is to be regretted that they have to some extent aided in diffusing its soul-destroying falsities. In the fashionable preaching of the present age, attempts have been made to modernize the doctrine of the cross, to suit the fastidious taste of the human heart, and what has been the result? Hidden below the garb of evangelical phraseology has been festering the scepticism which is tainting the various ramifications of society with its putridity. The too general cry is, give us something marvelous, something intellectual, and, by appetites so diseased, what absurdity will not be swallowed down with avidity? Creeds and other human productions are better guides to devotion than the Bible; a rationalistic philosophy, a truer gospel, and perverted reason the only rule of scriptural interpretation; and what has followed?

In Europe, the doctrines of the Reformation are expiring on the soil which gave them birth. The writer was lately in company with a clergyman, whose divinity course in one of the universities of Germany, has given him a theology little better than Pantheism. Nor is his a solitary case. With but few exceptions it is the same over the greater part of the continent. And in America, where the Pilgrim Fathers preached, and prayed, and suffered persecution, and whose faith energized them as seeing Him who is invisible, a gospel is preached in many places unworthy of the successors of so holy men, and scarcely able to restrain the growing rationalism, which is fast ripening into a bolder infidelity. When once the Scriptures have been rejected as the medium of intercourse with God and heaven, it is not surprising that those who have not dismissed all belief in the supernatural, should have recourse to the absurd mediums of a fanciful imagination. The excitement of the nervous system is, to some, a sure sign of a high spiritualism,—while to others, the ambiguous responses of a demon, through a pretended or undefined* science, are far more reliable than the word of truth, and are as eagerly sought for, as the far-famed oracles of Delphos and Dodona were by the ancient victims of heathenish superstition. And, could we grant, that such responses are worthy of the least credence, how wicked! how daring! to force an audience with the invisible world, when God has barred its entrance by Divine prohibition?

When we turn our attention to the Press, that mighty channel through which might flow the tidings of life to perishing millions of our fellow mortals,—and we rejoice that by its means many have been reached already, and "knowledge has been increased";—yet we deeply regret that a flood of demoralizing trash, in the shape of cheap literature, is constantly pouring upon the public, calculated to pervert the taste, enfeeble the judgment, ruin the morals, and pave the way for a hollow-hearted infidelity. In view of this state of things, what is to be done? Write religious novels? Just as easily might the tiny hand of an infant be upraised to avert the fearful avalanche. The vitiated taste will prefer the profane to the sacred novel. No compromise, no half-way measure can bind the giant corruption which threatens to stereotype infidelity on the world. The Bible, and the Bible alone, must become the young student's text-book in the Divinity Hall. And the minister of the gospel must bring with him into the combat the sword of the Spirit, stripped of the drapery of human ornament with which it has been muffled, and present its keen edge to the soul. Nor, need he fear success, "for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty," and, as sure as truth is truth, the naked truth from the Divine armory will put the boldest infidelity to the blush.

Hawksville, C. W. JAMES SIM.

* The electric current which acts on the nervous system and transmits impressions to the brain, is a common medium employed by good and evil spirits. Acts 2; Eph. 2. And wicked demons are in these last days doing all they can to deceive through that medium.

The Gospel.

The Gospel was first published to the Jews, even after our Lord's resurrection from the dead. The national covenant was dissolved, and all confidence in the fleshly relation was destroyed; but unto them first, God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless them in turning every one of them from his iniquities. And he bade his disciples to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And at Jerusalem they began on the day of Pentecost, when, by the baptism of the Spirit, they were endowed with the gift of tongues, and spake as the Spirit gave them utterance. Under the ministry of the word, three thousand were added to the church in one day. For some time all their efforts were directed to the conversion of the Jews. It is generally allowed, that it was three and a half years from the resurrection of Christ, before Peter went to Cornelius and preached the Gospel to him and his friends. So long were they in finding out that the commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, was intended to embrace the Gentiles. It required a remarkable vision thrice repeated, to convince Peter that God was no respecter of persons, and that the Gentiles were no longer to be regarded as unclean, and ceremonially excluded from the gospel privileges and blessings. It was a matter of surprise and rejoicing to all, when they found that unto the Gentiles also God had granted repentance unto life. Soon after that, Saul of Tarsus was in a remarkable manner converted to God, and commissioned to preach the Gospel among the Gentiles. His labors were abundant and his success proportionate, and many of the Gentiles were turned from darkness to light and from Satan to God. From that time to the present the kingdom of heaven has been preached, and believers have been added to the church. From land to land the glad tidings have been borne, and nation after nation has heard the voice of the herald of salvation proclaiming peace by Jesus Christ. Of late years, by means of Bible and Missionary societies, nearly, if not quite, every nation upon earth has been visited, and the gospel preached or published among them. And in this we have an indication that the end is approaching.—Christian Messenger.

☞ We have read of a serpent who bit a slanderer, and received so much more dreadful venom than that which he imparted that he died at once, but did not hurt the man. This poetic fiction teaches more truth than many which have a greater show of wisdom.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 16, 1861.

Inquiry.

BRO. GRANT:—What is your view of Isa. 26: 14, Jer. 51: 39, 57?

T. M. PREBLE.

Isa. 26: 14 reads, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." In the preceding chapter, when speaking of the glorious future, the prophet is instructed to say:—"And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—Isa. 25: 6–9. When quoting from Isa. 25: 8, Paul says, in 1 Cor. 15: 54, 55, "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The word "then," from Paul, refers to the time when "the last trump .... shall sound and the dead shall be raised." In the beginning of Isa. 26, the prophet says, "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in." This is evidently to be fulfilled after the resurrection. Hence we conclude that verse 14 of the same chapter, which is the one under consideration, is not fulfilled till after the resurrection and establishment of the righteous, in their Eden home.

When we turn to the last revelation, given by our Savior to John on the Isle of Patmos, we have this point brought out more fully, specifying the time when when we can say of the wicked, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited them and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." It is certain the wicked are yet in existence, therefore their visitation and destruction is still future. When is it? In Rev. 20: 4, we learn that the righteous are raised from the dead to reign a thousand years with Christ, which is "the first resurrection; and Paul tells us this is when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven." Bu the Savior instructs John to say to the churches, "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years are finished.' —Rev. 20: 5. The very plain inference is, that when the thousand years are finished, the rest of the dead will live again. Although the inference is so plain as to be perfectly satisfactory, yet we are not left without a positive declaration; for we read, "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and (hades) hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works." When death delivers up the dead, they come to life; otherwise, they are still in the hands of death. Death has held these men as prisoners, till they were demanded for judgment and execution; when they will come forth from sea and land. Subsequent to this, they are cast into "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 8. This is the last mention of the punishment of the wicked. When this Scripture is fulfilled, then comes in the language of Isaiah, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Then as David says, the wicked shall "be no more."

We pass to consider Jer. 51: 39, 57. The first reads:—"In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord." Ver. 57 reads:—"And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts." Both of these passages relate to the time when Babylon was overthrown. During the great feast, held the night the city was taken, many became drunk, and did not awake before they were slain; hence, their sleep is said to be "perpetual;" but this expression does not prove they will sleep eternally, but that their sleep caused by drunkenness, ended in death before they were awakened. If we look at a few examples of the use of the word rendered perpetual, it will be seen that it does not necessarily signify an unending period, but that which is "continued without intermission" for a specific time, as "the perpetual action of the heart and arteries."

"Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?" —Jer. 5: 22. This "perpetual decree" concerning the bounds of the sea continues only till the end of this dispensation. When we come to the new creation, the sea and its bounds are both changed. As Job says, "He hath compassed the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end." Then this "perpetual decree" ceases. Again, —"And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and put the bonnets on them: and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons." This "perpetual statute" concerning the Aaronic priesthood extends only to Christ. In Ezek. 46: 14, we read, "And thou shalt prepare a meat offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of a hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord." The "perpetual ordinance" concerning the "meat offering" does not reach beyond the sacrifice of our Savior upon the cross. The "perpetual statute," relative to the Aaronic priesthood, and the "perpetual ordinance" concerning the meat offerings, ended long since. The "perpetual decree" about the "bounds of the sea" will continue till "the times of restitution." And the "perpetual sleep" of those killed at Babylon while in a drunken sleep, is to continue till death and hades deliver them up for judgment and final execution, when they will die the "second death."

In the Targumist, Jer. 51: 39 reads:—"They shall die the second death, and shall not live in the world to come saith the Lord." In the same work, the 57th verse reads, "They shall die the "second death, so as not to enter in the world to come." As they are to die the "second death," they must live again; otherwise, they only die the first death; in that case, the second has no meaning. In order to have the second death, it appears certain that a portion of mankind must live and die, then live and die again.

Light Spreading.

A brother, who is connected with the Methodist Conference, and has had charge of a Seminary, has recently become interested in the great truths of the Bible that have been so long buried by theological rubbish, and is in a fair way to be made free by the truths of the Lord. He writes:—

"My object now is to read all the arguments I can find on the doctrines of the Bible, and also examine the Bible in its original, and strive to arrive at its true meaning. Whenever I become fully convinced in my own mind as to the true doctrine taught by the Bible, I am determined to come out from my present position, and advocate what I conceive to be truth.... I must confess I cannot agree with all the doctrines of the M. E. Church, and fear that I should be unable to sustain points which a minister in our church would be expected to defend... I think I have a desire to do what is right, and to be in a position where I can do the greatest amount of good to my fellow men; and although I have been in the M. E. Church ever since the age of twelve years, and am now past thirty, I feel that if I find I am wrong, I ought to leave and embrace that creed which is founded on the word of God."

Yes, brother, no creed will stand but the one "which is founded on the word of God." We do not know of a single creed in any of the popular sects that is in harmony with the Scriptures. As Charles Beecher says, "The time has come when men, having itching ears, and forms of godliness without the power, are heaping to themselves teachers; when they will not endure sound doctrine, but are turned aside unto fables." And the time, Paul says, is "in the last days, when "perilous times shall come." We would say to our brother, as Paul said to Timothy, "Preach the word." Let not the cry of "infidel," from worldly professors, alarm you. Be firm, "always abounding in the work of the Lord." Let no threats or frowns intimidate you, or prevent your declaring the whole truth. "STAND UP FOR JESUS."

Modern Spiritualism.

In answer to the question, "What is Modern Spiritualism, and where will it lead its followers?" a spirit answers:—

"Modern Spiritualism is to us the ultimatum of things spoken of long ago. It is a light shining from out a dense theological darkness—a star that has arisen from the religious horizon to lead man to peace—to a knowledge of himself and God. And again, Modern Spiritualism is the second advent of Jesus Christ. Jesus the spirit, Jesus the mortal, who walked among the sons and daughters of eighteen hundred years ago, walketh among the sons and daughters of to-day. Although clothed in another form, and given under a new dispensation, nevertheless Jesus walks to-day in Modern Spiritualism. The same power that worked miracles through Jesus the medium, works miracles to-day.... Modern Spiritualism is a religion—an all-glorious and holy religion—for to us religion is knowledge of the spiritual—a desire, a longing for something higher, holier and better.... For many years dense spiritual darkness settled over the earth, and when the children of earth were sitting in darkness, they cried aloud for light; and, in answer to the cry, light has come, and Jesus has returned again; and the spirit of peace, which seemingly slumbered, is shining with greater glory. The light is brought to your midst, and many temples may be illumined by it. Old theological foundations are trembling in consequence of the power of Modern Spiritualism. If it were evil, it could not penetrate the high places of life—it could not mingle with, and become a part of, God himself: and if men will only reason with the spirit of wisdom in each other, they will understand that Modern Spiritualism is of God."

So far as our observation extends, Modern Spiritualism leads its followers to reject Christ as our Savior, and the Bible as a revelation from God. It leads its votaries to deny that Christ is the Son of God more than any other man; it also leads them to deny the resurrection of the dead, and the second personal coming of Christ; and heads up in Atheism. We are fully satisfied it originated with demons, and will "lead its followers" to DESTRUCTION.

Her Boasting.

When General de None, a short time since, presented to the Pope the officers of the 63d Regiment, the Pontiff made the following remarks:—

"I am pleased to see in you the natives of that nation which glories in the title of Eldest Daughter of the Church, and it is to prove yourselves worthy of this title that you have come to Rome, seconding the ideas of your Emperor to support and defend the right of the church. And here, mark well, mark, dear sons, that the church stands in need of no man's help in support of her spiritual sovereignty; for being therein directly protected and enlightened by God, far from requiring the aid of the power of the earth, it is she who upholds nations and empires."

She thus identifies herself as the woman on the "seven hills," "which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Her boasting will soon end in total ruin.

The Approaching Calamities and Revolutions:

PREDICTED BY PROPHETIC EXPOSITORS.

Two lectures were delivered on Dec. 27th and 28th in the Brant Hall in this town, by the Rev. M. P. Baxter, Episcopal minister of Onondaga, C. W. The title of the lectures was, "The great tribulation in connection with the second coming of Christ about the period 1864–67." The views advanced by the lecturer in relation to this subject were in substance identical with those of the Revs. E. Bickersteth, T. Birks, E. Elliot, J. Hooper, and other divines of the Church of England, who have many years since published it as their opinion that the personal advent of Christ would take place about the year 1864. After the first stage in the advent at that time the great tribulation of three and a half years will follow, during which the whole earth will be filled with violence and sanguinary strifes. The battle of Armageddon occurs at the end of the three and a half years, and synchronizes with the second stage in the advent. At this battle the French Emperor and the Pope, according to the interpretation of Faber, Frere, Purdon, Rees, and others, will both be cast alive into the lake of fire.

An important event has been predicted by Bickersteth to take place about the year 1861. This event is the conformation by the French Emperor, who is the Infidel Antichrist, of a seven years covenant with the Jews to promote their restoration to Palestine. If Justinian's edict was given in March, 533, this covenant will probably be made in January, 1861, but the exact month was not suggested by the writer in question, who thought the covenant would be made about the year 1861. It is within three and a half years after the confirmation of the covenant that the resurrection and translation of the saints take place, and the destruction of the wicked does not occur immediately when this event transpires, but extends over the ensuing three and a half years, or latter half of the seven years, which is generally called Daniel's week. This last half of Daniel's week, from 1864 to 1868, is the season of the great tribulation, when both moral and literal earthquakes and convulsions will prevail universally, until "the inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left." At the termination of the millennium, which then follows, there is the general conflagration and the resurrection and judgment of the wicked, who are cast into the lake of fire, to be forever tormented. (?)

The evidence adduced from Scripture in support of the position taken regarding the years 1864–67, is grounded upon ten chronological dates, and four apocalyptic septenaries. The dates are the 6000, 2520, 2300, 1335, 1290, 1260, 666, 390, 350 and 7 years, which all point to 1864 as the latest period of the first stage of Christ's personal advent; and the septenaries are those of the seals, trumpets, vials, and seven heads of the Wild Beast. With regard to the revolutions to be expected among the nations of the earth, prophecy distinctly predicts that the French Emperor will obtain a universal empire over Europe with the vassal Kings under him, within the next two or three years; and there are various reasons for fearing that his dominion will extend even to the American continent. The indication given regarding the position of England in the forthcoming trials, are such as to awaken feelings of apprehension and alarm. In conclusion, the lecturer animadverted upon the spirit of scoffing and infidelity that widely prevails, even among professing christians, regarding the prophetic portion of God's Word, and dwelt upon the urgent necessity that exists, especially in view of these coming events, for every one to seek by diligent application to the Throne of Grace to become born again, as without this spiritual change none can escape the eternal vengeance about to descend upon the unconverted.—Brantford Courier.

For the Crisis.

Last Words of Jesus.

"Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—Luke 23: 34.

Luke is the only evangelist that records this prayer of Jesus, although the other three give the events that were connected with it, which caused him thus to pray to his Father. The word "they" in the text is a question with me to whom it refers; most people when speaking of it, give the impression that Jesus meant all that were concerned in his crucifixion, the chief priest and elders of the Jews, that condemned him, and those that said, "Away with him, crucify him." But I am inclined to believe quite differently. I think none of those Jews were meant in the prayer. But, says one, Christ prayed for his enemies, and all those Jews were his enemies. That is true; but we are to remember that the enemies of Jesus were divided into three classes.

1st. All those Jews that had the Scriptures, and especially the writings of Moses which testified of Jesus Christ, the Messiah to come, in which they all believed, and expected to be fulfilled.

2d. There were some of the Jews that professed to believe in a Messiah to come and set up his kingdom, but when he did come, and was doing the work the Scriptures said he should do, and when he cast out devils by the power of God, they say he cast them out through Beelzebub, the prince of devils, therefore sinning against the Holy Ghost.

3d. Were the ignorant Gentiles, the Roman soldiers who knew nothing of the Scriptures, and as the chief priests and elders had condemned him to death, and to be crucified with two thieves, they thought that he must have committed some awful crime, for which he ought to die, therefore they were not for him, and Jesus says, they that are not for me, are against me, and consequently were his enemies.

Now the question is, which of those three classes were "them" that Jesus prayed his Father to forgive? We think that it could not be the first, for the following reasons: I believe that Jesus never asked his Father for anything but what was granted. If God forgave the Jews their sin, in rejecting Jesus as their king, and condemning him to death, we should not hear Peter charging them with the crime of killing the Author of life (Whiting), and commanding them to repent. See Acts. 3: 14, 15—19; Acts 2: 36—38. Neither should we expect to see threatenings fulfilled that Jesus denounced them with. Luke 19: 44; Matt. 21: 44.—"And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken." See Isa. 8: 14, 15.—"A stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both houses of Israel," etc.; "and many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken." Now the account is, that the Jews did fall upon Jesus, bound him, and condemned him to death; and about A. D. 70, they were broken, and snared, and taken, and carried into captivity, and their city is to be "trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Therefore they were not "them" that Jesus prayed to be forgiven.

The 2d class were those that blasphemed against the Holy Ghost, and of course they were not the class. Then I think the Roman soldiers that were compelled to do the work of execution were the ones that Jesus prayed for—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." See Matt. 27: 27—36. And as we see that those that fell upon that stone were broken, so we may expect soon the stone will fall upon the ungodly governments and they will become like the "chaff of the summer's threshing floor: and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them."—Dan. 2: 34, 35. Who then shall be able to stand? None, only those that have clean hands and pure hearts. JOHN GIBSON.

Deception.

"Faith without works is dead." "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

The spirit of deception deceived those of the days of Noah. (The Word says, "The heart of man is deceitful above all things.") In the fulness of time, the same spirit of deception was in the Jewish church; which brought the wrath of God upon them to the uttermost. Now we have come to the time of the end—to Paul's prophecy of the perils in the last days, when the spirit of deception is in its full; when evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, saying, "Peace, peace," to the deceived multitudes, when God says no peace. The time has come when they "will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears"; and turn away their ears from the truth, and are turned into fables.

But the greatest deception foretold from the first of Genesis to the Amen of Revelations is, the drawing back of the foolish virgins, who professed to go forth to meet the Bridegroom. They have had the light of six thousand years, with the light of the time of the end, made blazing bright before their eyes; and the more that is given, the more will be required. "Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven," says Christ. Also, "Take heed that no man deceive you." Says Paul, "Let no man deceive himself."

The wise virgins truly find themselves to be strangers and pilgrims in a foreign land, looking, hoping, waiting, watching and praying for the coming Bridegroom, the better country with its heavenly city; esteeming the reproach for Christ greater riches than all the treasures of the world; having respect unto the recompense of the great reward. The church is said to have their hearts knit together in love, admonishing, and comforting one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.

"We shall have a joyful day,
When the King of kings comes."

But the foolish virgins are now at home, in their own native country. They profess to love God, but in works deny him, having forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the giddy multitude, having fallen in love with their company. They mix with fools in giddy joys that cheat and wound the heart. They have again become lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. And they know it not. They partake of the garments that characterize and particularize the scarlet beast. Thus it is happened unto them according to the true proverb,—"The dog is turned to his vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

The promise of salvation is only to them that endure to the end, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, even to such as tremble at the Word of God. The "Crisis" had a good question: "Could you ask Jesus to walk with you through a novel? Are you shocked at the very question? Then if you will walk throught it, you must part with Jesus. No man can delight in the Word of God and novels at the same time." Christ says, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." God is unchangeable; he is the same to-day as he was eighteen hundred years ago.

Christ has promised to be with his church until he comes again, even to such as observe the "all things." But there is no good promise for those that leave the church, be the church many or few. John says, "they went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us, but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not of us." Says Jude, "These be they who separate themselves, having not the Spirit." "If then I be a Father, where is mine honor, and if I be a Master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts, unto you that despise my commands." But the wise virgins, they that fear the Lord, speak often one to another, and the Lord sees, and hears, and has it all written in a book; with the glorious promise that they shall be his in the day when he makes up his jewels. It is one of the precious commands of the coming King, to his little flock,—not to forsake the assembling of themselves together, as the manner of some is; but to exhort, (comfort, edify, building up one another in the one faith and hope) "and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." They long for the first day of the week to come, to have the blessed privilege of commemorating the death of the once crucified, but now glorified and coming Redeemer, knowing as the Apostle says, if they would sin wilfully, after that they had received the knowledge of the truth, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Says Paul, "It is treading under foot the Son of God, and doing despite unto the Spirit of grace." "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams." "For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry." Though there was faith, that could remove mountains, and we have not that love that causeth obedience, it becomes as a sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. "And wilt thou know, oh vain man, that faith without works is dead?" "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." "Woe unto you (foolish virgins) that desire the day of the Lord, to what end is it, for you the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light."—Amos 5: 18.

One great cause of such declension and lukewarmness is, there is more head religion than heart; more theory than a holy, living practice; more conversation about the world than about the coming of Jesus; more conforming to the world, than being transformed into the image of Christ. Says Jesus, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." "But if ye love me, keep my commandments, that ye may have boldness in the day of judgment." "Perfect love casteth out fear." He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is

For the Crisis.

Infidelity.

Infidelity has no creed. It acknowledges no rule of faith and practice. "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God;" and the sceptical voluptuary, whose pent up passions struggle to break forth in lawless gratification, would be glad, could he persuade himself beyond the possibility of a doubt, that no being exists to survey his conduct and bring him to a solemn account. Of all the false systems of religion which the ever erring heart of fallen man has devised, scepticism is the most baseless absurdity. The vagaries of Joanna Southcott, or Joe Smith, though wild in the extreme, are but innocent fanaticisms compared with infidelity. Its bold denial of self-evident axioms and demonstrations shows that it offers the grossest insult to the reasoning faculties of the human mind. It would have you believe, in spite of yourself, that the globe we inhabit is but the result of a blind chance; although, at every step you take, you behold the "footsteps of a God." It would have you believe that the Holy Scriptures are but the artifices of designing men, while on every page you behold the internal marks of a glorious divinity, and the literal fulfillment of prophecy, uttered thousands of years ago. It would have you disbelieve the existence of a God, while our own being proves the very existence it denies. Overpowered by this conviction, the Russian poet exclaimed—

"I am, O God, and surely thou must be."

The infidelity of the last century boasted of the literary and scientific attainments of its votaries, and dazzled with its specious pretensions. Many of the vain and unthinking were lured to cluster around its standard, and test its unsubstantial pageantry. But what literary blessing did it ever confer on mankind? Of what great discovery could its abettors boast, except a knowledge that there is not a God, a pretension which involves infinitude?

The advocates of infidelity have laid claim to a superior reason, but it was perverted reason. They claimed to be men of cultivated taste, but their writings corrupted the public morals. They held up divine revelation to public scorn without investigation, "and spake against those things which they knew not," and their arguments were but mere sophisms. They laid claim to logical acumen; but it was the logic of negation.

Could we, for a moment admit the Infidel's theory to be correct,—could we grant that his arguments deserve the least respect, how valueless to man! how cheerless to know that earth with its vast resources, its wonderful productions, its millions of sentient beings, all bearing the impress of a Divine hand, is but a wild chaos thrown in promiscuous confusion from the lap of Nature, and man, with his vast powers of mind, the helpless creature of a hapless chance, doomed to sorrow and toil;—to be borne down by the iron arm of cruel oppression without the hope of justice here or hereafter, with the only consolation to support his dying moments, that "death is an eternal sleep."

It is not in the abstract reasoning of Voltaire and his associates of the French school,—or Herbert, Hobbes, Shaftsbury and Hume of the English, that we can see infidelity to the best advantage. Its constant aim has been to subvert every principle of our holy religion; to uproot every divine and benevolent institution; to overturn government of every kind and introduce a desolating anarchy. The horrid blasphemies which it uttered were indeed shocking to the christian ear; but when it undertook to educate the morals of France, it brought on that unhappy nation one of the most fearful revolutions which has ever fallen to the lot of history to record.

But it is not with the infidelity of the past that the christian minister has to contend at present. It still exists, industriously pursuing its dark path of deception; but consulting the ever shifting taste of society, it has assumed new forms; it has thrown around its deformity a dress of fashionable respectability. The pulpit and the press have been called to assist, and it is to be regretted that they have to some extent aided in diffusing its soul-destroying falsities. In the fashionable preaching of the present age, attempts have been made to modernize the doctrine of the cross, to suit the fastidious taste of the human heart, and what has been the result? Hidden below the garb of evangelical phraseology has been festering the scepticism which is tainting the various ramifications of society with its putridity. The too general cry is, give us something marvelous, something intellectual, and, by appetites so diseased, what absurdity will not be swallowed down with avidity? Creeds and other human productions are better guides to devotion than the Bible; a rationalistic philosophy, a truer gospel, and perverted reason the only rule of scriptural interpretation; and what has followed?

In Europe, the doctrines of the Reformation are expiring on the soil which gave them birth. The writer was lately in company with a clergyman, whose divinity course in one of the universities of Germany, has given him a theology little better than Pantheism. Nor is this a solitary case. With but few exceptions it is the same over the greater part of the continent. And in America, where the Pilgrim Fathers preached, and prayed, and suffered persecution, and whose faith energized them as seeing Him who is invisible, a gospel is preached in many places unworthy of the successors of so holy men, and scarcely able to restrain the growing rationalism, which is fast ripening into a bolder infidelity. When once the Scriptures have been rejected as the medium of intercourse with God and heaven, it is not surprising that those who have not dismissed all belief in the supernatural, should have recourse to the absurd mediums of a fanciful imagination. The excitement of the nervous system is, to some, a sure sign of a high spiritualism,—while to others, the ambiguous responses of a demon, through a pretended or undefined* science, are far more reliable than the word of truth, and are as eagerly sought for, as the far-famed oracles of Delphos and Dodona were by the ancient victims of heathenish superstition. And, could we grant, that such responses are worthy of the least credence, how wicked! how daring! to force an audience with the invisible world, when God has barred its entrance by Divine prohibition?

When we turn our attention to the Press, that mighty channel through which might flow the tidings of life to perishing millions of our fellow mortals,—and we rejoice that by its means many have been reached already, and "knowledge has been increased";—yet we deeply regret that a flood of demoralizing trash, in the shape of cheap literature, is constantly pouring upon the public, calculated to pervert the taste, enfeeble the judgment, ruin the morals, and pave the way for a hollow-hearted infidelity. In view of this state of things, what is to be done? Write religious novels? Just as easily might the tiny hand of an infant be upraised to avert the fearful avalanche. The vitiated taste will prefer the profane to the sacred novel. No compromise, no half-way measure can bind the giant corruption which threatens to stereotype infidelity on the world. The Bible, and the Bible alone, must become the young student's text-book in the Divinity Hall. And the minister of the gospel must bring with him into the combat the sword of the Spirit, stripped of the drapery of human ornament with which it has been muffled, and present its keen edge to the soul. Nor, need he fear success, "for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty," and, as sure as truth is truth, the naked truth from the Divine armory will put the boldest infidelity to the blush.

Hawksville, C. W. JAMES SIM.

* The electric current which acts on the nervous system and transmits impressions to the brain, is a common medium employed by good and evil spirits. Acts 2; Eph. 2. And wicked demons are in these last days doing all they can to deceive through that medium.

The Gospel.

The Gospel was first published to the Jews, even after our Lord's resurrection from the dead. The national covenant was dissolved, and all confidence in the fleshly relation was destroyed; but unto them first, God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless them in turning every one of them from his iniquities. And he bade his disciples to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And at Jerusalem they began on the day of Pentecost, when, by the baptism of the Spirit, they were endowed with the gift of tongues, and spake as the Spirit gave them utterance. Under the ministry of the word, three thousand were added to the church in one day. For some time all their efforts were directed to the conversion of the Jews. It is generally allowed, that it was three and a half years from the resurrection of Christ, before Peter went to Cornelius and preached the Gospel to him and his friends. So long were they in finding out that the commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, was intended to embrace the Gentiles. It required a remarkable vision thrice repeated, to convince Peter that God was no respecter of persons, and that the Gentiles were no longer to be regarded as unclean, and ceremonially excluded from the gospel privileges and blessings. It was a matter of surprise and rejoicing to all, when they found that unto the Gentiles also God had granted repentance unto life. Soon after that, Saul of Tarsus was in a remarkable manner converted to God, and commissioned to preach the Gospel among the Gentiles. His labors were abundant and his success proportionate, and many of the Gentiles were turned from darkness to light and from Satan to God. From that time to the present the kingdom of heaven has been preached, and believers have been added to the church. From land to land the glad tidings have been borne, and nation after nation has heard the voice of the herald of salvation proclaiming peace by Jesus Christ. Of late years, by means of Bible and Missionary societies, nearly, if not quite, every nation upon earth has been visited, and the gospel preached or published among them. And in this we have an indication that the end is approaching.—Christian Messenger.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 16, 1861.

Inquiry.

BRO. GRANT:—What is your view of Isa. 26 : 14, Jer. 51 : 39, 57?

T. M. PREBLE.

Isa. 26 : 14 reads, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." In the preceding chapter, when speaking of the glorious future, the prophet is instructed to say:—"And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—Isa. 25 : 6-9. When quoting from Isa. 25 : 8, Paul says, in 1 Cor. 15 : 54, 55, "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The word "then," from Paul, refers to the time when "the last trump . . . . shall sound and the dead shall be raised." In the beginning of Isa. 26, the prophet says, "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in." This is evidently to be fulfilled after the resurrection. Hence we conclude that verse 14 of the same chapter, which is the one under consideration, is not fulfilled till after the resurrection and establishment of the righteous, in their Eden home.

When we turn to the last revelation, given by our Savior to John on the Isle of Patmos, we have this point brought out more fully, specifying the time when when we can say of the wicked, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited them and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." It is certain the wicked are yet in existence, therefore their visitation and destruction is still future. When is it? In Rev. 20 : 4, we learn that the righteous are raised from the dead to reign a thousand years with Christ, which is "the first resurrection; and Paul tells us this is when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven." Bu the Savior instructs John to say to the churches, "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years are finished.' —Rev. 20 : 5. The very plain inference is, that when the thousand years are finished, the rest of the dead will live again. Although the inference is so plain as to be perfectly satisfactory, yet we are not left without a positive declaration; for we read, "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and (hades) hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works." When death delivers up the dead, they come to life; otherwise, they are still in the hands of death. Death has held these men as prisoners, till they were demanded for judgment and execution; when they will come forth from sea and land. Subsequent to this, they are cast into "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."—Rev. 21 : 8. This is the last mention of the punishment of the wicked. When this Scripture is fulfilled, then comes in the language of Isaiah, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Then as David says, the wicked shall "be no more."

We pass to consider Jer. 51 : 39, 57. The first reads:—"In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord." Ver. 57 reads:—"And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts." Both of these passages relate to the time when Babylon was overthrown. During the great feast, held the night the city was taken, many became drunk, and did not awake before they were slain; hence, their sleep is said to be "perpetual;" but this expression does not prove they will sleep eternally, but that their sleep caused by drunkenness, ended in death before they were awakened. If we look at a few examples of the use of the word rendered perpetual, it will be seen that it does not necessarily signify an unending period, but that which is "continued without intermission" for a specific time; as "the perpetual ordinance to the heart and arteries." "Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?" —Jer. 5 : 22. This "perpetual decree" concerning the bounds of the sea continues only till the end of this dispensation. When we come to the new creation, the sea and its bounds are both changed. As Job says, "He hath compassed the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end." Then this "perpetual decree" ceases. Again, —"And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and put the bonnets on them: and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons." This "perpetual statute" concerning the Aaronic priesthood extends only to Christ. In Ezek. 46 : 14, we read, "And thou shalt prepare a meat offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of a hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord." The "perpetual ordinance" concerning the "meat offering" does not reach beyond the sacrifice of our Savior upon the cross. The "perpetual statute," relative to the Aaronic priesthood, and the "perpetual ordinance" concerning the meat offerings, ended long since. The "perpetual decree" about the "bounds of the sea" will continue till "the times of restitution." And the "perpetual sleep" of those killed at Babylon while in a drunken sleep, is to continue till death and hades deliver them up for judgment and final execution, when they will die the "second death."

In the Targumist, Jer. 51 : 39 reads: —"They shall die the second death, and shall not live in the world to come saith the Lord." In the same work, the 57th verse reads, "They shall die the "second death, so as not to enter in the world to come." As they are to die the "second death," they must live again; otherwise, they only die the first death; in that case, the second has no meaning. In order to have the second death, it appears certain that a portion of mankind must live and die, then live and die again.

Light Spreading.

A brother, who is connected with the Methodist Conference, and has had charge of a Seminary, has recently become interested in the great truths of the Bible that have been so long buried by theological rubbish, and is in a fair way to be made free by the truths of the Lord. He writes:—

"My object now is to read all the arguments I can find on the doctrines of the Bible, and also examine the Bible in its original, and strive to arrive at its true meaning. Whenever I become fully convinced in my own mind as to the true doctrine taught by the Bible, I am determined to come out from my present position, and advocate what I conceive to be truth. . . . I must confess I cannot agree with all the doctrines of the M. E. Church, and fear that I should be unable to sustain points which a minister in our church would be expected to defend. . . I think I have a desire to do what is right, and to be in a position where I can do the greatest amount of good to my fellow men; and although I have been in the M. E. Church ever since the age of twelve years, and am now past thirty, I feel that if I find I am wrong, I ought to leave and embrace that creed which is founded on the word of God."

Yes, brother, no creed will stand but the one "which is founded on the word of God." We do not know of a single creed in any of the popular sects that is in harmony with the Scriptures. As Charles Beecher says, "The time has come when men, having itching ears, and forms of godliness without the power, are heaping to themselves teachers; when they will not endure sound doctrine, but are turned aside unto fables." And the time, Paul says, is "in the last days, when "perilous times shall come." We would say to our brother, as Paul said to Timothy, "Preach the word." Let not the cry of "infidel," from worldly professors, alarm you. Be firm, "always abounding in the work of the Lord." Let no threats or frowns intimidate you, or prevent your declaring the whole truth. "STAND UP FOR JESUS."

Modern Spiritualism.

In answer to the question, "What is Modern Spiritualism, and where will it lead its followers?" a spirit answers:—

"Modern Spiritualism is to us the ultimatum of things spoken of long ago. It is a light shining from out a dense theological darkness—a star that has arisen from the religious horizon to lead man to peace—to a knowledge of himself and God. And again, Modern Spiritualism is the second advent of Jesus Christ. Jesus the spirit, Jesus the mortal, who walked among the sons and daughters of eighteen hundred years ago, walketh among the sons and daughters of to-day. Although clothed in another form, and given under a new dispensation, nevertheless Jesus walks to-day in Modern Spiritualism. The same power that worked miracles through Jesus the medium, works miracles to-day. . . . Modern Spiritualism is a religion—an all-glorious and holy religion—for to us religion is knowledge of the spiritual—a desire, a longing for something higher, holier and better. . . . For many years dense spiritual darkness settled over the earth, and when the children of earth were sitting in darkness, they cried aloud for light; and, in answer to the cry, light has come, and Jesus has returned again; and the spirit of peace, which seemingly slumbered, is shining with greater glory. The light is brought to your midst, and many temples may be illumined by it. Old theological foundations are trembling in consequence of the power of Modern Spiritualism. If it were evil, it could not penetrate the high places of life—it could not mingle with, and become a part of, God himself: and if men will only reason with the spirit of wisdom in each other, they will understand that Modern Spiritualism is of God."

So far as our observation extends, Modern Spiritualism leads its followers to reject Christ as our Savior, and the Bible as a revelation from God. It leads its votaries to deny that Christ is the Son of God more than any other man; it also leads them to deny the resurrection of the dead, and the second personal coming of Christ; and heads up in Atheism. We are fully satisfied it originated with demons, and will "lead its followers" to DESTRUCTION.

Her Boasting.

When General de None, a short time since, presented to the Pope the officers of the 63d Regiment, the Pontiff made the following remarks:—

"I am pleased to see in you the natives of that nation which glories in the title of Eldest Daughter of the Church, and it is to prove yourselves worthy of this title that you have come to Rome, seconding the ideas of your Emperor to support and defend the right of the church. And here, mark well, mark, dear sons, that the church stands in need of no man's help in support of her spiritual sovereignty; for being therein directly protected and enlightened by God, far from requiring the aid of the power of the earth, it is she who upholds nations and empires."

She thus identifies herself as the woman on the "seven hills," "which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Her boasting will soon end in total ruin.

The Approaching Calamities and Revolutions:

PREDICTED BY PROPHETIC EXPOSITORS.

Two lectures were delivered on Dec. 27th and 28th in the Brant Hall in this town, by the Rev. M. P. Baxter, Episcopal minister of Onondaga, C. W. The title of the lectures was, "The great tribulation in connection with the second coming of Christ about the period 1864–67." The views advanced by the lecturer in relation to this subject were in substance identical with those of the Revs. E. Bickersteth, T. Birks, E. Elliot, J. Hooper, and other divines of the Church of England, who have many years since published it as their opinion that the personal advent of Christ would take place about the year 1864. After the first stage in the advent at that time the great tribulation of three and a half years will follow, during which the whole earth will be filled with violence and sanguinary strifes. The battle of Armageddon occurs at the end of the three and a half years, and synchronizes with the second stage in the advent. At this battle the French Emperor and the Pope, according to the interpretation of Faber, Frere, Purdon, Rees, and others, will both be cast alive into the lake of fire.

An important event has been predicted by Bickersteth to take place about the year 1861. This event is the conformation by the French Emperor, who is the Infidel Antichrist, of a seven years covenant with the Jews to promote their restoration to Palestine. If Justinian's edict was given in March, 533, this covenant will probably be made in January, 1861, but the exact month was not suggested by the writer in question, who thought the covenant would be made about the year 1861. It is within three and a half years after the confirmation of the covenant that the resurrection and translation of the saints take place, and the destruction of the wicked does not occur immediately when this event transpires, but extends over the ensuing three and a half years, or latter half of the seven years, which is generally called Daniel's week. This last half of Daniel's week, from 1864 to 1868, is the season of the great tribulation, when both moral and literal earthquakes and convulsions will prevail universally, until "the inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left." At the termination of the millennium, which then follows, there is the general conflagration and the resurrection and judgment of the wicked, who are cast into the lake of fire, to be forever tormented. (?)

The evidence adduced from Scripture in support of the position taken regarding the years 1864–67, is grounded upon ten chronological dates, and four apocalyptic septenaries. The dates are the 6000, 2520, 2300, 1335, 1290, 1260, 666, 390, 350 and 7 years, which all point to 1864 as the latest period of the first stage of Christ's personal advent; and the septenaries are those of the seals, trumpets, vials, and seven heads of the Wild Beast. With regard to the revolutions to be expected among the nations of the earth, prophecy distinctly predicts that the French Emperor will obtain a universal empire over Europe with the vassal Kings under him, within the next two or three years; and there are various reasons for fearing that his dominion will extend even to the American continent. The indication given regarding the position of England in the forthcoming trials, are such as to awaken feelings of apprehension and alarm. In conclusion, the lecturer animadverted upon the spirit of scoffing and infidelity that widely prevails, even among professing christians, regarding the prophetic portion of God's Word, and dwelt upon the urgent necessity that exists, especially in view of these coming events, for every one to seek by diligent application to the Throne of Grace to become born again, as without this spiritual change none can escape the eternal vengeance about to descend upon the unconverted.—Brantford Courier.

Last Words of Jesus.

"Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—Luke 23: 34.

Luke is the only evangelist that records this prayer of Jesus, although the other three give the events that were connected with it, which caused him thus to pray to his Father. The word "they" in the text is a question with me to whom it refers; most people when speaking of it, give the impression that Jesus meant all that were concerned in his crucifixion, the chief priest and elders of the Jews, that condemned him, and those that said, "Away with him, crucify him." But I am inclined to believe quite differently. I think none of those Jews were meant in the prayer. But, says one, Christ prayed for his enemies, and all those Jews were his enemies. That is true; but we are to remember that the enemies of Jesus were divided into three classes.

1st. All those Jews that had the Scriptures, and especially the writings of Moses which testified of Jesus Christ, the Messiah to come, in which they all believed, and expected to be fulfilled.

2d. There were some of the Jews that professed to believe in a Messiah to come and set up his kingdom, but when he did come, and was doing the work the Scriptures said he should do, and when he cast out devils by the power of God, they say he cast them out through Beelzebub, the prince of devils, therefore sinning against the Holy Ghost.

3d. Were the ignorant Gentiles, the Roman soldiers who knew nothing of the Scriptures, and as the chief priests and elders had condemned him to death, and to be crucified with two thieves, they thought that he must have committed some awful crime, for which he ought to die, therefore they were not for him, and Jesus says, they that are not for me, are against me, and consequently were his enemies.

Now the question is, which of those three classes were "them" that Jesus prayed his Father to forgive? We think that it could not be the first, for the following reasons: I believe that Jesus never asked his Father for anything but what was granted. If God forgave the Jews their sin, in rejecting Jesus as their king, and condemning him to death, we should not hear Peter charging them with the crime of killing the Author of life (Whiting), and commanding them to repent. See Acts. 3 : 14, 15—19; Acts 2 : 36—38. Neither should we expect to see threatenings fulfilled that Jesus denounced them with. Luke 19 : 44; Matt. 21 : 44.—"And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken." See Isa. 8 : 14, 15.—"A stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both houses of Israel," etc.; "and many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken." Now the account is, that the Jews did fall upon Jesus, bound him, and condemned him to death; and about A. D. 70, they were broken, and snared, and taken, and carried into captivity, and their city is to be "trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Therefore they were not "them" that Jesus prayed to be forgiven.

The 2d class were those that blasphemed against the Holy Ghost, and of course they were not the class. Then I think the Roman soldiers that were compelled to do the work of execution were the ones that Jesus prayed for—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." See Matt. 27 : 27—36. And as we see that those that fell upon that stone were broken, so we may expect soon the stone will fall upon the ungodly governments and they will become like the "chaff of the summer's threshing floor: and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them."—Dan. 2 : 34, 35. Who then shall be able to stand? None, only those that have clean hands and pure hearts. JOHN GIBSON.

Deception.

The spirit of deception deceived those of the days of Noah. (The Word says, "The heart of man is deceitful above all things.") In the fulness of time, the same spirit of deception was in the Jewish church; which brought the wrath of God upon them to the uttermost. Now we have come to the time of the end—to Paul's prophecy of the perils in the last days, when the spirit of deception is in its full; when evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, saying, "Peace, peace," to the deceived multitudes, when God says no peace. To the unwary, when they "will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears"; and turn away their ears from the truth, and are turned into fables.

But the greatest deception foretold from the first of Genesis to the Amen of Revelations is, the drawing back of the foolish virgins, who professed to go forth to meet the Bridegroom. They have had the light of six thousand years, with the light of the time of the end, made blazing bright before their eyes; and the more that is given, the more will be required. "Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven," says Christ. Also, "Take heed that no man deceive you." Says Paul, "Let no man deceive himself."

The wise virgins truly find themselves to be strangers and pilgrims in a foreign land, looking, hoping, waiting, watching and praying for the coming Bridegroom, the better country with its heavenly city; esteeming the reproach for Christ greater riches than all the treasures of the world; having respect unto the recompense of the great reward. The church is said to have their hearts knit together in love, admonishing, and comforting one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.

"We shall have a joyful day,
When the King of kings comes."

But the foolish virgins are now at home, in their own native country. They profess to love God, but in works deny him, having forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the giddy multitude, having fallen in love with their company. They mix with fools in giddy joys that cheat and wound the heart. They have again become lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. And they know it not. They partake of the garments that characterize and particularize the scarlet beast. Thus it is happened unto them according to the true proverb,—"The dog is turned to his vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

The promise of salvation is only to them that endure to the end, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, even to such as tremble at the Word of God. The "Crisis" had a good question: "Could you ask Jesus to walk with you through a novel? Are you shocked at the very question? Then if you will walk throught it, you must part with Jesus. No man can delight in the Word of God and novels at the same time." Christ says, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." God is unchangeable; he is the same to-day as he was eighteen hundred years ago.

Christ has promised to be with his church until he comes again, even to such as observe the "all things." But there is no good promise for those that leave the church, be the church many or few. John says, "they went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us, but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not of us." Says Jude, "These be they who separate themselves, having not the Spirit." "If then I be a Father, where is mine honor, and if I be a Master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts, unto you that despise my commands." But the wise virgins, they that fear the Lord, speak often one to another, and the Lord sees, and hears, and has it all written in a book; with the glorious promise that they shall be his in the day when he makes up his jewels. It is one of the precious commands of the coming King, to his little flock,—not to forsake the assembling of themselves together, as the manner of some is; but to exhort, (comfort, edify, building up one another in the one faith and hope) "and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." They long for the first day of the week to come, to have the blessed privilege of commemorating the death of the once crucified, but now glorified and coming Redeemer, knowing as the Apostle says, if they would sin wilfully, after that they had received the knowledge of the truth, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Says Paul, "It is treading under foot the Son of God, and doing despite unto the Spirit of grace." "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams." "For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry." Though there was faith, that could remove mountains, and we have not that love that causeth obedience, it becomes as a sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. "And wilt thou know, oh vain man, that faith without works is dead?" "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." "Woe unto you (foolish virgins) that desire the day of the Lord, to what end is it, for you the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light."—Amos 5 : 18.

One great cause of such declension and lukewarmness is, there is more head religion than heart; more theory than a holy, living practice; more conversation about the world than about the coming of Jesus; more conforming to the world, than being transformed into the image of Christ. Says Jesus, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." "But if ye love me, keep my commandments, that ye may have boldness in the day of judgment." "Perfect love casteth out fear." He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely, I come quickly. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus." JAMES MORRISON.

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

Bro. Preble thinks that the main point in his inquiries has been overlooked by those who have replied to them. Now I am very sure that I did not overlook the point, and that I did directly reply to it.

His last inquiries are the same in substance as the former, and of course require the same answer. The substance of them is this: Did Jesus exist before he was born of Mary, and is Jesus, the Son of God, more than eighteen hundred and sixty-five years old?

The name Jesus is about as old as Bro. Preble thinks. The angel said to Mary, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus." And also, "He shall be called the Son of God." These two names were applied to that child, born of Mary, about the time our brother supposes. It is also as evident, that this person is as old as the beginning of the creation of God. Before the world was, he was not called by these names, but by other names, such as God, the Word of God.

The age of a name, and the age of a person may be wide apart. This is self-evident, on the principle that names may be changed or added to any person or thing long after they have a being. So he who was called Christ, might have existed before the worlds were made; and hence John's record be true, "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made."

The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. When the Lord from heaven took on him the seed of Abraham, he was called Jesus, about the time that Bro. P. thinks. But he as a being is of old, "from everlasting." He called himself the Son of Man, and at the same time spake of himself as the same being who was with the Father before the world was. Books! Books!

I have just published more than a ton of books and tracts, and they are not all paid for yet. I want to sell enough to pay for them, and let the rest slide with or without price. Who will order one, two, five, ten or twenty dollars' worth, and send cash with the order?

Times are hard, many are out of work—they can read now. Who can furnish them something to read? I have "Voice of the Church," price $1, which is, to use the words of E. Burnham, "the best book in the whole Advent library." The sixth edition is just issued in very neat style. "Great Controversy" and "Reasons for my Hope," bound together in extra cloth, red edges, 75 cts. "Controversy," "Reasons," and "Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion," by Ramsey, in paper, 25 cts. each. Five copies for $1; thirty copies for $5; fifty copies for $8; one hundred copies for $15. "Pauline Theology," 15 cts. each; $1 for ten copies; $4.25 for fifty copies; $8 for one hundred copies. Bibles on hand for those who wish them.

The Tract Fund yet holds out. Send in your orders for TRACTS with or without price. Address orders for books and tracts, with the cash, to

Correspondence.

From B. P. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—The good Lord is to work in power in South Pittsfield, in the neighborhood of the Pond school-house. Backsliders are coming home to their Father's house. Sinners are giving up to God. A goodly number have started. Truth is gaining ground, and faith in the coming of the Lord, the sleep of the dead, and destruction of the wicked. Praise the Lord. The enemy is in a rage about the matter. My prayer is, let the truth spread.

Stratham, N. H. Jan. 11th.

From Bro. S. Curry.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is with us in our Mission church in 24th Street. Our meetings are spiritual, interesting and glorious. The power of the Lord is present to heal all those who seek him, at any meeting of the church. Quite a large number of persons have sought and found him, and others are still seeking.

A goodly number of the lovers of Christ's appearing, who in our extensive city have been scattered, have found us out, and not only meet with us regularly, but receive with gladness the ingrafted Word which is able to save them.

I congratulate the lovers of Jesus, who have been looking for Him for eighteen years or more, on the signs of the times! Hold on, beloved, and rest assured, that whoever else is disappointed, we shall not be. We cannot be mistaken, the promise is sure to all the seed.—Rom. 4:16. All depends on the resurrection from the dead, and nothing but a resurrection of our whole being, will satisfy us (we speak boldly). We claim it as our right, by virtue of our heirship with Jesus.

This mongrel gospel of death that many are trying to substitute for the glorious gospel of Christ, looks more hateful than ever. Praise the Lord, it is doomed to oblivion forever,—a good riddance to it, and him who is its power. Amen and amen.

Obituary Notice.

Died, in Warner, N. H., Dec. 15th, 1860, of consumption, HARRIET P., eldest daughter of G. S. Morgan, Esq., aged twenty years and thirteen days.

The subject of this notice thought she experienced a change of heart nearly six years ago; but being possessed of a retiring disposition, she did not make a public profession of religion, and consequently, it being a part of the plan of God, that while "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, with the mouth confession is made unto salvation," it was but natural that she, failing to do this, should cease to make that progress in the divine life that the gospel requires. Endowed by nature with qualities of mind and heart that endeared her to her friends and acquaintances, and made her outward life compare favorably with that of many who make greater pretensions to godliness, still it is to be feared that not until the ruthless hand of that unpitying disease that never spares its victim was laid upon her, was her mind fully aroused to the importance of making the necessary preparation to meet the Searcher of hearts in peace, and she enabled to "touch the hem of the Savior's garments." In the last part of her sickness she conversed freely and very calmly with friends concerning her approaching dissolution, assured them she felt prepared for the event, and finally "passed away without a sigh, as a flowret breathes its last odor."

Thus for the third time within the last three years has this family circle been broken. First, two lovely children, the pets of the household, were laid away in the dreamless sleep, that knows no waking until the dawning of that cloudless morn of glory that shall gild creation with its radiant beams, and bring Rachel's children from the enemy's land to their own border: and now the eldest daughter is torn from their embrace just at that interesting period of life when earth seems all bright, and beautiful, and good, ere sorrow had dimmed her eyes with weeping, or care had left a shadow on her brow. May those who are left to mourn, turn for consolation in their bereavement to Him whose sympathetic heart led him to shed bitter tears of sorrow at the grave of Lazarus, and even to invade the dominions of the grim monster himself, to snatch from his terrible embrace "the only son of his mother, and she a widow." The funeral services were conducted by Eld. S. W. Bishop, who addressed a large audience from words found in the 35th verse of that inimitable chapter, the 15th of 1 Cor.:—"How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?"

We smoothed back the brown hair from off her fair forehead,
And laid her white hands softly down by her side;
And folding her robe o'er her delicate bosom,
Presented stern Death with his beautiful bride.

We bore her away with his mantle around her,
And laid 'neath the tear-bedewed willow her head;
And calmly she rests, in his cold embrace sleeping,
With the snow-curtain drawn round her low nuptial bed.

Peace be to thy slumbers! till the glad light of morning
Shall chase with its brightness the shadows away;
Till then, o'er thy couch with its wintry adorning,
May the bright beams of Bethlehem's star softly play.

Yes, rest thou in peace! until He who hath bought thee,
In majesty robed, and in glory shall come;
And breaking thy slumbers, from death's claims absolve thee,
And take thee to dwell in His own Eden home.

L. R. K. BISHOP.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 25th.]

Italian affairs remained unchanged. The French fleet was about to quit Gaeta. It was, however, rumored in Paris that Russia and France had agreed to support Francis II. in his resistance until spring. Great demoralization was reported in the besieged army in Gaeta.

A decree was preparing at Naples, ordering an extraordinary levy of men between eighteen and fifty-five years of age.

Placards had been posted at Rome, bearing the arms of Victor Emmanuel, and the words, "We desire annexation to Sardinia." They were surrounded by crowds; no arrests were made.

Latest advices from China confirm the news that a ratification of the treaty had been exchanged. The convention was signed at Pekin, Oct. 24th. The English and French Ambassadors had taken up their residence in Pekin, and would remain there until Nov. 9th. The French army retired from Pekin on the first of Nov. The English army would remain until the Ambassadors left. A large force would remain at Tien-Tsin until the conditions of the treaty were fulfilled.

The principal clauses of the treaty are as follows: The Emperor apologizes for the Peiho affair of last year; the Ministers are to reside at Pekin; the indemnity fixed upon is to be doubled; Tien-Tsin is to be opened to foreign trade immediately; emigration is to be allowed; Chowlow is to be ceded to Great Britain. The treaty was to be promulgated throughout China. Chusan was to be evacuated by the British force.

It is stated that the warlike preparations in France exceed those of 1858.

The Empress Eugenie is not allowed to attend Cabinet meetings, as formerly.

The siege of Gaeta continued day and night.

A decree constitutes Naples, Sicily, the Marches and Umbria integral parts of the State of Sicily.

SYRIA.

The Beyrout correspondent of the Daily News, in a letter dated Dec. 7, insists that a prolongation of the French occupation of Syria is necessary to prevent another massacre of the Christians. The mortality among the Christians of the Lebanon is fearful.

HUNGARY.

A Vienna letter says: "From time to time there are disturbances in Hungary, but they are much less serious than they were a few weeks ago. It cannot, however, be doubted that preparations are being made for an outbreak in the spring, and that the Separatists in Hungary are in correspondence with the Revolutionists on the side of the frontier. It is a notorious fact that large depots of arms have recently been formed in the Danubian Principalities, and it is now acknowledged at Constantinople that three Sardinian vessels laden with arms escaped the 'watchfulness' of the Turkish authorities."

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post says that the Emperor Napoleon has been deceived by Francis II. His Imperial Majesty was given to understand that if he left a door open for the retreat of the King he (Francis II) would, without much delay, avail himself of such a privilege. But the Bourbon, yielding to Austrian and Spanish counsels, resolved to deceive the Emperor of the French, and endeavor to turn his protection into a means for creating anarchy in the Two Sicilies. The Emperor and his advisers are therefore disgusted at a sovereign educated in the art of deception; and the writer says—"I am happy to inform you that Napoleon III. will not much longer extend his protection to Francis II."

GAETA, Dec 18.—An enormous quantity of shot and shell was thrown into Gaeta yesterday by the Sardinians; some fell into the garden of the palace, where the King and Queen were dining with the Ambassador. The bombardment has since slackened. The damage in the town is not considerable. The King has received a letter from the Emperor Napoleon who expresses a sympathy for the King, but tells him he has carried on the siege long enough for his honor. The King, in reply, thanked the Emperor, but added that he considered it his duty to persist in the defence.

The Pope is represented as being so much in want of money, that he is about to turn into cash a portion of the presents he has received. This device is set forth in a letter from Rome, given in the Debats:

A grand lottery is in course of organization here, in which some sixty of the prizes will be articles sent us presents to the Holy Father. Among them are many articles of ladies' toilet, such as gold pins, jewels, and diamonds. Princess Borghese and many other persons of different countries are at the head of this undertaking. Tickets are to be had for 1f. apiece.

DOMESTIC.

Charleston, Jan. 9.—The steamer Star of the West in endeavoring to enter the harbor about daylight this morning was fired upon by the garrison on Morris' Island and also by Fort Moultrie. The steamer put about and went to sea.

Lieut. Hall of Fort Sumter came to the city about 11 o'clock with a flag of truce. He repaired to the Governor's quarters followed by a larg crowd of citizens. He (Hall) was in secret communication with the Governor and Council for two hours.

The people are intensely excited. No demonstration was made against Hall. Great curiosity is manifested to know what Hall came for.

The citizens were drawn to the wharves early this morning in consequence of frequent reports of cannon from the seaward. Some twelve or fifteen reports were heard. Some of them proceeded from Morris Island.

Agents of Southern States continue to arrive, for the purpose of purchasing arms. The government for the present refuse to sell any to State or private parties. An agent from Mississippi starts for the North to-morrow to procure arms, although it is said the supply there is not abundant.

The Memphis (Tenn.) Bulletin of the 5th inst., says: "A gentleman passed through this city yesterday, with about sixty negroes, from South Carolina. We remember that in 1832 thousands left that distracted State, and sought a home in the more quiet and loyal States of Alabama and Tennessee. We expect to see a similar condition of things now. There are more in South Carolina who can appreciate the blessings they have enjoyed in the Union, and have too much good sense to exchange them for an uncertainty."

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 9. The ordinance for the immediate secession of the State passed the convention yesterday by a vote of 84 against 15. All the prominent buildings in the place are illuminated. Cannon were fired, and other demonstrations made.

TROOPS FOR THE EAST.—Chicago, Jan. 9.—The troops from Fort Leavenworth bound for Fort McHenry passed through here to-night.

Tallahasse, Florida, 8th.—The commissioners from Alabama and South Carolina addressed the convention to day. A resolution setting forth the causes justifying secession from the Union, and declaring that the time had arrived for the exercise of the right to withdraw from the Union, were adopted, 62 to 5. The convention then went into secret session. It is reported that all the Federal property has been seized by the Governor.

Washington, 9th.—It is reported that troops were ordered to Fort Sumter, with the sanction of the President.

The propriety of sending such reinforcements was discussed at a Cabinet meeting, and the acting Secretary of War, Mr. Holt, clearly understood that it was the wish of the President that recruits should at once be sent to Major Anderson.

The War Department has been informed that the Governor of South Carolina has forbidden the Federal sub-treasurer at Charleston to pay the drafts of the Paymaster in favor of Major Anderson and his command, and the sub-treasurer has accordingly refused to do so.

Half a million dollars in specie is expected daily from the New York Sub-Treasury.

New York, Jan. 10.—The Governor of South Carolina has seized the steamship Marion for the service of the State, and her Captain has returned here.

New Orleans, Jan. 10.—Three military expeditions left this city yesterday to seize Forts Jackson and Pike, and the arsenal at Baton Rouge.

New York, Jan. 10.—A special dispatch to the Herald from New Orleans, says that five companies embarked this morning to seize the Arsenal at Baton Rogue, and an artillery and four companies infantry started to-day to take Forts Jackson and St. Philip, forty miles below the city, which commands the approach to the harbor. Three companies also left the city to seize Fort Pike, on Lake Ponchartrain. A rumor that the war steamer Crusader is coming up the river created much excitement. Texas and Florida will also seize the fortifications.

Great fears of an insurrection of slaves is felt in the neighboring Virginian counties, and patrols about every plantation are established.

Twenty-five kegs of powder have been found secreted in various places.

Augusta, Jan. 11. The Alabama Convention passed the secession ordinance at half past two o'clock this afternoon. Cannon were fired, bells were rung, and great enthusiasm was manifested generally.

St. Louis, Jan. 11. By order of General Scott, a detachment of 40 Federal troops under Lieut. Robinson, took possession of the sub-treasury; custom house and post office building this morning. Everything is quiet.

Letters from Charlestown announce that private Holmes was accidently shot dead by a sentinel at Castle Pinckney.

THE WAR. A dispatch received at the Merchants' Exchange Room, dated Washington, Friday, Jan. 11th, states that the government is determined to reinforce Major Anderson if Charleston is destroyed in consequence.

At a private dinner party here (Washington) a violent personal altercation occurred between Gen Scott and Senator Tooms. The latter expressed a wish that if the steamer Star of the West was sunk, that those ordering her to Charleston had gone in her.

This atrocious remark brought a severe rejoinder from General Scott, when Toombs gave the veteran soldier and patriot the lie direct. General Scott rose to resent the insult, but those present interfered, and the matter was temporarily quieted. It is apprehended that the affair is not yet ended. Attempts have been made to hush it up.

THE BROOKLYN TO BE ATTACKED—PREPARATIONS FOR A GREAT FIGHT.—Charleston, Jan. 10.—Dispatches that the Brooklyn is coming created intense excitement. Great preparations are making in the harbor.

The steamer returned to New York. South Carolina will pay damages on her.

The Brooklyn will be fired into. Fort Sumter will open fire on the South Carolina fortifications. The fight will be general, and the people are preparing for it and for the worst. The Brooklyn cannot come into the harbor without a great battle. Major Anderson's guns will protect her, he having only pledged himself not to prevent communication between the South Carolina forts until Lieut. Talbot came back.

Charleston, Jan. 11.—The South Carolina Secretaries of War and State went yesterday to Fort Sumter, under a flag of truce. The fact caused great excitement, and there are all sorts of rumors as to the object of their visit. Nothing certainly is known publicly. They remained for two hours. It is believed that their visit is not hostile.

SUFFERING IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—The evidence increases that the people of South Carolina, both high and low, are suffering from great pecuniary distress, for which there is no hope of present relief.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MAJOR ANDERSON AND GOV. PICKENS.—Charleston, Jan. 9.—At 10 o'clock this morning a boat with a white flag from Fort Sumter, containing Lieut. Hall, arrived in this city. Lieut. Hall bore a communication from Major Anderson to Governor Pickens. The following is the substance of Major Anderson's communication:

To the Governor of South Carolina: Sir, two of your batteries this morning fired on an unarmed vessel, bearing the flag of my government. As I have not been notified that war has been declared by South Carolina against the United States, I can but think this hostile act was committed without your authority. Under that hope, I refrain from opening fire on your batteries. I respectfully ask whether the above mentioned act—without a parallel in the history of the country, or of any other civilized government—was in obedience to your instructions, and notify you that if it is not disclaimed I shall regard it as an act of war, and shall not, after a reasonable time for the return of my messenger, permit any vessel to pass within range of my guns. In order to save as far as in my power the shedding of blood, I beg you will take due notification of my decision, hoping, however, your answer may justify in any further contingency my forbearance.

(Signed) ROBERT ANDERSON.

Governor Pickens replies, after stating the position of South Carolina, that any attempt to send government troops to reinforce the forts will be regarded as an act of hostility, and any attempt to reinforce Fort Sumter, or to retake any forts within the waters of South Carolina, will be regarded as coercive of the State; he says special agents off the bar have warned vessels with troops for Fort Sumter not to enter the harbor. He says special orders have been given not to fire into vessels until a shot across their bows should warn them of prohibition. Under such orders and circumstances the Star of the West was fired into, and the act is perfectly justified by me. The Governor in response to Major Anderson's threat, says he (Major Anderson) must be the judge of his own responsibility, and says his position in the harbor was an act of toleration on the part of South Carolina. He concluded by saying that the act proposed by Major Anderson cannot be reconciled with any other purpose than that the government is imposing on South Carolina the condition of a conquered province.

Major Anderson responds by acknowledging the Governor's reply, and says he deems it proper to refer the matter to his Government, deferring the course indicated in his former note until the receipt of instructions from Washington, and asks the safe departure and return of Lieut. Talbot to and from Washington.

☞ Major Anderson's father and mother were both Virginians—the former, Richard C. Anderson, a lieutenant-colonel in the continental army at the end of the revolutionary war, and the latter a Miss Marshall, a cousin to Chief Justice Marshall. It may not be generally known that the son is a man of deep though unobtrusive piety, and that the bold and wise act by which he lately thrilled the country was performed under a deep sense of religious as well as military responsibility.

"Our Agony."

The following appeal from a Southern lady to her friends at the North, will give the reader some idea of the present state of things. She says:—

"O, for the sake of God and humanity come to our aid. No mortal can tell our agony or what we endure. Our husbands are worn down and out with patrol duty and agitation. We are on a slumbering volcano, and know not how soon it may burst out beneath our feet and engulph us. Give us relief or we perish."

A Card.

I acknowledge the receipt of a parcel of tracts, from an unknown friend to the truth, sent by mail to Ogdensburg, N. Y. Although I have no more confidence in the doctrine called the "Pre-existence of the Christ" than I have in the heathen dogma of the soul's immortality, yet I will assure this friend that they have been well scattered; for I hold to proving all things, and holding fast to that which is good. Free speech and a free press, are the means to be used to get the truth before the people. R. V. LYON.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts.

Notice.

Thos. W. Smith desires all communications, etc., for him, to be directed to the care of Eld. John Conrad, 31 South 18th street, Philadelphia.

Discussion.

Does the Bible and philosophy teach that man is immortal?

A discussion of this question, between Rev. Mr. Hemenway and J. C. Loveland, will be held in Danielsonville, Ct., Jan. 23d, 24th and 25th. J. Q. A. STONE, Ed. Trans.

Advent Conference at Lee, N. H.

This meeting will commence Jan. 19th, 1861, in the Union meeting-house, at 1 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the two following Sundays. Our brethren there extend a cordial invitation to the saints in all the region to come to the meeting ready to help in the work. Leave all, and come together in the name of the Lord, and exhort one another. The day of God is approaching.

The object of this meeting is, by the preaching of the life-giving word, to arouse, awaken and reclaim the wayward and save the sinner. We hope to have one of the Lord's free meetings, where the Spirit and word may have free course and be glorified. Those coming from the East or West, by coming Monday, Wednesday or Friday, first train, will connect with a regular stage line at New Market, that will bring them to the meeting. All will be provided for. Brn. D. Churchill, Wm. H. Mitchell and others, as the Lord will, may be expected to preach the word. L. BOUTELL.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

For the Crisis.

"There shall be no Night there."

The shadows of evening are stealing
Around me with gentle tread,
They come with a slow and silent march,
As mourners follow the dead.

Mid many thoughts o'er the heart coming,
Some sad, and some bright and fair,
Cometh to mind the glorious words,
No night shall ever be there!

In the home of the pure and peaceful,
Where the "Lamb" the light shall be,
The gloom and shade of night falleth not
Through endless eternity;

But a day both bright and eternal
Shall shine o'er that landscape fair,
The God that gave us both night and day,
Hath said "no night shall be there!"

In this world of care, gloom and sorrow,
To the heart oft cometh night;
We feel dark shadows steal o'er the soul,
Obscuring the sunshine bright.

We shall need not the night of shadows
To enter the land of peace,
For there, from all care or weariness,
Shall be eternal release.

Chronological Prophecies.

BY REV. E. BICKERSTETH.

[Voice of the Prophets.]

Chronological prophecies have an important use. Though they may not be designed to enable us absolutely to fix the precise time in which such prophecies shall be accomplished, yet they are manifestly intended to guide the church in looking out, and preparing for the event predicted. It was thus that Daniel, in the first year of the reign of Darius, understood the accomplishment of the seventy years' captivity, (Daniel 9,) and thus the devout Jews were waiting for the first coming of Christ. Luke 2: 25, 38.

It would be a grievous error in the church to disregard such prophecies. Because many in past ages have made serious mistakes repecting the dates, we must not, therefore, in the spirit of infidelity, refuse to consider them, as if they were full of danger and evil. The mistakes of others should lead us to more caution, and diligence, and prayer, in our researches, and more diffidence in our conclusions. But having now the advantage of a more lengthened manifestation of God's mind, from the past history of the church, we have with this, greater light for the true interpretation. Because men, hundreds of years back, said, the coming of Christ was near to them, do not let us now say it cannot be near to us. The rolling away of 1,800 years must have brought it much nearer. Because they anticipated the event before the time, do not think it will not come suddenly, and cannot be at the doors, and that it is not your duty to look for it and expect it.

Oh, unhappy perversion of preceding mistakes! by which Satan gains this immense advantage; that wise and holy, that cautious and good men, are brought into a state either of neglect of that word of prophecy, which is a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn, and to which God HAS EXPRESSLY COMMANDED US TO TAKE HEED; or of hampering it with such rules as almost to shut out the study from the general body of the church. Oh, deep design of Satan! by which he accomplishes that predicted dangerous state of men in general, before the day of the Lord come: "as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Lk. 21: 35. "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18: 8. Let us not be "ignorant of his devices."—2 Cor. 2: 11. How perfectly contrary is this to the mind of the holy prophets!—1 Peter 1: 10, 11.

The first prophetical period brought before us in the Scriptures is 120 years, (Gen. 6: 3,) when "once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah," (1 Peter 3: 20;) the more affecting to us in these last days, as the world then was in general unbelief and worldliness, in a similar state to that in which it is to be before the coming of Christ.—Luke 17: 26, 27; Matt. 24: 37–39. Boothroyd's translation of the passage in Genesis is striking: Jehovah said, "My Spirit shall never pronounce judgment on men unwarned. They are but flesh. Their days therefore shall yet be 120 years."

Many of the predictions of Scripture have a mark attached to them, of the time in which they were to be fulfilled. Such are the 430 and 400 years of the Israelites being in Egypt.—Gen. 15: 13; Exod. 12: 40. The 65 years predicted by Isaiah, in which Israel was to be broken.—Isa. 7: 8. The 70 years of Judah's captivity.—Jer. 29: 10. The 70 weeks, or 490 years, in which Messiah was to be cut off.—Daniel 9: 24, 25. The 2,300 days or years, at the end of which the sanctuary is to be cleansed, and no longer trodden under foot.—Daniel 8: 14. The period of 1,260 days or years, of the dominion of the papal power, predicted under the varied terms of time, and times, and half a time, (Daniel 7: 25; Rev. 12: 14;) 42 months, (Rev. 11: 2; 13: 5,) or 1,260 days, (Rev. 11: 3, and 12: 6;) the farther period of 30 days and 45 days included in the 1,290 and 1,335 days or years.—Dan. 12: 11, 12. The mystical period of an hour, a day, a month, and a year, which is interpreted either as 396 years, or as 391 years and a month, or as 390 years by those who consider the hour and day as denoting rather the season than a specific part of the time, has had several different dates assigned for its commencement: this period is reckoned by Mr. Habershon from the capture of Constantinople, when artillery was used (Rev. 9: 17) with such success by Mohammed II. in 1453; the termination of the Turkish woe would thus be brought down to 1844, or 1843.

One of the most important Chronological prophecies is that of the 70 WEEKS OF DANIEL. The interpretation which most satisfies the author's mind from its simplicity, and following the order of the text, is this: The 70 weeks of verse 24, are a definite period of 490 years ecclesiastically complete, from the decree of Artaxerxes given to Ezra, 458, to the death and resurrection of our Lord in A. D. 33, which makes exactly 490 years. The period from which this era is to be reckoned is to be gathered from the vision (v. 23) of which it is the explanation. In that vision Daniel asks the question, (8: 13, 14,) "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" and he is answered, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." The first renewing of the sacrifice, as we find, (Ezra 7: 12–23,) was under the decree of Artaxerxes, 458 years before Christ. That decree was directly connected with the building of the Temple and the restoration of worship and the sacrifices. Of the whole period of 2,300 years, 70 weeks of years were determined or cut off, from the restoration of the daily sacrifice to the completing of the perfect sacrifice of Christ, when the spiritual temple was raised up, (John 2: 19–21,) and the most holy was anointed. Heb. 1: 9; 9: 24. We have here then the ecclesiastical period of 70 weeks, or 490 years distinct and perfect. * * * * * *

There is a period called by our Lord, THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES. On this, Mede remarks: "I make no question but these 'times of the Gentiles,' (Luke 21: 24,) with which the Jews' tribulation shall end, are either the times of the four monarchies in general (that is, the times of that prophesied dominion of the Gentiles; or, which is all one in event, those last times of the fourth kingdom, of a time, times, and half a time, at the fulfilling whereof Daniel prophesies of the same appearing and coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven, (Daniel 7: 13, 22,) as St. Luke does in Luke 21: 27." The period of a time, Mede has shown, signifies a year, and times two years, and half a time half a year; the Jewish year consisting of 360 days; three years and a half make 1,260 days. The grounds have been already stated which justify the large body of Christian interpreters, in considering the prophetical day to intend a year, and viewing 1,260 days as 1,260 years. But three prophetical times and a half are but the half of the whole Jewish dispersion. There is a remarkable prediction of their troubles for their sins, in Leviticus 26, in which they are told again and again (see verses 18, 21, 24, 28) that they shall be chastened seven times, or sevenfold for their sins. The frequent repetition of seven times, or sevenfold, connected with their lengthened suffering under the Gentile monarchies, seems to point out a special design, and may intimate the length of time which these chastisements should last. It would make, interpreted as we do the times in Daniel, a period of 2,520 years from their being carried into captivity. The same period of seven times or 2,520 years is brought out, as has been noticed, in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar. These times were to pass over that king (who seems a type of the Gentile nations) in a state of bestial derangement, and after them he was to be restored. Daniel 4: 25. Possibly, if these times are connected with cycles, they denote a period something shorter, as 360 days are less than the length of a natural year, or the seven times may be current only. But if reckoned as 2,520 years, they would terminate earlier or later, according as we reckoned the commencement of the captivity of Israel, or of Judah. If we reckon the captivity of Israel as commencing in 727 before Christ, Israel's first captivity under Shalmanezer, it would terminate in 1793, when the French Revolution broke out; and if 677 before Christ, at their captivity under Esarhaddon, (the same period when Manasseh, king of Judah was carried into captivity, 2 Kings 17: 23, 24; 2 Chron. 33: 11,) it would terminate in 1843. These periods may have a reference to corresponding events at their termination, and are worthy of serious attention.

The whole of this period of seven times, as it regards those countries with which the church of God has been connected, has been marked by the prevalence of four empires. Mr. Mede, in his Apostasy of the latter times, has remarked: "For the true account of times in the Scripture we must have recourse to that SACRED CALENDAR AND GREAT ALMANAC OF PROPHECY, the four kingdoms of Daniel, which are a prophetical chronology of times measured by the succession of four principal kingdoms, from the beginning of the captivity of Israel until the mystery of God shall be finished; a course of time during which the church and nation of the Jews, together with those whom, by reason of their unbelief in Christ, God should surrogate in their room, were to remain under bondage of the Gentiles and oppression of Gentilism; but those times once finished, all the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and to this great calendar of times, together with that other, but lesser calendar of seventy weeks, all mention of times in the Scripture seems to have reference." A Jewish Rabbi, Saadias Gaon, in the tenth century, stated, on Dan. 7: 48: "Because Israel had rebelled against the Lord, their kingdom shall be taken from them and given to these four monarchies, which shall possess the kingdom in this age, and shall lead captive and subdue Israel to themselves in this age, until the future age, when Messiah shall reign." See Mede's Works, p. 536.

The four kingdoms are 1. Babylonian, Dan. 2: 32, 38. 2. Medes and Persians, Dan. 2: 39; v. 26–28. 3. Grecian, Dan. 8: 20, 21. See 2 Mac. 2: 1–4. 4. Roman, John 11: 48; 19: 15. It might at first sight be supposed that the ten kingdoms should be formed out of the whole Roman empire, both eastern and western. The reason why it is not so, is thus stated by Sir I. Newton, in his remarks on the prediction of Daniel 7: 11, 12: "The rest of the beasts had their dominion taken away, but their lives were prolonged for a season and time." "The four beasts are still alive, though the dominion of the first three be taken away. The nations of Chaldea and Assyria are still the first beast; those of India and Persia are still the second beast; those of Macedon, Greece and Thrace, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt, are still the third; and those of Europe, on this side Greece, are still the fourth. Seeing, therefore, the body of the third beast is confined to the nations on this side the river Euphrates, and the body of the fourth beast is confined to the nations on this side of Greece, we are to look for all the four heads of the third beast among nations on this side of the river Euphrates, and for all the eleven horns of the fourth beast among the nations on this side of Greece. And, therefore, at the breaking of the Greek empire into four kingdoms of the Greeks, we include no part of the Chaldeans, Medes and Persians in those kingdoms, because they belong to the bodies of the first two beasts. Nor do we reckon the Greek empire, seated at Constantinople, among the horns of the fourth beast, because it belonged to the body of the third."

In the raising up of Greece to a distinct kingdom in our day, we may now see in Turkey, Persia, Greece, and the ten European kingdoms, all these empires in existence.

The inquiry then comes, What are these ten kingdoms? Dr. Cressener has observed that "the number ten is usually taken in Scripture for an uncertain multitude of those things of which it is said to be the number; and, in such a long succession and change of kingdoms as it is here joined with, and where there is no other circumstance to show it to be a definite number, it ought in all reason to be taken in that sense; that is, for an uncertain multitude of kingdoms that were to be set up with the beast in the bounds of the Roman empire." The reason is hardly satisfactory, and it is hoped that more certain light may yet be attained on this point.

It is singular that Machiavel, a professed member of the Church of Rome, has given a list of the Gothic tribes which overthrew the Roman empire in the fourth and fifth centuries, making them ten in number. It is painful also to us, of this long-favored land, to find that Britain is included in almost every list of the chief interpreters of Revelation, (as Mede, Lloyd. Sir I. Newton, Bishop Newton, Hales, Cuninghame, etc.) among these ten kingdoms.

The following are considered by some as the ten kingdoms as they now subsist. 1. Ravenna. 2. Lombardy. 3. Rome. 4. Naples. 5. Sardinia. 6. France. 7. Austria. 8. Spain. 9. Portugal. 10. Britain. Another list gives these: 1. Rome, with Ravenna and Lombardy. 2. France. 3. Spain. 4. Portugal, 5. Savoy. 6. Naples. 7. Austria. 8. Bavaria. 9. Venice. 10. Tuscany. If Rome be considered as an 11th horn, Hungary, part of which at least was included in the Roman empire, might be added. In the natural animal, horns plucked up may grow again; and so the place of the three horns plucked up before the 11th, may be supplied by fresh kingdoms, which seems proved by the number being 10 at the close. Rev. 17: 16, 17. The term in Daniel 2: 43, of the iron mixed with the miry clay, explained, "they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron was not mixed with clay," may have been given to prepare us for the difficulty of identifying distinctly ten kingdoms, though that has generally been about the number.

The author confesses that he is not fully satisfied with any list yet given; he trusts the further investigation of students may throw more light on this important part of prophecy. On the lists, as might be expected, there are different opinions; some being left out, and others added; and if ten be not a definite number, we cannot expect a concurrence of view. The symbolizing and uniting with Popery and its issue, infidelity, is the darkest mark for any nation, which has once been a part of the Western Roman empire. In every case, the moral and spiritual part of a country, is that which will really decide its state in the day of the Lord.

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis.

Lines,

COMPOSED ON THE DEATH OF MY TWIN SISTER, EMMA S. JORDAN.

On the eighteenth day of April, eighteen fifty-nine the year,
We stood beside the dying bed of one beloved and dear;
A solemn silence reigned around, how still the room of death!
For one we all so dearly loved, lay yielding up her breath.

The mark of death had been for years upon her lovely brow,
The sunken eye had told us well that she to him must bow;
But still, as days and years rolled by, and she with us remained,
We hoped that he had passed her by, and she the victory gained.

Alas! the hopes of feeble man are withered in an hour,
For, while we cherished the fond hope, he came with mighty power
And took the lovely prize away, and bore it to the tomb,
Regardless of the gloom he cast within our happy home.

Yes, Emma, we were near allied—our ages were the same,
Together dandled on the knee—together took our name;
Together in the cradle rocked, together we were fed,
And when the shades of night appeared, together took our bed.

Thus childhood days flew swiftly by, with time's old rolling tide,
And saw thee at the altar stand, a smiling, happy bride;
For years thou wast a loving wife, a friend to all mankind,—
How to do good, and when, and where, was ever in thy mind.

But thou art gone—oh! sad the thought, the world seems dark and drear,
The days are now with sorrow fraught, the nights in gloom appear;
And while I visit thy lone grave, where pinks and roses bloom,
The willow seems to weep with me, the cypress moan thy doom.

But Hope, sweet syren of the soul, points to a brighter day,
When death no more shall hold his grasp around thy sleeping clay;
When Eden's bowers shall bloom again, and sorrows all are o'er,
Then, Emma, we will meet as twins, to part again no more.

An Extract.

"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."—Matt. 24: 12.

The many "false teachers" produce this coldnes of love in the church. "Evil communications corrupt good manners," says Paul. "Through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you," says Peter. It should not be thought that no reference is had in the text to false teachers of this generation. For it is clearly manifest that reference is specially had to false teachers of fundamental religious errors, in the last part of the gospel dispensation, which would turn the hearts of men "from the truth unto fables," causing "iniquity to abound," and "the love of many to wax cold." Soon after the Papal yoke was broken from the neck of the disciples, and men began to step from the dark chambers of Babylon, and the light of the blessed gospel of God began to shine, Satan took a new position. All christendom could no longer be shut up to the superstitious creeds of Rome. Men began to think, study, believe, and act for themselves, and having been so long covered in darkness, many made strange strides. As the word of God could no longer be kept from men, Satan stood ready to assist in interpreting and explaining it away. Consequently, during the eighteenth century, the systems of Spiritualism, which reject the personal reign of Christ, in the millennium,—which reject the second personal advent of Christ, the personal existence of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the renewal of the earth, the future punishment of the wicked,—have taken deep root in the professed christian church, introducing their train of wild, extravagant, speculative, unscriptural notions, resulting in the loss of the hope of the gospel by the mass, and for it they cherish other hopes, that do not purify the heart and make it better, do not lead to self-denial and godliness, to love of righteousness and the word of God. There is an abundance of religious show, such as Paul describes in 2 Tim. 3: 1—8, and other scriptures. But it has not repaired the breach in the wall, it has not kept in check the bad passions of the human heart, and healed the fountains of sin. No, but it has often hoisted the flood-gates of sin by the aid of its ministers; "false teachers" and "iniquity abound." Christianity is withdrawing its flickering rays from multitudes who have fallen under the withering influence of its false friends.

What a picture does christendom present to-day in its moral aspect. While many are saying "peace and safety," singing of "a good time coming" and telling of great reforms, trusting in the "doctrines of men" for regenerating power, sin, in every form that can be mentioned, is found, not lurking in the darkest corners, but protruding itself into the fairest portions of civilized society, and, under the rays of the clearest religious influences, gathering clouds so dense as to produce dismay and terror to the careful watchers, but causing insensibility and darkness in the minds of the deceived multitudes whose "love is waxen cold." Men are so constituted as to "first pity, next endure, then embrace." The religious portions of community have so mingled their interests, customs, pursuits and fashions, with the irreligious, that they have lost their moral hold upon community. So that many of the crimes committed are sanctioned by religious teachers,—nay, are often conceived and perpetrated by them. Deeds of the most infamous kind are of daily occurrence, and are now so common as to cease to cause great astonishment.—From Wellcome's Treatise on Matt. 24th and 25th.

Selections.

Christian Liberty.

No man can be in a proper state to determine his prerogatives and duties, while he is in a selfish state of heart. No man can judge between himself and his neighbor, as long as his mind is drawn to his own side. We talk a great deal about our prerogatives and duties. But what would you say of a judge who, being deaf with one ear, should, in a trying case, turn the ear with which he could hear to the counsel who was pleading on one of the sides, and listen to every argument that he presented, and should turn the deaf ear to the counsel who was pleading on the other side, and hear not a word that he said, and then should form his decision, having heard the evidence of one side and not that of other—what would you say of such a judge, but that he was a New York judge—an unjust judge? And what would you say of a man that, in judging between himself and his fellow men should listen only to the considerations that belonged to his own prosperity, saying to the witnesses as they were summoned into the court of conscience, "Plead Intellect, plead Self-esteem, plead Love of Approbation, in favor of my side," and should then lift himself up and issue the case, having merely heard his own interests advocated? No man is fit to judge between himself and his fellow men who has not as much regard for their interests as his own. A man in judging between himself and others is as solemnly bound to be impartial in his judgments as a magistrate who sits in a court of law to administer justice in cases that are brought before him for his adjudication. The father that judges in the family; the neighbor that judges between himself and his neighbors; the companion that judges between himself and his companions; the man in the street who judges between himself and other men in the street—these are God's sworn judges, and they are as much bound to form equitable judgments as a man who sits on the judicial bench. Few men are fit to say, "This is my right and that is your interest." Until a man has arrived at such a state that in coming to a consideration of right and duty, he shall be guided by a spirit of true love, so that his heart shall yearn toward the welfare of other men, the judgment he forms will not be right; or, if it is right it will be so by accident, and not by intent. Therefore, where you see a man that is better educated and better situated in society than other men; where you see a man naturally lifted above the infirmities of ignorant prejudices and coarse ways—where you see such a man (and he may be a christian, so-called; or at least a man who has a respect for christian truths) if, when you urge upon him the duty of forbearance toward those less fortunate than himself, he arrogantly says, "I am not bound to be tied to other men's ignorance and prejudices: my business is to meet my own wants; and I am not bound to do more than that," he is in a wrong spirit. He is not fit to make up his mind on the subject of right and duty between man and man. It is only love that knows how to be judge—that knows how to arbitrate justly both ways.

We are to distinguish between courses that only hurt men's self-love by setting aside their beliefs, and those courses that hurt the men themselves. Sometimes passages of Scripture are urged in favor of regarding men's prejudices under all circumstances. It is said that we are not to cause our brother to offend. It is represented as if we are not to offend our brother; and the word offend is used in the modern sense. But there is no Scripture that teaches any such doctrine as that. If I have made up my mind that a certain course is right, and if my following that course leads to immorality, I shall hold back. But if it merely vexes the community; if it merely offends their prejudices without hurting them morally; if it merely makes them feel hard toward me, then I shall go forward. I am not bound to sacrifice my sense of duty, or abandon a better way of living, simply because other men do not like it. The Gospel does not teach that I am.

For instance, a man says to me, "You must keep the Sabbath more strictly, because it grieves me to have you keep it as you do." I say, I would not grieve you, but my method of keeping the Sabbath is a matter of conscience with me." "Ah!" he says, "but it is wrong for you to keep it as you do." Then I stand on my liberty, and say, "You have no authority to judge of what it is right for me to do. It may be wrong for you to keep the Sabbath as I do, and yet not be wrong for me to do it." If one man conscientiously regards the day, he regards it unto the Lord; and if another man conscientiously omits to regard it to the Lord, he does not regard it. If men do not like the way my conscience teaches me to keep the Sabbath, that does not make it my duty to give up my right to keep it in that way. But if I carry my right not only so that a man's prejudices are hurt, but so that his moral sense is led to make a mistake in religion, and he is led to take a course that is destructive to him, then I must hold back. I must not cause him to stumble in his moral life. It is better that I should not travel quite so fast in my liberty, than that, by hastening on, I should destroy him utterly. * * * * *

It is to be held that while you are to take care of yourself, you are to do it so as to take care of your fellow men, and not sacrifice them. This is the doctrine of the Bible: not only with reference to physical and secular matters, but with reference to moral and spiritual things. Your highest intuitions; your clearest conceptions of invisible truths; your deepest inspirations; all that you can arrive at by the most resplendent gifts of genius, or by the highest developments of education—all these things you are to hold subject to the law of love, and to administer for the benefit of your fellow men, as well as for your own benefit. And woe be to that man who, being enriched by genius and education, employs them in building himself up in such a way as to separate himself from his fellow men.

* * * *

It is true that we are bound not to radicate prejudices in men, but, as fast as we can, to eradicate them. It is true that we are bound not to conform to bad things, or tolerate them permanently. If you have a better idea of truth than another man, it is your mission to make it known to him. If you have a better way of carrying out a truth than another man, it is your business to make that way known to him. But you have no right to expect that other men will instantly accept your idea of truth or adopt your way of carrying it out. Here is a man so favorably circumstanced that, after one or three, or five years of instruction, he goes through the various changes necessary to a high state of moral development, and comes out into the light of truth. Now that man takes his knowledge, and instead of considering the gradualism that is indispensable to moral changes, and instead of exercising toward others that forbearance which was exercised toward him while he, like them, was yet enveloped in the darkness of error, thinks they ought at once to come into the advanced state which he has attained, and says, "My business is to be in the right way, and to walk right along in that way; and your business is to do the same." Now what would you think of a nurse that, having charge of little children, should walk as fast as she could, leaving the children to follow on as best they might? If you outrun your children, you are not fit to be God's nurse or teacher. You are to walk in the right way, and to make the way appear more attractive than the wrong way; but you are to do it with a disposition and in the atmosphere of love. You are not to make your own supremacy or wisdom appear any further than you can do it with a tender consideration of their wants, and of the slowness that is inevitable in all the changes for the better which take place in men. And these things are to be equilibrated; and that is prudence which attends to their equilibration.

It is easy to propound this doctrine! the only difficult thing about it is to practice it.—Beecher.

Give.

The sun gives ever to the earth
What it can give, so much 'tis worth.
The ocean gives in many ways,
Gives paths, gives fishes, rivers, bays;
So, too, the air; it gives us breath,
When it stops giving, comes in death.
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living.
The more we give,
The more we live!

God's love hath in us wealth upheaped:
Only by giving is it reaped.
The body withers, and the mind
Is pent in by a selfish rind.
Give strength, give thoughts, give deeds, give pelf,
Give love, give tears, and give thyself.
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living.
The more we give,
The more we live!

Coming Down.

By coming down I understand this:—Learning from the many mortifications, disappointments, and rebuffs, which we must as we go on through life, to think more humbly of ourselves, intellectually, morally, socially, physically, æsthetically; yet while thinking thus humbly of ourselves and our powers, to resolve that we shall continue to do our very best: and all this with a kindly heart and a contented mind. Such is my idea of a true christian coming down: and I regard as a true hero the man who does it rightly. It is a noble thing for a man to say to himself, "I am not at all what I had vainly fancied myself: my mark is far, very far lower than I thought it had been. I had fancied myself a great genius, but I find I am only a man of decent ability: I had fancied myself a man of great weight in the country, but I find I have very little influence indeed: I had fancied that my stature was six feet four, but I find that I am only five feet two: I had fancied that in such a competition I never could be beaten, but in truth I have been sadly beaten: I had fancied, (suffer me, reader, the solemn allusion,) that my Master had intrusted me with ten talents, but I find I have no more than one. But I will accept the humble level which is mine by right, and with God's help I will do my very best there. I will not kick dogs nor curse servants: I will not try to detract from the standing of men who are clever, more eminent, or taller than myself: I will heartily wish them well. I will not grow soured, moping, and misanthropic. I know I am beaten and disappointed, but I will hold on manfully still, and never give up." Such, kindly reader, is Christian coming down.

CHEERFULNESS.—Nothing will supply the want of sunshine to peaches, and, to make knowledge valuable, you must have the cheerfulness of wisdom. Whenever you are sincerely pleased, you are nourished. The joy of the spirit indicates its strength. All healthy things are sweet tempered. Genius works in sport, and goodness smiles to the last; and, for the reason, that whoever sees the law which distributes things, does not despond, but is animated to great desires and endeavors. He who desponds, betrays that he has not seen it.

A PLACE FOR PRAYER.—"Where do you find a place to pray in?" was asked of a pious sailor on board a whaling ship. "Oh," he said, "I can always find a quiet spot at the mast-head."

Reading for Youth.

Little Georgie's Prayer.

Little Georgie, an interesting boy of four summers, had been taught by his mother to pray, and she had often told him that to pray to God, was to talk to him, and tell him just what he wanted. At night, after he had repeated the Lord's Prayer, he was accustomed to make a short prayer of his own, in which his childish wants were expressed in his own words. Though Georgie was generally a very good boy, and loved his parents most tenderly, yet it sometimes happened that he needed correction; for, like all children, he liked to have his own way.

One day, being unwilling to yield to his mother's wishes, she was obliged to punish him, for she did not wish her little boy to grow up a wicked and unruly son. At night, when it was time for him to repeat his prayer, he could not forget his naughty actions; and, as he had been taught, he talked to God about it in the following manner, feeling all the while very serious, though his language was so childish: "O Lord! Bless Georgie, and make him a good boy; and don't let him be naughty again, never, no never, because you know when he is naughty he sticks to it so!"

Would it not be well for some of my little readers to make use of "Georgie's Prayer?"

"Youth is the Time."

Go when the heart is warm with youth,
Go when the soul is free from care;
Kneel at the throne of heav'nly truth,
And ask for guidance there.

Oh! wait not till the bright days pass,
And cares come thronging round thy way;
This pleasant morn will flee, alas!
And he who finds must seek to-day.

Thrice happy and thrice blest is he
"Who hears religion's warning voice,"
Who seeks in youth "bright wisdom's tree,"
Whose fruit will make his soul rejoice.

"God is Wight Here, Willie."

A few nights since, two little boys were lying together in their trundle-bed. Willie, the older of the two, who was only six years of age, awoke in the night, very thirsty. Being told that he could jump up and get himself some water, he cried, saying that he was afraid. Upon this, his little brother, two years younger than himself spoke encouragingly to him, and said: "God is wight here, Willie! God is wight here! you needn't be afraid, Willie!" So Willie jumped up, and went and got himself some water, and then came back to his little bed, all safe, and soon he and his little brother were fast asleep again.

Is any child who reads this ever afraid just because it is dark? The story is for you, little boy; and for you, little girl. Just think as Willie's little brother did, "God is right here." God loves little boys and girls, if they are good. He can see them just as well in the dark as when it is light. He watches over them when they are asleep. If you love God, little children, and every night, before you lie down in your bed, kneel and ask him to take care of you while you sleep, you never need feel afraid in the least. You are not afraid in the dark when you are in the arms of your father or mother. But God loves you more than your father or mother can love you, if you are good. You never need be afraid unless you are naughty. Will you think of this, too, children, "God is right here," when you do or say any thing that is naughty? He sees what you do, and hears what you say. Then, you may be afraid; but never when you are good.—Child at Home.

A Lovely Sight.

It was during the Conference lately held at Battle Creek that a little circumstance occurred which I will mention for the good of the children. It is well worth relating.

The meeting-house was crowded with people, and at the hour of service the minister of God knelt down to pray. Did the people kneel with him? No, the house was so filled with worshipers that there was no chance, and they bowed their minds but not their bodies.

But not so with one little girl near the door where I was standing, whose head had scarcely seen eight or ten summers. When the man of God bowed in prayer before the multitude, this little girl who barely had a sitting place, bent her little frame and there reverently worshiped the God of her fathers. Angels no doubt looked on that tender little child, pleased to see such humility and such devotion in one so young. As for me I could scarcely keep the tears from my eyes while I looked on this sweet bud of piety. It was indeed a lovely sight, and one which I hope I may live to behold again.—Instructor.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or nearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

For the Crisis.

Christ stilleth the Tempest.

The winds were raging fearfully,
The waves were dashing high,
E'en on the little bark they rolled,
Destruction seemed her destiny.
The crew had tried their utmost skill
To steer the ship aright;
But strong r, fiercer grew the sea,
And baffled all their might.

With horror filled, they stood aghast,
And fear shook every form;
But One there was within the ship
Who calmly slept amid the storm.
The howling winds, the roaring sea,
The awful, crashing din,
All had no power to break his sleep,—
What, then, could waken him?

A new thought strikes that sinking crew,
'Tis Jesus sleeping there,
The Son of God, who oft has said,
On me cast all your care.
And to the sleeper now they cry,
"Lord, save us, or we perish" here.
They've scarcely spoken—he's awake,
Bidding them all be of good cheer.

Then to the wind and waves he spake,
Commanding, "Peace! be still,"—
The sea in still, calm beauty lay,
Obedient to his will.
And of the astonished crew he asked,
Hast thou no faith in God?
Why did'st thou fear to ask his aid?
Believ'st thou not his word?

Pilgrim! do trouble's waves roll high,
And almost sink life's bark?
Then call on Jesus—always near,
He'll calm the troubles of thy heart;
He'll bear thy burdens, dry thy tears,
And bid thine angry passions cease;
If thou dost pray in faith, he'll hear,
And fill thy heart with perfect peace.

For the Crisis.

A NEW YEAR'S SERMON.

DELIVERED AT CHAPMAN HALL, BOSTON, JAN. 6TH, BY ELD. P. B. MORGAN.

"And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

(Concluded.)

Such, then, are the times; and such, in brief, the prospects. But to the practical things growing out of these considerations. Shall not God out of all these conflicting scenes prepare unto himself a people, which, adorned with every precious gift and grace, shall wait as the spouse of Christ for the coming of the heavenly Bridegroom? What, my brethren, shall it avail us, if, in discerning the signs of these times in which we witness so manifestly the hand of God, we do not thereby know and realize the time in which we live, and awake out of sleep! The men of this world know not the time. Alas! let us weep over the world. For as the poet hath said—

"The world at large is sleeping
In slumber most profound;
And few the watch are keeping,
Though fast to judgment bound!"

Jesus said, because ye know not the day or hour wherein the Son of man cometh, "therefore watch." But alas! where are the watchers? True, there are many men—I doubt not many christian men—whose souls are awake to the events of our country; men who clearly discern the threatening chastisements of Almighty God; but who by reason of that modern fable—the doctrine of a temporal millennium—fail to discern in a scriptural way "the signs of the times,"—to know the time and awake out of sleep as they ought. They do not watch for the coming of the Son of man. They count it folly to so think and talk. And though it may be unintentional, yet, doubtless they strengthen the hands of such as put far off the evil day, and say "to-morrow shall be as this day and much more abundant." May God pity them. We ought to pray for them; for if Christ's, then are they our brethren. We should seek special opportunity to be instruments of blessing to them, to convey light to their understanding, that they may rejoice with us in the "one hope,"—the blessed hope of the gospel. This is our business in this world; to "do good unto all men," seeking the things that are Christ's, and not our own. These brethren are not of all others most inconsistent. Their position is the legitimate result of their theory; that mystical theory adopted by Origen, and more especially introduced into the Protestant world by the English Commentator, Daniel Whitby.

It is by this false theory in hermeneutics that these brethren have come to anticipate God's plain promise of a "new heavens and new earth" (Isa. 65 : 17; 2 Pet. 3 : 13; Rev. 21 : 1,) in "a universal moral regeneration." It is a theory that has so essentially etherealized the future glorious rewards of the righteous, that death has ceased to be considered as an abnormal state, occasioned by sin, which nature and God alike deprecate. It is a theory by which the second personal advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the literal resurrection of the dead, are practically made null and void. They do not understand the text—"Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be." But how many of yourselves, brethren, have been in the same place, many of you until recently. Let us then love such, and feel for them as brethren.

I know there are those who, professing to be Protestants, are practically Papists. They are they who prate much about the Pope, but are young popes themselves. Bigoted and self-willed, they immediately betray themselves by their dogmatical and dictatorial spirit. For love, they have hatred; for meekness, pride. Instead of words of paternal kindness for the erring, they speak harsh and devouring words out of a bitter spirit. Dissent from their creed, and they brand you as a "heretic." The Romish Bishop swears in his consecrating oath he will "persecute and attack all heretics and dissenters." These Protestant heroes feel in the same way, minus the swearing. Brethren, let us pray for such, but in no wise imitate their example. Let us be Protestants if we profess to be, and allow every man to read the Scriptures for himself. And if so be that he thinks he can better promote the truth and glorify God with his substance and his talents in another communion, let him so think. Let us not therefore excommunicate him with, or without, "book, bell and Bible"; but let him depart in peace, and let us rejoice in that the great Chief Shepherd has "sheep that are not of this fold." Let us grant to every one whatever we ask for ourselves. But beware of any man that has, or seeks place and power, and then by word or act dares to proscribe in any measure, our christian liberty. Mark such a one, and avoid him.

Then, again, there are those who live in a lower scale of moral being. Full of covetousness, envy, deceit, debate,—whisperers, backbiters and slanderers. They are filled with all spiritual lawlessness. But God lets them live, and we must not complain. The vulture must seek his prey, and the buzzard his carrion. Every being instinctively seeks that element in which it can best thrive, physically and morally, if a moral being it is. But, save to admonish them in kindness, let them alone. The "beasts at Ephesus" would devour us if they could; but if our life be hid with Christ in God, they cannot harm us.

The gospel must be preached. If God has made us light-bearers, we must not put that light under a bushel. If he has made us warriors, let us be overcome by neither the afflictions of battle, or the weariness of watchings. We must conquer though we die. God, and Christ, and angels, and all good men are interested in our behalf. Shall we then fear; or for one moment hesitate, as much as in us lies, to declare the whole counsel of God? It is God's to command, it is ours to obey, be the consequences what they will.

But how are we as a people, and as individuals before God to-day? Heaven forbid that we should be pharisaical, saying, I am holier than thou, or discern so clearly motes in others' eyes all unconscious of the beams in our own. Many may perish for lack of knowledge; but knowledge unless reduced to practice will save nobody. It will be very far from being all the knowing ones who will be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

As a people—now that we must confess ourselves a sect among sects—how much have we for which to bless God. Not that we have our three congregations in this city, healthful and prospering—our own numbering perhaps a few less than two hundred communicants—but that God has been pleased to so remarkably bless his truth in this land within the few past years. This we did not think of at the beginning. With us then, the one and only thing was to follow Christ in receiving and confessing his truth. This we did at the sacrifice of our all. Perhaps there has never been a people of modern times, more despised and maligned—the early Methodist church excepted—than ourselves. We were not worthy of such things; but they came, and we accepted them as part of our christian patrimony, feeling ourselves honored in that we were permitted to suffer somewhat—though little it is true,—for Christ's sake. And now when this trumpet-blast has hardly more than crossed our continent, behold the results. A people, at the first wholly unsolicited, rise up, as honest, as self-sacrificing, and as willing to suffer as ourselves, now numbering, as has been learned with the immense labor of our pains-taking Taylor,—the honored author of the Voice of the Church—"fifty-four thousand," with congregations amounting to "over one hundred and fifty thousand," beside perhaps fourteen thousand in communion with other denominations; though of the last item we have no definite knowledge. A ministerial force that "has now reached six hundred," which "exceeds that of at least sixteen other minor evangelical sects noticed by Dr. Baird"; beside having some six or eight periodicals devoted wholly, or in part, to our special faith. Beside these we are now able to count believers among college Presidents, Professors, and the most learned and eloquent clergymen of the leading evangelical churches of our country. It is now seen that practically we are as evangelical as, and do not more essentially differ in our faith than do, our neighbors; loving, honoring, and trusting in our Divine Savior, as they love, honor, and trust him. Chapels, many of them more elegant perhaps than they should be, have been and are being erected through the length and breadth of our land—the Southern states for the most part excepted.

It is a settled point that no people in the United States have multiplied so rapidly as those cherishing what we understand to be "the faith once delivered to the saints." To some this may savor of egotism—though probably by those more especially who prefer not to believe our statements, but it is with soberness we say it, as a simple matter of fact. To God be all glory. Yet, my brethren, in the face and eyes of all this, how much have we murmured, how often been discouraged! How frequently impatient, how often without our words chastened with humility and sobriety! with words savoring more of Babylon than of the Jerusalem above. How often have we utterly disregarded the injunction of the apostle to "let all things be done decently, and in order." How often have we been unmindful of the unity of the body of Christ, and cared not if our eating caused our brother to offend! How often have we grieved and quenched the Holy Spirit, "by which we are sealed unto the day of redemption"!

Is it not to be feared that many of us are very far from that mature christianity which with the knowledge and opportunities we have, ought to be ours?—"Knowledge puffeth up" saith the apostle; have we not sometimes felt that most ridiculous feeling, ourselves puffed up? It is only by receiving the engrafted word with meekness, that it is able to save our souls. Jas. 1 : 21. Christ's words are spirit and life to those only who receive them with a quickening faith. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe. To others it may be a savor of death unto death. Alas! how sad, should the very knowledge of God imparted to us, rise up to our condemnation in the day of judgment! God grant this may be a heart-searching day. Let us see ourselves as we are. Have we in no instances during the past year neglected to speak words of kindness to the oppressed, of good-cheer to the downcast, and of faith to the doubting? Have we not only rejoiced in our own personal salvation, but been as anxious to save others as ourselves? Or have we after all fancied christianity and selfishness might somehow dwell in the same heart? That Christ and Belial might have fellowship together, or somehow so compromise matters as to both abide with one heart? Or have we with the love of a self-denying Savior in our hearts hastened to pluck souls as brands from the burning, warning them with tears day and night—Paul-like? Have we been so intensely eager to gather some precious sheaves to bear upward to the garner of God in the great harvest-day, as we ought to have been?

Again. Have we distributed freely of our substance to the indigent, the widow and the fatherless,—and to help on with a willing hand the bleeding cause of Jesus Christ in this God-hating and selfish world? And have we done this freely, without urging, cheerfully, knowing that God loveth the cheerful giver? Have we realized that it is more blessed to give than to receive? Or have we been little and selfish,—receiving freely, and giving stingily?

Are there not some in this congregation, who have never as yet made that most important of all sacrifices which it is in their power to make, namely, the sacrifice of themselves to God, which is so reasonably demanded of them? And my friends, are you willing the old year should bid us adieu, and you now commence the journey of another year, and still out of Christ—still unreconciled to God. Shall it be? O come! we beseech you, and this day give the Savior your heart. Come, backslider, come. Come one, come all. You that have been in any way remiss in duty, come, and let us one and all this day consecrate ourselves anew to God, for time, and for eternity.

"Awake! ye, awake!
No time now for reposing."

Soon, the last year, the last month, the last sunny sabbath will have gone, and God only knows but this may be true with us all at the close of this day. Soon the midnight cry—"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," will reach our ears. Soon it may be sung or said indeed—

"The moment is gone,
The millennial year rushes on to our view,
And eternity's here."

Knowing then the time, "let us awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

For the Crisis.

Mr. Landis and John Locke.

Mr. Landis, in his "Immortality of the Soul," (p. 339) ventures the assertion that Locke "held the perpetuity" of hell torments. To this I have replied in my "Reviewers Reviewed," showing it "more that doubtful" that such an opinion was held by the philosopher. Mr. L. indeed has some color for his statement, since Locke, in his controversy with the Bishop of Worcester, professes his belief in "the immortality of the soul," though he had denied the current proofs of it. This fact, coupled with Locke's expressions of a final punishment of the wicked, gives plausibility to Mr. Landis' statement. Yet Mr. L. should have noticed some things on the other side of which he could not well be ignorant, and he is wont to prove his points too easily.

Another writer, Dr. Turnbull, editor of a volume of Hamilton's Discussions, has also claimed Locke as holding strictly the soul's immortality. It is sufficient to reply on this point that natural immortality, and absolute immortality, are different things. Locke doubtless regarded man as designed and fitted for immortality, so that death is un-nature and penalty. And that he regarded the final penalty as extinction, appears from the following passages. I have discovered them lately, and am happy to find that Locke's opinion here is not a matter of inference, but is explicitly declared. In his essay on the "Resurrection and its Sequences" (Resurrectio et quae sequuntur), in his Life by King, pp. 316, 322—Bohn's ed., he says:

"These two things are plainly declared in Scripture concerning them [the wicked]:

"1st. That they shall be cast into hell fire to be tormented there, is so express, and so often mentioned in Scripture, that there can be no doubt about it.—Matt. 25 : 41, 46; 13 : 42, 50; 18 : 8.

"2d. That they shall not live forever. This is so plain in Scripture, and is so every where inculcated,—that the wages of sin is death, and the reward of the righteous is everlasting life,—the constant language of Scripture in the current of the New Testament as well as the Old, is life to the just, to believers, to the obedient, and death to the wicked and unbelievers,—that one would wonder how the readers could be mistaken where death is threatened so constantly, and declared every where to be the ultimate punishment and last estate to which the wicked must all come. To solve this, they have invented a very odd signification of the word death, which they would have stand for eternal life in torment. They who will put so strange and contrary a signification upon a word in a hundred places, where, if it had not its true and literal sense, one would wonder it should be so often used, and that in opposition to life, which in these places is used literally, ought to have good proofs for giving it a sense in those places of Scripture directly contrary to what it ordinarily has in other parts of Scripture and every where else." (Pp. 319, 320.)

"Now phthora, corruption, (Gal. 6 : 7, 8,) signifies the dissolution and final destruction of a thing, whereby it ceases to be; but corruption can by nobody be pretended to signify the endless sense of pain and torment in a being subsisting and continued on to eternity. Corruption is the spoiling anything, the divesting it of the being it had. Accordingly St. Paul, 1 Cor. 15, uses incorruption for an indefinable [unending] estate of immortality. That which gives some color to their understanding by death an endless life in torment, is the everlasting fire threatened by our Savior to the wicked. Matt. 18 : 8; 25 : 41, 46. "But . . . it may suffice to say, that everlasting, in a true Scripture sense, may be said of that which endures as long as the subject it affects endures." Etc. (P. 321.)

On Isa. 66 : 24, he remarks: "In . . Gehenna, or the valley of Hinnom, . . . was kept a constant fire to burn up the carcases of beasts and other filth of the city of Jerusalem, where, though the fire never was quenched, yet it does not follow, nor is it said that the bodies that were burnt in it were never consumed, only that the worms that gnawed and the fire that burnt them were constant, and never ceased till they were destroyed. So, though the fire was not put out, yet the chaff was burnt up and consumed, (Matt. 3 : 12; and the tares, 13 : 30; in both which places, and the parallel, Luke 3 : 17, the Greek word signifies to be consumed by burning, though in our Bibles it is translated burn up but in one of them, Matt. 3 : 12. Taking it then for evident that the wicked shall die and be extinguished at last," etc. (P. 322.)

I presume Bro. Storrs has published the above extracts somewhere in the course of his Examiner. But though they may not be new to his readers, or even to the readers of the Crisis, I think there is no harm in their republication, if such it be.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts upon the Present Aspect of Affairs in these United States.

I have been waiting some time in hopes that some competent brother would set in order the events now occurring in our own country as to their bearing upon the times and seasons, as noted in the Scriptures of truth. But not having realized these hopes, take the liberty of throwing out the following thoughts for the consideration of the brethren.

It is evident that our nation, as to territory, is not definitely described in the prophetic Scriptures, like those of the old world, still we are not outside of God's all comprehensive purposes of wrath upon this doomed world. Christ has most clearly defined the measure of judgment upon nations as well as individuals in this declaration, "to whom much is given, of them also much will be required." I believe it is generally conceded, that no nation of earth has ever been so signally blest, and attained so high a distinction in so short a period, as this. God having thus prospered, and given us so much light and knowledge, which, if misimproved, as it most manifestly has been, greatly enhances our sins, and very likely may, like the blessings conferred upon Israel of old, prove a "trap and a snare," and bring upon us his not displeasure.

We read in the 25th chapter of Jeremiah, that God has a controversy with all the nations of earth, that all must drink of the wine cup of his fury—be drunken, spue, and fall and rise no more, because of the sword that he will send among them; and that the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth even unto the other end thereof; that he will raise up a whirlwind from the coasts of the earth; that evil shall go forth from nation to nation; that he will plead with all flesh and give the wicked to the sword, etc.

Again, in the 2d Psalm we read, that he will speak to the nations in his wrath and vex them in his sore displeasure; that he will break them with a rod of iron and dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel. By reason of which vexation, the nations will become angry prior to, or just in immediate connection with, the time of the dead being judged, etc. All which events, according to the light I enjoy, occur under the third woe and the seventh angel. (See Rev. 11 : 14—19.) In Rev. 16th, we learn that under the sixth vial three unclean spirits are to go forth out of the mouth of the dragon, (i. e., the eastern division of the old Roman empire whose seat is at Constantinople,) and from the mouth of the beast, i. e. the Papacy, (whose seat is in Italy,) and out of the mouth of the false prophet, (i. e. the two-horned beast or allies of Europe,) unto the kings of the earth and the whole world, to gather them (or rather prepare them) for the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Within the past few years we have witnessed the progress of this work, beginning with the Crimean war, succeeded soon after, by the Italian war, creating an influence amongst the nations of Europe, which has caused them all to prepare for war on a scale of magnitude never before witnessed. We see still further in the progress of events that the great harlot is so hated by them, that within the past year, she has been made desolate and naked, and is just ready to fall. (Query. Has not her judgments of death, mourning and famine come upon her in this day or year?)

These events, occurring as they have in the old world, have been witnessed by this nation with much apparent indifference, under the delusive hope, that no such evils were to be apprehended by us, and no such preparation was necessary. But lo! in the midst of our fancied security, "the whirlwind" reaches us in accelerated power, and "evil" bursts upon us unexpectedly, like a thunder bolt in a clear sky, causing distress and perplexity, "confounding the wisdom of the wise and bringing to naught the understanding of the prudent," as to what is to be done, and what it is "that is coming upon the earth." And now what do we see? The nation being rent asunder, by a scourge in our midst, which bids fair to become like that of "Midian at the rock Oreb, when every man's sword was turned against his neighbor in the work of destruction, just as God says it shall be at a time yet future. And further, we see the nation is "rushing forward, like the rushing of mighty waters," in the work of preparation, like "drunken," "angry" zealots. bent on the destruction of all and everything that oppose their frenzied will.

O! how fearfully deep has this poor, doomed nation unwittingly drank of the wine-cup of God's fury, which will only end in her overthrow and destruction! And oh! how fearful is the condition of nations as well as individuals, to whom God has given of his grace, who neglect or refuse to render that which he requires! Truly, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgdent than for such a people. How is it with us, beloved in the Lord, whose minds have been opened to read "such wondrous things out of His law?" Are we quite sure that all is safe? Have we lived up to the light conferred upon us, and rendered to God all he requires at our hands? If not, how shall we escape? Will not our account be fearfully augmented? O, let us one and all, examine ourselves in this matter, and see that no time is lost in the work of preparation, lest we be found wanting in that great day.

The question may be asked, as it often has been, how far is this work to progress prior to the coming of Christ? Is this nation and those of the old world, to be broken and destroyed previous to that day, or not? As these are important inquiries, and have occupied much of my attention, I will answer according to the grace given me. By reference to the 17th and 19th of Revelation and the 2d and 7th of Daniel, we learn that all the powers symbolized by the "beast and false prophet," the "ten horns," the kings of earth and their armies," all that is symbolized by the great metallic image, etc., are to continue till the coming of Christ, and are to stand up against him, and are to be destroyed in the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Therefore, we are not to look for much more to be accomplished in the old world prior to that day.

As to this nation and others not so definitely comprehended in these prophecies, my mind is not so clear. It is not at all improbable but they may be broken and subjugated to the great central powers of Europe, much as China has recently been. But still I can see no positive testimony to that effect. The definite testimony is, that the whole world are to be waked up, and prepared—made ready to be gathered, by becoming angry, by arming, etc. Which work is so far advanced that I can see no necessity for further delay, and hence must say evidence from this source, as well as from the periods, justify us in looking for the consummation at any time.

Resignation.

There are hours in every one's life, when memory lies open like a book, and when the heart, laden with the rich harvests of affection, sends the fleet-winged messenger of thought back into the dim aisles of the past; and as she rushes forward toward the unseen future, lays at our feet her trophies of joys and sorrows. Even to the child of God, whose hopes are anchored far above the storms of life, there ever and anon will crowd in upon his sweetest dreams of heaven moments of sorrow, when conscience awakened from her silent reverie calls up a thousand regrets and broken resolutions, that chase over the soul like fleetest night-birds before an ocean tempest,—sorrows that thrill the heart, and break through the strong panoply of our ambition.

But there are joys too that memory brings,—kind acts of charity and love, long buried in the world's great sepulchre of forgetfulness, but whose sweet remembrances are all safely garnered in the secret urn of the heart.

O! what a wide world sorrow makes of the past; but what a gorgeous world hope makes of the future. While faith looks upward, and circles around the throne of the eternal, hope points outward and onward, toward the bright isles of the future, where the stars of love look out like beckoning angels from the skies.

There lives in the depths of every one's heart a mine of love, which the warm sunlight of charity and a manly, christian sympathy alone can reach, and which, if tempered to a gospel hope, would cast a halo of light around a large circle of friends.

To the christian, what matters it though the cold world tread thoughtlessly over the flowers of love and hope, which the ruthless hand of death has torn, crushed and bleeding, and laid at our feet? There is a friend in whose soft hand are safely garnered all of sorrow's tears—whose love is a healing balm for every bleeding breast.

To those who mourn, there is a balm for all your tears—a golden hope for all your sorrow; it is the rich promise of a risen Savior that he will come again, and dispel the dusky twilight of the tomb, and make the bright bow of immortality to shine over the equinox of the grave. This is the christian's credence—that a day will be, when the good of all time—patriarchs and apostles, martyrs and christians, with all the sheeted millions of earth, will come forth to the resurrection of life.

The votaries of mammon look not beyond the changing pleasures of an hour wafted them by the breath of fame or fortune; and if the man of the world, through a reverse of fortune, or the sorrows which death has flung over him, for a moment looks out upon the shattered wreck of joys which the winds of fate have dashed high around him, and thus beholds the world through the medium of his tears, his high revolving schemes of fortune, and the golden throne of ambition whence the goddess of fame sat beckoning him onward, all sink like bubbles on the sea; the past, with all its load of joys and sorrows, comes back upon the wing of memory like the lapse of a fading dream, and he exclaims, Oh! the emptiness of life. For a moment his eye of faith and hope reaches out over the grey horizon of the great future, where God dwells, and the heart breathes an earnest, but a momentary prayer; then the shifting changes of hot ambition come seething from the brain—heaven is forgotten, prayer yields to hope,—and hope is forgotton in the wide whirl of business, and—he slides back again into the noise of cankering life.

To the christian, how changed the scene His hopes are anchored by the golden chain of love to the eternal throne of God. Faith, like a bright sunrise on the ocean, points upward, while prayer moves the arm that moves the world.

Yes! thank heaven, grief is not as progressive as joy; and happy indeed are those who have found that time and change can dull the point of woe, and have learned to weave into the woof of passing hours the colors of crimson and gold.

Reader! there is a world of meaning in those little words,—be good—be pure—be trusting; then, though death has flung his dark shadows wide across your pathway, ane the tears have dimmed your eyes, yet through your tears, and far above these darkening shadows you can see the star of hope, radiant with heavenly light shooting its bright rays far out through the surrounding gloom. Then, if the earthquake of disappointment comes—as come it may—and lays your brightest earthly hopes in the dust, through the undimmed eye of faith you can look up and behold the bright bow of promise painted in immortal colors, upon the bosom of the darkest clouds.

"Affection is the stepping stone to God." It unlocks the door of the heart, and strews the path of life with the richest flowers; and if virtue and christian love are the architects of our faith, bye and bye we shall walk in fairy aisles, where the ceilings are not as now hung with the drapery of death,—in a land where tears are unknown, and where the myrtle of the heart will for ever over-shadow the monuments of our grief. * * *

☞ In attempting to convert a sinner from the error of his way, one should be as careful as though he were endeavoring to revive a rapidly expiring fire. Not tumble in a scuttle full of dogmas all at once, so that the faint spark which gives indications of spiritual life is so overwhelmed by the mass that it can with difficulty force its way through it, or perhaps is smothered entirely; but drop a truth here, a maxim there, always striving to keep the spark alive. Fan it—do not blow it out.

☞ The spring of peace and contentment is within, and therefore we had need look that it be clear and undefiled.

Our Prospects.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God."—Isa. 40: 1.

Bro. Grant:—If ever there was a period in the history of the church when she needed comfort and consolation, it is now, for it requires as much grace in these perilous times to serve God, as it did when the servants of Christ were led to the stake for walking in the footsteps of their Divine Master. The world with its fashions and allurements are as powerful, if not more so, than ever, in leading the church away from God and righteousness. Are not professors of religion worldly-minded, money-loving, and pleasure-seeking to such an extent, that we cannot distinguish the church from the world? The fact is, and it is a lamentable one, that the church and the world have shaken hands together; it is "hail fellow, well met," with them. They occupy the seat of the scorner, they eat and drink with the drunken. May the Lord have mercy upon them, and show them their danger! There are some honorable exceptions, but they are only exceptions to the general rule, they have a form, but know little or nothing of the life and power of godliness; they turn a deaf ear to the glorious truths of the gospel of Christ, and have substituted in their stead the traditions of men. While the prophecies are being fulfilled, and the signs of the times loudly proclaim, "the end of all things is at hand," they are "saying, where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were." With the political world in commotion, kingdoms reeling, falling, they willfully close their eyes against the light of God's Word, and the events which are taking place at this day, and cry "peace and safety." We have fallen upon perilous times. Political earthquakes are now shaking nations, men are calling on their sages for an explanation of all these terrible commotions, saying, what does it all mean? what next? Echo only rolls back upon the startled ear and troubled mind, what next!

The keen eye of the politician no longer kindles with prophetic vision, it has grown dim. The wise ones of this world shake their heads and exclaim, DARK, DARK! their minds are beclouded by the lowering horizon of political discord; the political magician has lost his divining rod, the wonders of the present day have eaten it up; conservative men are unable to quell the storm; compromises are rejected, concessions derided, and confidence destroyed; all propositions for peace fail; men are unable to stem the current, it is madly sweeping on all before it. God's controversy with the nations has begun; all this is strong evidence to the children of God, that "the end of all things is at hand! The budding of the fig-tree is no surer indication of the approach of summer, than that the present state of the world and the church is an indication that our redemption draweth nigh.

How comforting to the child of God, amidst this terrible storm, to know that his heavenly Father holds the helm and guides the ship. We know whom we have trusted, and are persuaded that our skillful pilot will guide the ship Zion safe into port without the loss of a single being on board, and we'll sing,

"We'll stand the storm, it won't be long,
We'll anchor by and by."

Glory be to God! we'll soon sing, safe at home. Take courage, brethren, the very hairs of your head are all numbered, our warfare will soon be ended, the promise of Christ to his waiting bride will soon be fulfilled. ("I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also.") Let the storm rage! "The fiercer the blast, the sooner 'tis past." We long for deliverance, "we cannot, we cannot forbear these passionate longings for home." While the hearts of men are failing them for fear of those things that are coming upon the earth, the child of God looks forward with joyful anticipations and sings,

"Whatever ills the world befall
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near.
His chariot will not long delay;
We hear the rumbling wheels and pray,
Triumphant Lord, appear!" Amen!

We shall soon lay down the cross and receive the crown, and partake of the tree of life, drink of the river of Paradise, and bask in the smiles of our Redeemer. May it be the lot of the reader and writer.

A Voice from the Highways.

One day, while on a mission tour in the highways, I met a little boy of twelve years, whose noble forehead and sparkling eyes showed more than ordinary intellect. He was one of that race whose misfortune it is to come under the cruel hand of oppression. I accosted him thus:

"My little boy, do you go to Sunday School?"

"No, ma'am," was the reply.

"Why not?"

"Cause I no read, an' I got no shoes—no coat but dis ragged one,—no pants but dese patched ones, and dey no fit."

"Where is your father? can't he get you some?"

He faltered, and continued silent for a few moments, while I noticed his under lip hang down, and his eyes filled with tears. He then said,

"My fader no live, and my moder no live too. I'se got no home—I only stays with my aunt."

I then asked him to show me where his aunt lived. So I went with him to his humble cottage, while my heart beat with sympathy for this little orphan boy. I opened the door and went in, praying as I went. I was kindly greeted by the aunt, and seven other little curly heads, who seemed to understand that a stranger had come, and began immediately to seat themselves quietly down to listen. I then inquired into their circumstances and looked around to discover, if possible, any chance for deception. I found everything about the house and children, very neat, (which is not always the case among poor, white people,) but they seemed very destitute of things comfortable. They had been free people at the South, but were driven from their homes, their possessions, their little all. They had seven children of their own and three little orphans, one of whom was the little boy I had met with.

The parents of these children had both died, and it had been with great difficulty that the relatives of the deceased parents had been able to keep the little ones from the cruel grasp of the oppressors, for they were like ravening wolves seeking for their prey. When they fled for refuge to the North, the monsters followed them until they arrived at Baltimore, where they were concealed seven weeks, waiting for their pursuers to return as they came. Finding at last an opportunity to escape, they hurried on to Providence, bringing their little treasures with them. When they came here they were penniless. I offered them assistance and took the little smiling family home with me, and opened a bag of ready made clothing sent by some dear friends in O., N. Y., (if ever I was grateful it was for that ready made clothing,) may God bless them, and I am sure they would have been blest, could they have beheld the tear of gratitude fall from that mother's cheek, and the hearty "thank you, ma'ams" from the dear little creatures, as I tried the ready made garments, first upon one and then another, and found a suit for nearly all of them, so that on the following Sunday I led the smiling group by the hand about a mile to the hall, where we worship,—each of them taking turns, for all craved the privilege of getting hold of my hand. And I will assure you I was never happier in my life, than when I led that smiling family to the Sunday school.

I shall now leave them at the Sunday school, where fifty other scholars met to learn more perfectly the ways of life. Our school numbers about seventy-five, though only fifty-seven have ever met at once. The church are prospering. Some have found peace, two backsliders have been reclaimed, and others are convicted. Bro. P. C. Rodman is still with us laboring.

For the Crisis.

Let the Gospel Sword have its own Edge.

Truth has always been the most dreaded foe of hypocrites and treacherous backsliders. It matters not what cause they may be engaged in. That person whose conscience is not his bulwark of defence, will fall before the double-edged sword of righteousness. The coward's heart may stand firm amid the fire and carnage of the battle field, but a convicted conscience cannot stand in boldness before the piercing sharpness of unadulterated truth.

Some people seem to think that gospel truth does not convict in this manner. But the opinion of men cannot change the purposes of God. Gospel truth dressed up in the flourishes of human wisdom, is like fighting with a sheathed sword on the field of battle. It cannot cut, for it has no edge. It has to cut through the sheath before it can plunge into the breast of its victim. And if the sheath of God's sword is those wise ministers, who, to make God's word respectable, screen its edge and strike with it in this condition, truth will suffer and men's hearts will be hardened. Men never prune trees with beetles. They take a sharp pruning knife. So the gospel cannot be beat into men by these theological beetles. The most they can do is, to scare men by threatening; but if they should strike with their huge bludgeons, their victim is killed and lost forever.

But God's truth carries its own power with it. It goes to the heart and does its work there. This is not altogether a ceremonial law. It is written "not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God; not upon tables of stone, but upon the fleshly tables of the heart." 2 Cor. 3: 2. That law enforced upon the heart of any impenitent sinner, will stir up the fountains of sin to its veriest dregs. When the prophet Samuel told of the sin committed by a certain person, King David said that that man should surely die. But when the prophet told him, "thou art the man," he melted in the deepest contrition before him for forgiveness. So truth, wherever it may go, carries its power in pointed simplicity. Let christians then hold out God's holy law plainly, earnestly, sincerely; take it fresh from its own fountain, baptized with its own spirit and power, and it will break down the strongest barriers of sin, stay the mightiest tide of heaven-insulting rebellion, for it "is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Heb. 4: 12.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 23, 1861.

"Everlasting Burnings."

Bro. Grant:—What is your view of the meaning of Isa. 33: 14?

T. M. Preble.

The verse named reads as follows:—"The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites; who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" We will quote the preceding verses, beginning at the tenth:—"Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself. Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble: your breath, as fire, shall devour you. And the people shall be as the burnings of lime: as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire. Hear, ye that are far off, what I have done; and, ye that are near, acknowledge my might." Then follows the one to be considered.

Perhaps we can best throw light on the passage by giving various readings of the same. The Septuagint, by Thompson, reads as follows:—"A fire shall utterly devour you; and nations shall be burned up, as thorns in a field are rejected and burned. The far distant nations shall hear what I have done, they who are near shall know my power. The transgressors in Zion are fled; terror will seize the ungodly. Who will tell you that a fire is kindled? Who will proclaim to you the place which is everlasting?"

Coverdale's, or the Bishop's Bible, reads: "The sinners at Zion are afraid; a sudden fearfulness is come upon the hypocrites. What is among us (say they) that will dwell by that consuming fire? Which of us may abide that everlasting heat?"

In the Comprehensive Commentary, we find the following readings:—"Who among us shall dwell with devouring fire? Let us abandon the city and shift for ourselves elsewhere; as good live in everlasting burnings as here." Or, "Who among us shall dwell with this devouring fire, before which so vast an army is as thorns?—with these everlasting burnings which have made the Assyrians as the burnings of lime."

"The Pope-Emperor."

The following interesting article is from the London Christian World, of Nov. 30, 1860. It will pay for a careful reading. The editor is evidently a close observer of the signs of the times, and has not come to his conclusion without good evidence. Time's onward march will soon settle the point. The grand crisis is at hand. Let all be prepared for great events,—even the greatest of all,—the coming of the Son man, the resurrectioin of the dead, and the setting up of the everlasting kingdom. The writer says:—

"We are daily watching with deep solicitude the development of the imperial policy with regard to the head of the Roman Catholic church. What that policy really is, probably no human being knows but the mystery of the Tuilleries himself. That extraordinary personage keeps his designs to himself, but their character is gradually unfolded by facts, and it is with these facts that Europe has to deal. We have long had the impression that Louis Napoleon's support of the Pope by French troops in Rome—a support which he has rendered now for twelve years, that is, ever since he overthrew the Roman Republic of 1848—is out of no love either for Pope or Popery, but that, in the first instance, it was to secure the aid of the clergy in consolidating his scheme of empire, and that now it is continued as a mere blind until the auspicious moment arrives for appropriating to himself the religious supremacy which Popes have exercised for a thousand years.

Let not our readers be startled. Again and again we have warned them to avoid the error of imagining that the fall of Popery, as a temporal power, is the immediate antecedent to the diffusion of a purer type of christianity among continental nations. If they believe this, the event will disappoint them. We should like to believe this, but our interpretation of Scripture forbids. Popery will not be immediately succeeded by christianity, but it will fall before, and be merged in a great infidel Power, whose daring impiety, blasphemy, and tyranny will far exceed every thing of the kind witnessed by Europe, even in the most dismal days of Papal might and majesty. As surely as we write these words a dark cloud hangs over Europe; and while we fully sympathise with all who rejoice in the fall of Popery, we cannot conceal the settled conviction that its fall is the signal for the appearance of something immeasurably more terrible than itself. That the continuance of the tremendous visitation will be but brief it is consolatory to believe; but during its short period of existence its work in the world will be very awful. We do not prophecy, but we read inspired prophets and believe what they say; hence the earnestness and certainty with which we speak in outline on this intensely interesting subject. Nor do we say that the long era of apostasy, from the sublime and holy faith of the apostolic age, will reach its terrible crisis in the man Louis Napoleon, constituting him the personal Antichrist so distinctly set before us by the prophets of both Testaments; but every thing in his history—his connection with France, the resurrection of the empire by his skill, his nominal protection of the Pope, while he allows his temporal authority to pass from his hands, his extraordinary reserve, and his insatiable ambition to become the greatest monarch of the world—fixes our thoughts upon him as possibly the Pope-Emperor, whose character, career, and destiny are stated with such terrible fidelity in the book of truth. Ever since he ascended the throne of France we have expected something out of the ordinary course of royalty, and especially something in connection with the decay of Popery in its secular aspects, which would most surely arrest the attention of mankind; and ever since his war with Austria, when he knocked that prop from beneath the chair of St. Peter, we have looked for some fresh evidence of the correctness of our impression that Louis Napoleon will not long suffer ecclesiastical supremacy to remain in any other hands than his own, so far as France is concerned. Doubtless his intention is to begin with France; and when he finds himself fully recognized as spiritual lord of the French people, the way will be cleared for further action until the giddy point of his ambition be reached, and his highest aspiration be crowned with success.

It is well known that Louis Napoleon uses the press as never monarch did before for the purpose of carrying out his plans. An anonymous pamphlet makes its appearance, suggesting some line of policy which, in the interests of France, the government of that country would do well to adopt. The thing is new and startling; people talk about it; and as political discussion is not permitted in the newspapers, the pamphlet immediately obtains a wide circulation. A day or two after its publication a paragraph appears in the official journal disavowing all knowledge of the pamphlet on the part of the government, and generally denying that it has any sympathy with the views of the writer. This only whets the public appetite to peruse the production, and thus the people become familiarized with the idea—the very result contemplated and desired by the Emperor; and when that result is obtained he quietly does the thing suggested by the nameless pamphleteer. Well, there has just issued from the Paris press a pamphlet with the title we have placed at the head of this article—Le Pope Empereur—in which the writer proposes the union of the political and religious sovereignties in the hand of Napoleon III. Although, as we have said, we really anticipated something of this kind, its actual occurrence has deepened our conviction that we are on the eve of a crisis unparalleled in the history of the world. Only one thing was wanting for a day or two to convince us that the suggestion pointed to a predetermined reality. That one thing speedily came—a semi-official denial that the government entertained the views of the pamphleteer. Let wise men, therefore, keep their eyes open. Our vigilance will not change the course of events, but it may profitably instruct us in the signs of the times."

We see no room to doubt the truth of the saying: "We are on the eve of a crisis unparalleled in the history of the world." And its approach is now very rapid. Every week shows marked progress of the awful storm which is about to burst upon a wicked world. There is no indication that its rapid progress will be stayed till the great work of destruction is accomplished. As well might one attempt to steady the earthquake shock as to avert its terrible advance. God foresaw the passing events, and moved the prophets to write their history many centuries since; but now it is rewritten in our daily papers; events which can transpire only when we are very near the time when "the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Reader, are you ready to welcome the coming King? You have no time to lose! The end is at hand!

What is Coming?

Says an English correspondent of the N. W. Christian Advocate:—"Students of the Bible are anxiously pondering what will be the end of this universal agitation. Has the Lord's controversy with the nations begun? Has he arisen to shake terribly the earth; and are we just entering on that era of terror and glory to which the seers of both Testaments so steadily point, and of which the Savior himself spoke so fully to his wondering disciples? Has the crisis of the Gentile dispensation come, and shall it be the privilege of the present generation to witness the greatest events spoken of in the fulfillment of prophecy?"

Thank the Lord, many are beginning to open their eyes to behold our true position on the prophetic chart. Our stand-point is the most sublime ever occupied by any generation since the world began.

"I do rejoice that life was given
In these last days to me,
That deathless I may rise to heaven,
And my Redeemer see.

Then, waiting brethren, let us sing;
He will not tarry long;
And fill with love the hours that bring
The glory of our song."

Another Fallen!—Our sweet poetess, "Fannie Parry," sleeps in Jesus! She departed this life on the morning of Jan. 17th, about one o'clock. She breathed out her life in hope, calmly resting on the love of her Lord. Blessed is her memory! Peaceful shall be her rest, until the morning of eternal life shall dawn, and awaken her to her Hope's fruition—immortality!

A Sad Change.

A late writer says:—

"I have noticed in my visits to the public library, that there is a great change in the kind of books read by church members, the number of fictitious works being largely in the majority. Ten or twenty years ago they would not have dared to read a novel, and now novels are their daily literary food."

The foregoing is another indication of the boasted progress of this age. There truly is progress, rapid progress; but it is away from God and the Bible. Whenever we find one interested in novel reading, we are sure they have lost their love for truth. This is one of the signs that we are in the last days. Is the reader assisting in its fulfillment? Are your parlor tables loaded with the poisonous trash? Are the minds of your children pampered with such destructive food? Are you a professed christian, and setting them the example? No wonder you have lost your love for the prayer meeting, and the preaching of the simple truth of the Scriptures, and have been seeking entertainment in mere pulpit eloquence adorned with flowery fables. You too, are making progress; but in the way to death, and may soon expect to reap ruin as the wages of such a course. As a friend, we exhort you to quit such reading at once, and begin to store your mind with the rich treasures in the sacred Scriptures, and other good books of truth.

Novel reading is to the mind, what rum drinking is to the body,—intoxicating and ruinous. We should as soon expect to find an amiable whisky drinker, as novel reader. As soon expect to find the former as the latter growing in grace. Dear reader, if you have spent your fleeting hours in reading fiction, resolve now, in the strength of the Lord, to quit the bad habit forever. If there were not positive evils resulting from such reading, our lives are too short to be wasted in treasuring up falsehood. Hours thus spent will afford no joys on a dying bed, or at the judgment scene. Wasted! wasted! must be the answer for time thus employed. Come, clean your house of novels, as you would of infidel books, cards and rum. Let no more be poisoned by their baneful influence.

"Lovers of Pleasure."

We are truly living in strange times. It reminds one of the feast of Belshazzar, held the night on which Babylon was overthrown. As the great day of the Lord draws near, the people seem more greedy for scenes of pleasure than ever before. The following description of the Sabbath day sports in New York will give the reader some idea of the popular current. The writer says:—

"Notwithstanding the sharp frost and bitter cold which greeted the sun as it made its appearance yesterday morning, Jan. 13th, the Park was visited during the day by at least seventy-five thousand people, the greater part of whom were present between the hours of eleven and three o'clock. At half-past two o'clock there were not less than forty thousand people on the pond amusing themselves, some with walking, others sliding, many riding on chairs, but the greater portion skating.

On the Road.—But the pond, although a great source of attention, was not the only one. By actual count it was ascertained that up to three o'clock over two thousand five hundred sleighs and cutters entered the Park, and the drives were literally alive with them. Every kind of decent vehicle on runners was present, and the working man's single horse cutter, in which he drove his family around the Park, was to be seen mingling with the dashing four-in-hand equipages filled with gayly dressed and buffalo robe wrapped ladies from Fifth avenue. Bells jingled on every side—silver bells, bell metal bells, brazen bells, and bells of every other kind of sounding metal. Everywhere this music could be heard, often accompanied with merry laughter. "What, laughter on the Sabbath?" we fancy we hear some sanctimonius Sabbatarian say. Yes; actual laughter, heartfelt, and produced by the action of more air on the lungs. No long faces, but the merry, rosy cheeks of health greeted the observer's eye. . . . .

On the pond there was a gay scene. The ladies' pond was visited by nearly two thousand females, many of whom skated, but the greater part merely walked about on the ice, acting the part of moving spectators. The principal amusement seemed to be produced among the ladies by being propelled along on the ice chairs. A pretty scene was enacted yesterday by a circle of skaters forming along the outer edge of this reserve, alternately a lady and gentleman, and skating in single file several times around the enclosure. Suddenly one person took the lead, and, passing through the lane to the larger pond, followed by the whole line, mingled with those outside and were soon lost among them. The larger pond was literally black with the sombre hued attire of the masculines, especially at the hour before named, when they were in the thickest numbers. The slides were patronized by hundreds, one party alone consisting of eighty-three, who were sliding one after the other on two slides, going northward on one and southward on the other. With the exception of one broken nose and two slight cuts on the head, no mishap occurred during the day, and every one enjoyed himself, except one young man, who indignantly threw his bran new skates away, because, as he asserted, "they threw him down." There was so great a demand for hot coffee and hot lemonade that the refreshment saloons could not keep pace with the demand, the counters getting far ahead of the cooks, although they worked like niggers. . . . . Many and fervent are the prayers that are put up every minute to the "clerk of the weather" for a continuance of his bounties."

We are informed that the citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., have just completed a very extensive Opera House and Theatre, so that they will not need to go over to New York for theatrical amusement. In giving an account of the history of the edifice and of the meeting to decide whether such a building should be erected, the writer says:—

"A large and highly respectable audience was present, and, notwithstanding strong opposition to the movement was anticipated from the clergy, the warmest sympathy was expressed by these gentlemen, many of whom united heartily in affording encouragement and substantial aid to those who have had it in charge."

Is it to be supposed that Christ and the apostles, the primitive christians, martyrs and reformers, or any true follower of Christ, would express "the warmest sympathy," uniting "heartily in affording encouragement and substantial aid" to such an enterprise? Are not these the times of which Paul spoke, when he said, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of . . . . pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof"? Let us observe the apostle's instruction, and "from such turn away."

The State of Europe.

While the war clouds in our own country are continually becoming more alarming and extensive, the same is true of the European nations. The present year, no doubt, will be characterized by stupendous events that will astonish a wicked world, and cause the true christian to say, "Come, Lord Jesus,—come quickly." The following is from the New York Herald of Jan. 14th, 1861:—

"While every day the revolution now agitating our own country is apparently becoming more threatening in its strength, the signs of the times in Europe clearly indicate that within a few weeks we shall see the commencement of a series of the grandest struggles that ever convulsed a continent or swept a tottering throne to ruin, and which will make 1861 a year even more tragically memorable than its eventful predecessor. We have only to look to France to realize a sense of the dangers and destruction that lie hid in the uncertain future. If we extend our glance to Hungary, to Austria, to the new Italian monarchy, and even far beyond, we become still more impressed with the ominous aspect of every national and political feature that there meets the eye. The tendency of every thing is warlike, revolutionary."

While many professed watchmen are crying "Peace and safety," telling their hearers that a good time is coming; that the temporal millennium is about to begin; that the present commotion and distress of nations indicate that the great work of converting the world is soon to commence; and that the people need have no fears that the second coming of Christ is at hand; they are not aware that they are fulfilling 1 Thess. 5: 3, and fitting themselves for "sudden destruction." O what blindness! May the Lord open their eyes to see their dangerous position before it is too late. Would that something might transpire to arouse the sleeping watchmen, before the time is past for them to sound the alarm. Like men enveloped in smoke in a burning house, they seem to sleep more soundly as their dangers increase. Their condition appears to be much like that of those described by the prophet Isaiah, when he says:—

"His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter."—Isa. 56: 10–11.

☞ Toil and trial are grim schoolmasters; but a flush of hope can make them beautiful, even as a sunbeam the rude mountain frost.

Is it right for Christians to marry Unbelievers?

It is often asked, "Do you think it is right for christians to marry unconverted persons?" Our answer is, we think the Scriptures forbid such marriages. The following remarks on this subject, by W. B. Boyd, of Baltimore, Md., and those by the Editor of the Gospel Banner, are worthy the attention of those who wish to please the Lord.—Ed. Crisis.

"We are commanded to 'love not the world, neither the things in the world;' to 'be not conformed to this world;' to 'have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them;' and to 'prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God,' 'proving what is acceptable unto the Lord,' 'understanding what the will of the Lord is.' Have not these exhortations pre-eminent claims upon our consideration in so premeditated a matter as that of marriage? Should we not, before acting, 'understand what the will of the Lord is,' 'proving what is acceptable unto him? Can it be shown that it is the will of God that his children should intermarry with the children of man? Do the examples before the flood show it to be his will? (Gen. 6: 1–7.) Do the examples under the law show it to be his will, (Deut. 6: 3, 4; Neh. 12: 26; 1 Kings 11: 1–6; or does any thing in the teachings and exhortations of Jesus and his apostles show it to be his will? (2 Cor. 6: 14–18; 1 Cor. 5: 15–29.) If so, then they have a right to marry whomsoever they will, whether in the Lord or out of the Lord. But if not, then do not brethren act very self-willed in marrying unbelievers? and can such marriages be said to be 'what the Lord has joined together'? if not, they are the unfruitful works of darkness; and we should take heed to the apostle's exhortation to have no fellowship with such works, 'but rather reprove them.'

Further, do not believers show at least an equal love for the things of the world, the children of men, to that for the things of God, his children, when they manifest such a decided preference by choosing them? There appears to me to be a covetousness and idolatry connected with such a preference, the love and desire of a mere worldly object, a natural born heir of death, and it may be seed of the serpent, above that of a child of the living God, and heir of his kingdom and glory, laboring day after day to do his pleasure, and prepare for the inheritance that is incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Who could make such a choice where the lust of the eyes or the pride of life has an influence? And is it not a step toward bringing about just such a state of things as we see in the sectarian world, where all, whether of a particular sect or of the world at large, have equal privileges of approaching the Father, only so that each worships according to the dictates of their own conscience? 'They that worship God must worship him in spirit and in truth.' They worship they know not what, because they have not the knowledge of the truth of the gospel of the kingdom. 'He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination.' 'The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord.' 'The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord.' Therefore, 'Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him: and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.' Let them first believe and obey the truth, knowing that 'to obey is better than sacrifice;' then shall they be welcomed to all the privileges and responsibilities of the sons of God, and their prayers and sacrifices of righteousness and praise shall be his delight; and should choose for their companions members of their own Father's family; knowing that being members of the body of Christ, we should not be 'unequally yoked together with unbeliers' of Satan's synagogues. It seems strange to me that believers should see no difference between themselves and unbelievers. As for my part, I find it hard enough to keep from being carried along by the current of moral influences into the way of the worldly-minded, among whom we move; and I cannot see that by choosing from among that number a companion for life, I should meet with any greater assistance toward getting clear of my faults, and perfecting my character in the fear of God—the very things for which we should live. Some may have come to an understanding of the truth after marrying believers, but brothers or sisters marrying unbelievers in hope of teaching them the truth, looks like working on the principle of,—'Let us do evil that good may come.'

The inference I draw from 1 Cor. 7: 17, is that the believers at Corinth after they had united themselves to the church of Christ, being exhorted not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers, thought it was even necessary to separate themselves from their unbelieving husbands and wives which they had before; but Paul tells them, No: but if brothers or sisters have unbelieving wives and husbands that be pleased to dwell with them, let them not separate themselves; but if the unbelieving depart let them depart. A brother or sister is not under bondage in such cases.

Now the wife is bound by the law of marriage as long as her husband lives; yet a sister who has an unbelieving husband is not under bondage in case he should depart. If therefore an unmarried sister marries an unbelieving man, knowing at the same time she is not bound to him any longer than he is satisfied to live with her, the law of marriage, which Paul says binds a woman unto her husband for life, is made of no force. 'The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; ONLY IN THE LORD.' This limiting of the liberty of widows to believers, I understand to be binding upon all believers; for male and female are one in Christ Jesus; and it would appear to be strange, unreasonable, and unjust for Paul to limit widows, some perhaps not married a month, to believers in their choice of husbands, while widowers and unmarried brothers and sisters are at liberty to marry whom they will. But Paul had not told the others that they might marry whom they would, as in the case of the widow, and therefore it was not necessary to say to them 'only in the Lord,' and this is all the difference I can see between them."

Your Brother in the faith,
W. B. Boyd.

Baltimore, Md., July, 1860.

"We commend the foregoing pertinent and scriptural remarks on this important subject, to the candid and careful perusal of our readers. We thank Bro. Boyd for his article, not only because he has saved us the labor of writing much on the subject, but on account of the similarity between his views and our own. We have long felt and deplored the evil of which he complains, and been surprised that any christian could become an apologist for that which is so contrary to God's revealed will. We are in days in which many who profess the christian name, claim the largest kind of liberty,—liberty to say and do just what they please, or what may seem right in their own eyes. These, however, ought to know that every one who has assumed Christ's name, ought to 'walk as he walked'—to 'learn of him,' as one of his disciples or learners—and also to be obedient to his authority as Head of the Church. The marriage of believers with unbelievers, the elect people of God with those unapproved by him, has been contrary to his will in all ages and fraught with the most direful results to those immediately concerned; whilst obedience has always been attended with his blessing. Moses warned the Israelites against making covenants or marriages with the Canaanites, because of the evil consequences which would result; viz., 'they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods; so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly.' Deut. 7: 3, 4. Joshua also, after he had led them into the land, and divided it to them by lot, a little while before his death, reminds them of the danger of cleaving to the remnant of the seven nations of Canaan which was left among them. He told them, that if they should make marriages with them, 'Know of a certainty that the Lord your God will no more drive out these nations from before you; but they shall be snares and traps unto you, and scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes, until you perish from off this good land which the Lord God has given you.' Josh. 23: 13. Israel was a chosen people, and Jehovah wished them to be preserved from the vices of the Gentiles, and for this reason commanded that they should not intermarry with them. Solomon, the king of Israel, disregarded this injunction, and incurred the displeasure of Jehovah, and his 'wives turned away his heart after other gods.' 1 Kings 11. Read the 9th and 10th chapters of Ezra, and Neh. 13: 23–31, for an account of the manner in which the great reformers, Ezra and Nehemiah, regarded this law of their God, and their efforts to enforce its observance.

We can easily perceive that the fathers understood this matter, even before there was any recorded law. Witness the paternal care of good old Abraham over his son Isaac, in making the ruler of his household swear that he would fulfill his desire in procuring a wife for his son. Says he, 'I will make thee swear by the Lord, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell; but thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.' Gen. 25: 3, 4. Now Abraham had this testimony from the Lord prior to this,—'I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham, that which he has spoken of him,' Gen 18: 19. Abraham's command to his servant about procuring a wife for Isaac, was approved by Jehovah, as may be seen by reading the narrative of his journey to Mesopotamia.

Also Isaac in his old age blessed Jacob, and charged tim, saying, 'Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan.' Gen. 28: 1. Both Isaac and Jacob regarded the law of their parents in this matter, and were blessed of heaven .... Now a christian is a child of God—one who who loves to hear and obey his heavenly Father in all things; and as such he is beloved by God, and his Christ; is specially cared for, and highly honored. Then how can such a person affiliate with one of his enemies—an enemy of God and Christ? How become the partner for life—the bosom companion of one, who is 'dead in trespasses and sins,' 'an alien from the commonweath of Israel, a stranger to the covenants of promise,' one who is without hope, and without God in the world? Why the thing seems to be impossible. The apostle Paul might well ask the Corinthian brethren, 'what fellowship has righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion has light with darkness? and what concord has Christ with Belial? or what part has he who believes with an unbeliever?"'

Correspondence.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Dear Brn.:—I have but little time of late to write for the press, on account of so much to do in the vineyard of the Lord. But by the grace of God I am still alive, tugging on through tribulation, enjoying the "hundred fold in this time," and a good hope through grace of life in the world to come. I am glad to see the indications that we are nearing the heavenly port. Being convinced that our Advent pilgrimage is marked by the Divine hand, I dare not be ashamed to own my Lord in the presentation of truth adapted to these times; and those who have tasted and feasted on this good news of coming salvation cannot live without it. There is joy, peace, and coming glory in it, with a crown that fadeth not away. Glory be to God! 'tis a blessed hope. "The pure in heart (and life) shall see God." "The meek shall inherit the earth." "The earth shall be filled with thy glory."

In my recent visits among the saints I find some enjoying the fullness of joy by faithful obedience; others sordid and worldly—not as in days gone. There are a few who sigh and cry over the destitution of Zion; but the Lord is good, and is with the pilgrims chosen out of the world.

In company with Brn. Mitchell and Libby, we attended a Conference in Hollis, Me., and here we found a good number of consistent Advent believers, ready to help in the work of God by their exhortations, prayers and means. The Methodists were ready to open their house of worship for us, which we occupied five days. The people came out and gave a hearing ear to the doctrine peculiar to our faith. The Lord gave us a good time together. The brethren were strengthened, comforted, and quickened, in the truth Others heard with candor. I left, but have heard a good report since from the meeting. I have since visited Kennebunk and Concord, besides other places, and I see indications for good wherever I go.

The times call upon us for action. War, secession and disunion; national hostilities and civil war—men's hearts failing them for fear—a national fast called—"The signs of this time" published in all the papers, endorsed by all parties in church and state,—and shall we not lift up our heads, and blow the trumpet of alarm, and say, "Let all the inhabitants of the earth tremble for the day of the Lord cometh"? The mould is about filled. It is time to seek peace and pursue it, to be all ready for the coming events. Startling they will be. But Jesus lives and his word may prove true, and soon the old weather-beaten pilgrims will find their way through the gates into the city. Bless God! Amen.

Groton, Mass.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—I send the following brief letter for insertion in the Crisis, to call the attention of brethren to a new missionary work, which I think we are called on to perform, namely, the translation of some of our works into the German language.

"Louisville, Ky., May 24th, 1860.

Dear Bro. Blain:—Enclosed you will find fifty cents for ten copies of "Death not Life." If you have them in German, send them, and if not send them in English. If you know where I could procure something of the same kind in German, please write and let me know, for it would be very useful to me while I preach in that language. It is now some six years since I heard you preach in Cincinnati, on life and death, and I embraced the doctrine. But from that time I have suffered continual persecution for it. But the truth is worth suffering for. Your book has been very useful to me, and has gladdened many a pious heart that thirsts after the knowledge of the true and living God. May God bless you, and your labors.

H. Snyders."

In subsequent letters he urges translations—says the Germans will receive the truth and stand firm when convinced. He became a Baptist minister since he heard me preach, but expects to be expelled, as he will ploclaim the whole truth—says he is not qualified to translate. But translators can be obtained in New York, if not East, or in Buffalo, Caicago or Milwaukie. To encourage this work I add, that Germans are more numerous West than many are aware of. In Buffalo, there are over 20,000, and a good share of Erie County is settled by them. So it is over the Western States and in C. W., both in country and cities. One half or more are Protestants. But very few, except their children in schools, can read English.

Would it not be profitable (for another life) for our able brethren to invest some of their funds in this missionary business?

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Saratoga, Winona Co., Minn., Dec. 2d, 1860, Elvira Corliss, wife of Timothy E. Corliss, aged forty-seven years.

The subject of this notice embraced the Savior as the only life given to the human family, about twenty years ago, and united with the Methodist Church, of which she was a member until the news of her Lord's soon coming was heard, which she gladly embraced and confessed, and identified herself with the people waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. After enduring sad disappointments, and sometimes cast down from her religious enjoyment through cares and trials of this life, having discharged the duties of a christian mother and companion, she calmly fell asleep with a bright hope of immortality when Jesus comes.

She leaves seven children and a companion to mourn her absence, with many other friends; but we "sorrow not as others that have no hope," for she Sleeps "in Jesus, blessed sleep!

From which none ever wake to weep."

The funeral sermon was preached by Eld. C. L. Page. The subject from which he gave comfort to the mourners was the christian's hope. May the God of all comfort sustain the afflicted friends, and prepare them for that meeting where death will never enter.

Advent Herald please copy.

Died, at Scitico, Ct., Nov. 15th, 1860, of consumption, John Wesley, son of Bro. W. and Sr. R. L. Parker, aged twenty years, nine months, nineteen days.

Wesley was always a good boy, kind to his parents, brothers and sisters, steady in his habits, regular in his attendance at the house of God, but had never professed faith in Christ. After he was taken sick he seemed anxious to prepare for death; said if he had a good hope in Christ he could die willingly; and in a prayer meeting at his father's he spoke and said he felt he must die—that his time was short,—said he little thought one year ago, when standing by the bedside of his dying sister, he should so soon follow her. He requested the prayers of the brethren and sisters that he might have a good evidence of his acceptance with God. He was asked a few days before his death if he could trust in Christ. "Oh, yes! he said, "without a doubt;" and talked of death as calmly as any one about their business. He seemed anxious to dispose of all his things, and have every thing ready The day he died he called for his violin, and with trembling fingers played a very touching melody, the sentiment of which was his farewell to his friends, and it was indeed, for in a few hours he was cold in death. He was sensible to the last. His father asked him, a few moments before he died, how he felt He whispered, "All is well;" bade an affectionate good-by to all his weeping friends, and reclining upon the sofa with his head resting in his mother's arms, calmly and peacefully fell asleep.

Thus in a short time Bro. and Sr. Parker have been called to part with their two oldest children. The music of their voices is no more heard in their dwelling; the harp is silent; the fingers that swept the keys are motionless in death; but while they mourn, it is not as those without hope. Their children sleep in Jesus. Soon they will awake, and on the heights of Zion, with immortal lungs and voices tuned to golden harps, they will unite in singing the song of the redeemed—

"There no groans shall mingle with their songs."

Eld. J. Turner preached a very impressive discourse on the resurrection, from Isa. 26: 19, to a large and attentive audience.

He sleeps! his sufferings all are o'er,
He sleeps! on earth to wake no more;
He's faded from our sight away,
His sun has set while yet t' was day.

He sleeps the silent sleep of death,
His pulse is still, and hushed his breath;
His eyes are closed no more to weep,
He sleeps the last, the dreamless sleep.

He sleeps! nought can disturb his rest,
His pains are o'er, his sleep is blest;
He rests secure from mortal woes,
While angels watch his sad repose.

He sleeps! but will he never wake?
Yes! Jesus will his slumbers break;
His voice the sleeping dead shall hear,
Then he'll awake to die no more.

Scitico, Ct. C. A. Terry.

Died, in East Greenwich, R. I., Dec. 26th, 1860, Sister Tabitha Kittle, in the thirty-seventh year of her age.

Our sister had professed the religion of Christ some years ago, and was a member of the Sixth principal Baptist Church, but for a few years past she has been interested in the blessed hope of Jesus' soon coming. There never could be any great apparent change in the deportment of our sister, having always a kind and even disposition, so much so that all loved her, and none could ever seek otherwise but good of her.

She has left a kind husband and three children, a brother and sister, and other friends, to deeply mourn her loss, but they mourn not as others that have no hope. She was sick some three weeks, and suffered much during the time, but no murmuring was heard from her lips. Being asked by the writer the night before she died if she had given up her little family into the hands of the Lord, and if she felt the Lord to be near to her, she replied, "Yes." In the morning she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. O blessed sleep!

"From which none ever wake to weep."

May husband, children and friends meet her again in a better land.

A large congregation was gathered at the funeral, and listened with marked attention to these words—"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord!" E. Bellows.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of 27th ult.]

HUNGARY.

Pesth, Sunday. Yesterday a disturbance took place at Keerekerut, during which the garrison was compelled to use their fire-arms. Five persons were severely wounded.

Gaeta, (via. Marseilles,) Tuesday. Thirty guns only have been used in the bombardment. To-day, a mortar battery has been established in the valley, in a sheltered position.

Paris, Sunday noon. Negotiations concerning Gaeta have been opened between France and Sardinia.

Naples, Friday, 6 P. M. A conspiracy by the Bourtant party, but without importance, has been discovered. Four Royalist Generals have been arrested, with some agents of King Francis II., who had come from Gaeta.

Naples, Saturday. Several Neapolitan officers have been arrested. The bombardment of Gaeta continues.

Le Nord, referring to reports of Russian support to Francis II. of Naples, says:—"Whatever may be the personal sympathy felt for his misfortune, the Czar has not offered him any material support."

ITALY.

Turin, Dec. 29. King Victor Emmanuel arrived yesterday at Ancona, and is expected here on Monday. The "Opinione" confirms the news of the departure of the Queen of Naples from Gaeta.

Turin, Dec. 30. A royal decree has been issued, ordering the dissolution of the Sardinian Chamber of deputies.

The King arrived here yesterday, accompanied by Prince Carignan, and the Ministers who went to meet him at Alexandria.

His Majesty was received by the municipality.

The National Guards were under arms. An immense crowd cheered his Majesty. The city was illuminated.

Naples, Dec. 26. It is asserted that the French fleet had left Gaeta.

Gaeta, Dec. 25. Notwithstanding the rain and snow, the bombardment continues with great fury, some of the shells reaching the most remote parts of the city. Several inhabitants have been killed.

The claims of the Servian nationality are to be brought forward by the Servian deputation, whose proposals will be submitted to the next Diet in the form of Royal propositions.

DOMESTIC.

The South.—Washington, Jan 16. Lieut. Hall left this afternoon for Charleston, with instructions for Major Anderson, the exact character of which has not transpired; but it is ascertained from reliable sources that the troops will not be withdrawn from Fort Sumpter, and that that post will be defended.

The Herald has a rumor that a large military force is enlisted here to seize the forts in the harbor as soon as hostilities at the South shall be commenced. It is said that from three to five thousand men are enlisted.

The Tribune has positive information that it is the intention of the South Carolinians to attack Fort Sumpter on the return of their envoy from Washington.

New Orleans, Jan. 18. The programme of the secession of Louisiana has been agreed upon by the leading members of the Convention; also arrangements for perfecting a general convention of the seceding States, at Montgomery on the 20th of February, to devise a plan for a new Confederacy based upon the Federal Constitution to claim title and to ask recognition of European Powers.

Forts Jackson and St. Philip are to be largely reinforced for the defense of the mouths of the Mississippi. It is contemplated to fit out privateers in case coercion is attempted by the North.

Prospect of a Battle.—New York, Jan. 18. The correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser telegraphs that Mr. Iverson has received advices from Pensacola that Fort Pickens will be assaulted because it has been recently garrisoned by the Government.

New Orleans, Jan. 19. Major Chase telegraphed from Florida to the Mayor of this city for 2000 volunteers. The Mayor responded that the troops would be raised in forty-eight hours if Florida would equip them. The Governor of Florida sent word to dispatch the troops immediately, and the needful supplies would be forthcoming. The city is in a great state of excitement, and meetings are called for the enrollment of volunteers.

Three hundred are on their way from Mississippi for Pensacola. If Fort Pickens is not surrendered, great carnage will ensue.

The pilots of Pensacola have been notified not to bring in United States vessels, under the penalty of death. Intercepted Washington dispatches are in the hands of the State forces, which number nearly 1000, and twenty-five heavy guns

Milledgeville, Ga., Jan. 19. The secession ordinance declares the ordinance adopted in 1788, ratifying the Constitution of the United States, and all acts of the legislature relating thereto, abrogated; also that the Union between Georgia and the other States is dissolved, and that Georgia is in full possession of all the rights of sovereignty that appertain to an independent State.

Petersburg, Va., Jan. 20 One thousand kegs of powder and twenty thousand pounds of shot and shell from Tredegar works in Richmond, left this morning in a special train en route for Charleston, to the order of Governor Pickens.

Washington, Jan. 15 At a meeting of southern Congressmen last night, Mr. Corwin's report was denounced as utterly unacceptable, and Mr. Crittenden's proposition opposed by some who consider it now too late for reconciliation.

The free traders urge the establishment of a southern confederacy. Efforts are making to concentrate the vote of Pennsylvania with scattering votes of other northern States on Crittenden's proposition.

It is certain that Southern ministers and consuls have been preparing the way for commercial alliances with European powers for several years.

John Mitchell, the Irish agitator, is believed to be the representative at Paris of the secessionists.

A proposition is to be introduced into the Southern Congress to discontinue cotton planting two years, in order to fill Southern granaries with corn, and to insure an alliance with England

ITEMS.

Earthquake in South Carolina.—The Charleston Courier states that the shock of an earthquake was distinctly felt at Spartanburg, S. C, on the afternoon of the 3d instant, at 4 1-2 oclock. The motion was East and West and was so severe as to cause persons to run in the street to see if the houses were not falling. The shock was also felt in Atalanta, Geo. The Intelligencer of that city says:

Its range appeared to the East and West, or nearly so, and its continuance about ten seconds. The sky was clear and cloudless at the time, and the sun unusually brilliant. it was particularly noticed by those residing in solid stone buildings. The types rattled in the cases in our job office. It was not followed by the second slight shock, usual in tropical countries, nor have we heard the usual rumbling noise.

Terrorism at the South.—Private letters received in this city confirm the published accounts of the reign of terror in South Carolina. A family, intimately related to some of our friends in Boston, has sent its valuables from Charleston, closed their house in that city, and retired to the interior of South Carolina. As a matter of personal safety, the slaves on the plantation have been sent to Richmond and sold.

In another instance, a gentleman of northern birth and relationship, who was estimated to be worth $125,000, was compelled under threats of personal violence to subscribe $12,000 for the South Carolina State Loan,—an investment deemed "extra hazardous."

Business men and capitalists in the cotton States write that they are compelled to join in the popular current, and "hurrah with the crowd," in order to protect their property. They would gladly welcome the strong arm of the nation to arrest the tyranny of the mob, which now is in the ascendant.—B. Trans.

A Horrid Case of Destitution.—A horrid case of destitution came to the knowledge of the 4th Ward police on Monday afternoon. It is truly said, that one half of the world is entirely ignorant of how the other half live. Officer Rade, of the 4th Ward, proceeded to a tenement house, No, 32 Madison street, and on entering a room in the upper part of the building, a most horrid spectacle met his view. The lifeless body of a man named John Williams, about 33 years of age, was stretched upon the floor. From his appearance he had probably had the consumption, and being unable to procure the necessaries of life, had laid down and died from starvation and neglect. In one corner of the room, which was in the most wretched condition imaginable, lay the emaciated form of the wife of the deceased, on a mattrass of straw.

Near by her on some old blankets were three small children with small pox in its worst stages. They presented a most sickening sight. The poor woman had attended to them as long as she could stand upon her feet, when she herself sickened, and was compelled to lay down by them, and see them starve to death, which would have been the case had not the police heard of their misery and stepped in to their relief. The other occupants of the house shunned the apartments of Williams, fearful that they should contract the loathsome disease; and thus the unfortunate sufferers were entirely deserted—no one to help them, and unable to help themselves. The Health Wardens and Coroner were immediately notified of the case.—N. Y. Ex.

Independence of Canada.—The London News seems to think that the British North American colonies will soon be setting up for themselves as an independent government, and apparently gives encouragement to this design. "If the whole of North America," it remarks, "is not to form a part of the United States, the best means of giving strength to the people north of the St. Lawrence is to follow the example of the American statesmen, and to make a new United States.

It has been stated that the Duke of Newcastle, since his return home, has been engaged upon a scheme for the federation of these colonies; but whatever may be the policy of the British government in regard to them, it is at least questionable whether any serious opposition would be made to their assuming independence, or forming a union with the United States, more particularly if the Southern States should leave the Union.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

The Angel's Message.—Rev. 14: 6-7.

Tune.—"Brest."—Lyre, page 139.

Lo, an angel-voice from heaven
Rends the air with trumpet cries;
Round the earth with speed is driven,
Like the lightning, how it flies!
Hark! the message
Will the careless soul surprise!

Kindred people, tongues and nations,
Distant lands and surging seas;
Men of might, whate'er your stations,
Sons of pleasure, wealth and ease,
Time is dying!
Will ye revel on your lees?

Long the gospel trump has sounded,
Long has Mercy knelt to plead,
Gracious Love has much abounded
To supply your highest need;
But rejected,
God will measure out your meed!

Mine is one, a special mission,
Will you heed this last appeal,
Heed the final great commission
Which your destiny must seal?
Heed my gospel?
On it hangs your woe or weal!

Fear your God and give him glory,
For his judgment-hour has come!
Send abroad the fearful story,
Wake creation to her doom!
Sound the tidings,
Ere death's curtains all entomb.

Scorn to hear this solemn warning,
Quell all fears, my voice forget,
Say, "a better day is coming,"—
Still the glittering sword is whet!
It will sever
Every heart on evil set.

Heed ye not my revelations?
"Hour of judgment," hark! its knell,
Counting out the age of nations;
Ye may all its numbers tell!
Can you trifle?
Trifle on the verge of hell? S. H. B.

Chronological Prophecies.

BY REV. E. BICKERSTETH.

[Voice of the Prophets.]

The importance of these prophecies to us will be more clearly seen when it is known that these ten kingdoms are to be destroyed at the coming of Christ (Daniel 2: 44, 45; Rev. 17—19); and that it is during their continuance that he appears in the clouds to establish his own kingdom on their ruin (Dan. 2: 44; 7: 13, 14, and 27, 28; Rev. 19: 11); his being the sole kingdom then left (Dan. 7: 27, 28; Rev. 11: 15; 20—22).

The termination of the times of the Gentiles is also the more important, as it is so continually represented to us as the time of the separation of the wicked from faithful professors. Look in this view at the parables of the tares and the wheat; the net cast into the sea, the ten virgins, and the talents. See the striking statements of our Lord, Luke 17: 26—30, and of his apostles, 1 Thess. 4: 15—18; 5: 1—11; 2 Thess. 1: 5—10, and 2. The author was long satisfied to refer these to the general judgment after the millennium, but a more full consideration of Scripture leads him to think that the whole of the scriptural testimony can only be harmonized by applying them to a separation to take place previous to the millennium.

When shall these things take place? Who can answer this? The precise time is probably yet hidden from us; but the signs of the times are to be discerned, and the approach of the time may be expected to be known, as was the time of the first advent to Simeon, Anna, and others. Sir Isaac Newton, in his day, speaks of the time approaching, but adds (page 252), "the time is not yet come for understanding these prophecies perfectly, because the main revolution predicted in them is not yet come to pass." It has appeared to many that the French Revolution in 1793, is that main revolution which meets these anticipations.

On the COMMENCEMENT OF THE 1,260 YEARS, there are considerable differences of opinion amongst Protestant interpreters. The most common modern opinion (that of Mr. Cuninghame, Mr. Gisborne, Mr. Frere, and Mr. Irving,) gives A. D. 533, the date of Justinian's Edict in favor of the Pope; Mr. Faber's commencement is 604; Bishop Newton's, 727; and Lowman's, 756. In the year 584, mentioned by Mr. Brown, Pope Pelagius claimed infallibility, and was assisted in maintaining it by the troops of the empire, and then Rome was abandoned by the eastern emperor. This period would terminate in 1844. The Magdeburgh Centuriators name the year 606 as the time when Pope Vitalian would have service in the church in Latin.

The year of our Lord 608, exactly 75 years after 533, is remarkable by the Pantheon being dedicated afresh to the Virgin Mary and other saints; and the same, or following year, Mahomet's preaching began. This date of 75 years is important, as being the interval (divided into two parts 30 and 45 years) given by Daniel between the close of the 1,260 years, and the years of blessedness. On this view the first term of 30 years terminated in 1822. The events which distinguished the year 1822 were the declaration of independence by the Greeks, and the restoration thus of the seat of the third empire to political power. The gospel was then also again preached to the Jews in Jerusalem.

In the author's view the most probable of the periods is that of the year 533, ending in the French Revolution. It tended to shake this, while there was reason to think that part of Justinian's letter in favor of the Pope was a forgery of the Romanists, as stated by Comber in his Forgeries of the councils, p. 251. In the part which Comber admitted to be genuine there is much respect and honor given to the Pope; but not what could of itself be considered as putting the saints into his hands. But Mr. Cuninghame has, since this was written, investigated at some length the doubts thrown out by Comber, and has, I think, satisfactorily removed them. See his Preface to the Fulness of the Times. Page 11–22.*

There are other expressions in Justinian's Novels, making the Pope pre-eminent, to which Comber has not alluded, (Nov. 131, ch. 2.) "Sancimus sanctissimum senioris Romæ Papam PRIMUM ESSE OMNIUM SACERDOTUM." The passage in Daniel on which the commencement of the 1,260 years is chiefly founded, is thus translated by Wintle: "He shall speak words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and shall presume to alter appointed seasons and the law which shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the division of a time."—Dan. 7: 25. On which Mr. Wintle says, "Either the saints shall be subject to his power, or, as seems more agreeable to the versions, his influence shall prevail over the solemnities of the law. Possibly, both might be intended to be included in the usurpation."

From whatever dates we reckon, we cannot but consider that the time of the end is drawing near, and that awful events of judgment and of mercy are before us. The time of condemnation and salvation as concerns the professing Christian church at large, as well as each individual believer, is hastening. This should lead every Christian, on his own part, to special watchfulness; on the part of a perishing world, to the utmost exertions and prayer; and on the part of the church and the world to come, to peculiar hope and gladness of heart. When these evil times are passed away, the day of millennial glory dawns on the world (2 Peter 1: 19); or, in the words of St. Paul, speaking of the loving-kindness of God, in choosing his people out of the world, God's purpose is "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him."—Eph. 1: 10.

Connected with the subject of Chronological Prophecies is that of CYCLES and JUBILEES. It is striking that some chief Prophetical and Chronological dates should be Astronomical Cycles, as 1,260 and 2,300, and the difference between them 1,040, the most perfect cycle known. The eras of Jubilees may also yet be found much to illustrate the Chronology of Prophecy. This subject has been brought forward by Mr. Cuninghame in several of his latter publications with much application and extended research. Difficulties and mistakes in so intricate and perplexed a subject may be expected; but though pushed too far, there is valuable thought in these works, and the increasing importance of the subject fully justifies great attention to it.

The author, in his Sermon before the European Missionary Society, published in his Occasional Works, has thus stated his view of the COURSE of events yet to take place.

The beginning of the day of the Lord seems to be the breaking up of the visible Gentile kingdoms and churches, (Rev. 16: 19,) on account of their apostasy and wickedness, by a series of desolating judgments foretold distinctly in Daniel 2: 37, 35, and strengthened by the vision of the four beasts (Dan. 7,) as well as by many similar predictions. This is explicitly interpreted by the angel as pointing out Christ's kingdom breaking in pieces all the previous kingdoms and then standing forever. Here is the complete overthrow of Popery, Mohammedanism, Infidelity, and every opposing kingdom. This is the time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time.

These are some of the immensely important events which are connected with the coming of our Lord. Though the details of them may be more hid in obscurity, the events themselves are clearly revealed. And if these events are before the church and the world, they ought to be made known, that men everywhere may be awakened from their present slumber, and flee from the wrath to come.

(To be concluded.)

*The identifying of the Letters to the Pope with the civil law, and embodying his primacy in that law, was a remarkable way of accrediting the Pope, and making prominent his dignity. Gibbon says: "The vain titles of the victories of Justinian are crumbled in the dust, but the name of the legislator is inscribed on a fair and everlasting monument. Under his reign, and by his care, the civil jurisprudence was digested in the immortal works of the CODE, the PANDECTS and the INSTITUTIONS, the public reason of the Romans has been silently or studiously transfused into the domestic institutions of Europe, and the laws of Justinian still command the respect or obedience of independent nations." They did, indeed, soon after they were published, fall into neglect and oblivion till about the year 1130; when a copy of the digests was found at Amalfi in Italy; which accident concurring with the policy of the Roman Ecclesiastics suddenly gave new vogue and authority to the civil law." See Encyclopædia Brittanica, on "Law." The Novels are full of directions about Ecclesiastical matters, and the primacy over the Christian church through the Roman empire is given to the Pope in the body of them.

For the Crisis.

Encouragement.

Ye weary saints, lift up your heads,
Rejoice and shout aloud for joy;
Ye doubting souls, cast off your fears,
Dismiss your doubts which now annoy.

Ye weak and feeble in the faith,
Search earnestly the word of truth;
And seek for wisdom from above,
To guide you in the narrow path.

The pilgrimage with us is short,
The long expected day will dawn,
And burst upon our waiting eyes
The glorious resurrection morn.

Ah, yes! the glorious dawn of day
Is breaking in the eastern sky;
Prophetic tokens, thick'ning fast,
Proclaim that Christ, our King, is nigh.

Though now with sore temptation prest,
And troubles rise on every hand;
Soon our deliverance will come,
And in blest Paradise we'll stand.

Then let us gird the armor on,
Fresh courage for the onset take;
Supplied with grace and love divine,
We'll press the battle to the gate.

We will not fear though Satan rage,
Our hopes are fixed on Christ secure;
He is the way, the truth, the life,
His blood avails to make us pure.

And though in death, perchance, we fall,
We shall not have to slumber long;
For soon th' Archangel's trump will sound,
And we shall join the ransomed throng.

Then, robed in garments pure and white,
With palms of vict'ry in our hands,
We'll roam the fields of living green,
With those redeemed from every land.

We'll walk the streets all paved with gold,
Beneath a bright and cloudless sky;
We'll pluck the fruit in Eden's bowers,
And eat, and live, and never die.

Questions—the North.

What or who is the King of the North?

ANSWER.—He was the Babylonian, (Jer. 40: 2–10,) "by the river Euphrates," in Asia. He was Nebuchadnezzar, the King of the North. "I will take all the families of the North, and Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon, against this land," Judea.

The North is next occupied by the "confederacy of nations," that came against Babylon to punish the King of Babylon."—Jer. 50: 9. These were "the Kings of the Medes."—Isa. 13: 17; Jer. 51: 11.

"The North" next is the sphere of the Syrian King.—Dan. 11th chap. It was the successor of the Babylonian and Persian powers, "by the river Euphrates," in Asia.

"The North" was the sphere of the Gentile power, that unwarded and oppressed India from the North of Judea; but it always lay South of the Black and Caspian Seas. "The King of the South" was not all creation!—nor every power South of somewhere, as a wandering imagination may devise, but "Egypt" throughout.—Dan. 10th chap. The King of the South remains the same. It is Egypt all through to the end.

Hence "The North," located along "the Euphrates"—"The North," as the geographical position of Nimrod, Nebuchadnezzar and Antiochus, or Babylon, Persia and Syria, (the North part of the Grecian conquest in Asia; as opposed to Egypt, the South,)—"The North in Dan. 11th chap. is geographically the same! God has given the world no new geography.

"The North quarters," (Ezek. 38: 6,) is the territory of Togarmah! The Togarmah is one of the merchant peoples then trading with Tyre. Every map locates it South of the Black Sea, and on or near the source of the river Euphrates, in Asia. (See Mitchell's ancient Atlas.) Ezek. 27: 14—"The house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses."

NOTE.—This is historical testimony to the geography of that time and that people. The time was the age of Ezekiel. The people of "Togarmah of the North quarters" then traded with Tyre—the commercial metropolis on the Mediterranean.

The prophet Ezekiel argues thus with Jeremiah and Daniel, in locating "the North" in Asia. Rome rules this territory—"the fruit (or successor) of the stout heart of Assyria."—Isa. 10th chap. The Turks now occupy it, and all the people now occupying these territories "of the North quarters" are Mohammedans.

Well, who is the "wilful King?" (Dan. 11: 36.

ANS.—The last head of "the beast" (Rev. 17: 8)—the ten kings obey him. It is the fourth beast that bears the eleven horns.—Dan. 7: 7–11. It is the horn that waxed exceedingly great—the last symbol of Gentileism in Dan. 8: 9. This power is the desolater of the sanctuary and city of Israel.—Dan. 8: 11–19.

This symbol of Rome—"the fourth beast" —maintains its place in prophecy till "the consummation, and that which is determined shall be poured on the DESOLATOR"!—Dan. 9: 27.

Where is this scene laid?

ANS.—In Judea. This "head," or last form of Romanism, leads the "ten kings." Rev. 17: 11–14; Rev. 19: 11–21. The valley of Jehosophat—Joel 3: 12; Armageddon—Rev. 16: 19; the land of Israel—Zech. 14: 2–21; Ezek. 39: 21.

Does this embrace the prophetic earth?

ANS.—Rome did include the known world. Mohammedans occupy the sphere of eastern Rome—"the North" of the prophets—"the third part."

Have not the United States, Russia, and other modern nationalities, a place in prophecy?

ANS.—Yes, as "the ends of the earth—all nations," etc. But this cannot crowd out the Roman.

The Roman empire, under Vespasian and Titus, did destroy Jerusalem and the sanctuary, and this has been the principal Gentile power to perpetuate the desolation, and this desolator of Jerusalem is the subject of Divine judgment. Rome was "the desolator." The Eastern, "the third" party, the Roman empire, is now the last form of Gentileism in the "land of promise." Except as "the eighth head of the seven," shall lead "the ten kings" of the Roman earth as anti-Christ, to "war with the Lamb," among the judgments of the seven last plagues.—Rev. 16: 16; 17: 12–14; 19: 11–21; Dan. 11: 36–40.

REMARKS 1.—"The North" is located in Asia, along the Euphrates.

2. This land—the northern centre of Gentile oppression to Israel—was occupied by Israel's foes through near four thousand years. It is yet possessed by the Turks, their unrequiting and mortal enemies.

3. In the judgment, these foes of the whole Roman earth must be gathered into the land of Israel for punishment.

4. Other nations outside of this "oppressor"—modern nationalities, not named or numbered in the series of "four," not geographized nor chrolonogized in holy Scripture—will be embraced in the final issues of the "the great day."—Harbinger.

Selections.

The Waldenses and the Bible.

The Waldenses were more remarkable than any other people on the face of the earth for the large portions of Scripture which they committed to memory. Scripture was their all; and as the Jews treasured the manuscripts of the Old Testament, and carried them everywhere in their wanderings, often, as in the persecutions of Spain, winding them round their bodies to part with them only with their lives; so these Waldenses laid up rich portions alike from the Old and New Testaments in their hearts, so that they could not be taken from them. The preparation of their pastors for the ministry consisted in learning by heart the gospels of Matthew and John, all the epistles, and most of the writings of David, Solomon and the prophets.

It was reckoned, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, that a fair copy of the Bible, from a convent, would have cost more than sixty pounds ($300) of our money, for the writing only; and that a skilful scribe could not complete one in less than ten months. Very precious, therefore, was every single portion; and as their enemies seized upon and burnt every copy of which they could hear, societies of young persons were formed in the Vaudois valleys, every member of which was trusted to preserve in his memory a certain number of chapters; and when they assembled for worship, which they did with all possible precaution, from great distances, in some hidden mountain gorge, these new Levites, standing before the face of the minister, would recite, one after another, the chapters of the priceless book, for which they often paid the price of blood. Upon this church of the Book came down, for century after century, the heaviest vengeance of the church of Rome.

A striking instance of their devotion to the Bible is recorded of the inhabitants of two valleys, who, on the 21st of January, 1561, having been ordered to go to mass, or be subjected to fire, to sword, to cord, the Pope's three arguments, met to consider what should be done. In the midst of the kneeling people, the ministers pronounced these words: "We here promise, our hands on the Bible, and in the solemn presence of God, to maintain the Bible whole and alone, though it be at the peril of our lives, in order that we may transmit it to our children pure as we received it from our fathers." One hundred and thirty years afterwards, when they returned to the valleys from which they had been exiled, they met again on this very spot, the hill of Sibaond, and renewed the same oath to God and each other.—American Messenger.

"He Reads and I Pray."

Alice M—— had received a fine education. Her mind had been naturally and evenly developed. She had committed many select texts of Scripture to memory, and had enforced their lessons on her own heart. The Spirit of God took of the things of Christ and showed them unto her. She received the truth in the love of it. Her happiest hours were her seasons of communion with her Savior. The Sabbath was to her a heaven below.

Alice was but twenty-one years of age when she became the wife of a ship-master some four or five years older than herself. He was going to Europe in a new ship, and had a state-room fitted and furnished for her accommodation, and she consented to accompany him to sea. Their wedded life began upon the deep. Her husband was a stranger to the power of grace. He admired and loved his wife for her simple and earnest piety. On her return from her first voyage, she confided to a friend who had been her spiritual adviser, that they had lived a life of prayer even on shipboard. "Was he willing to pray with you?" asked the friend. "No," replied Alice, "but we had prayers together every day, and he seemed glad to have it so. He read and I prayed."

Is it strange that within two years that husband's soul was brought to the foot of the cross, and that the time came when she read and he prayed?

Let young wives who love the Lord Jesus, but are joined to partners who have not tasted the powers of the world to come, remember the woe which falls on the families that call not on the name of the Lord, and begin their married life, whether at home or abroad, as did young Alice, and the Lord may give them a like reward.

Sensitive People.

There is no help for being sensitive, but it ought to teach a person tenderness toward others. It does not, however. A great many people who pride themselves upon their "frankness," and always "speaking their mind," are the very last ones who will hear the same things from anybody else. They never are untrue to their convictions,—not they. They mean to be faithful and do their duty, and so they are always flaring your faults in the most offensive manner. But go to one of these people,—say to him, "Mr. Hetchel, I feel it my duty to tell you that your temper is not the sweetest, that your children behave bad at school, that they lie, pinch, play truant, and are dirty into the bargain;" —and lo! you have disturbed a whole wasp's nest of evil passion and probably your family and the Hetchels will be put in non-intercourse all the rest of your life. Speaking one's mind, with these people, means their privilege of sticking needles into every one's feelings they chose, whereas all the neighborhood must be sweet as summer toward them.—Monthly Religious Magazine.

Your Mission.

If you cannot on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet—
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay;
You can lend a hand to help them
When they launch their boats away.

If you are too weak to journey
Up the mountains steep and high,
You can stand within the valley
While the multitudes go by;
You can chant in happy measures
As they slowly pass along;
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready at command;
If you cannot toward the needy
Reach an ever open hand,
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep;
You can be a true disciple,
Sitting at the Savior's feet.

If you cannot, in the conflict,
Prove yourself a soldier true;
If, where the fire and smoke are thickest,
There's no work for you to do;
When the battle-field is silent,
You can go with careful tread,
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead.

If you cannot, in the harvest,
Garner up the richest sheaves,
Many a grain, both ripe and golden,
Which the careless reaper leaves;
You can glean among the briers,
Growing rank against the wall,
For it may be that their shadow
Hides the heaviest wheat of all.

Do not, then, stand idly waiting
For some greater work to do;
Fortune is a lazy goddess,
She will never come to you.
Go and toil in any vineyard,
Do not fear to do or dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere. —Anon.

Freaks of Memory.

A British captain, whilst giving orders on the quarter deck of his ship at the battle of the Nile, was struck on the head by a shot and immediately became senseless. He was taken home, and removed to Greenwich Hospital, where for fifteen months he evinced no sign of intelligence. He was then trepanned, and immediately upon the operation being performed, consciousness returned, and he immediately began busying himself to see the orders carried out that he had given during the battle fifteen months previously. The clock-work of the brain, unaware that it had stopped, upon being set going again, pointed to the exact minute at which it had left off.—Once a Week.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.—Do all in your power to teach your children self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle means to curb his temper. If he is sulky, charm him out of it by frank good humor. If indolent, accustom him to exertion, and train him so as perform even onerous duties with alacrity. If pride comes in to make obedience reluctant, subdue him by counsel or discipline. In short, give your children the habit of overcoming their besetting sins.

Garibaldi's Diet.

The following was first published in the native city of Garibaldi, the modern Cyrus:—

Some time before the campaign of Italy, a Mr. X—— had sent to Garibaldi, in his little island of Caprera, some garden seed—cabbage, salad, spinach, and the like. It is well known that in time of peace, Garibaldi devotes every moment to agriculture, with hunting and fishing.

"Well," said Mr. X., on meeting him, "did the seed turn out well?"

"Yes! yes! yes!" replied Garibaldi.

"You answer strangely," said X. "For you particularly I had selected the very best seed. Was I deceived?"

"No! I tell you."

"You conceal something; the seeds were good for nothing."

"The seeds were very good; but—but for salad one needs oil?"

"How? have you no oil?"

"And where would you have me steal it? But don't let that prevent you from making me a visit at Caprera. I do not promise that you will always find bread there, but there will always be something to eat. Fish and game rarely fail me, and in any event, there are always corn and beans there."

On another occasion, a friend reproached Garibaldi with his indifference in the matter of money.

"As for you," said he, "it matters not, for a trifle satisfies you; but you ought to think of your children."

Garibaldi smiled. "It is clear," he answered, "that you have not thought of the subject as much as I. Listen: either my children will love an expensive style of living, or they will know how, like me, to be contented with a little. In the first case, they do not deserve that I should trouble myself about them. In the second, they will always have enough."

He added, in a mingled tone of mystery and sport: "I will wager that you have never, like me, calculated how much a man needs in order to live. Now I have made that calculation. I make no account of tobacco—that is a poison—nor of wine—that does more hurt than good, especially in our climate. The most wholesome and nourishing aliment is soup. A little water and salt, some pulse or corn—this is all that is necessary to secure a man health and independence. This diet, freely used, costs eight cents a day. Who cannot earn eights a day? To what base humiliations do men submit to acquire a fortune, with which they might so easily dispense!"

For the Crisis.

The Water Crisis.

In the hydropathic treatment of disease, there is what is called a "crisis." After the patient has taken two or more baths per day, for several weeks,—the time varying according to the strength of the constitution,—he will pass into an acute attack of some form of disease. This is called a "crisis." This crisis is said to be the "effort of nature to throw off disease." We think it is the very reverse of this; namely, the effort of disease (helped on, as it may be, by some foreign power) to prostrate and throw off nature.

The application of water to the surface of the body, so far as to keep the skin in a healthy condition, is productive of health. All beyond that is positive injury. This is self-evident; for, if it be not so, then there is no line to be drawn between using water as here named for health, and soaking in it all the time. In the latter case it is admitted that it would injure. If so, where shall we draw the mark this side of that amount, and the quantity that will keep the surface in a healthy condition?

In time, two baths a day will so far exhaust the vitality of the system, however strong may be the constitution, as to prostrate nature; and then will come what is called a crisis. To recover from the crisis, that must be laid aside which has produced it; consequently, the bathing must be suspended. This gives an opportunity for nature, which has been weakened and reduced, to revive and come up. If there be vitality enough left in the system, this will be the result. After recovery, the bathing may be renewed, but it will be with the same result—another crisis. And so the process may be continued, and the person may have one crisis after another, as long as nature can hold out under the violent attacks of this injurious amount of washing above what nature can endure.

In this mode of treating diseases, a great amount of injury may be produced. The patient may be made to believe that the crisis is essential to his recovery, though it be often repeated. The game may be carried too far, so that the patient who has gone into this treatment with health slightly impaired, may have to die with consumption; or he may be kept under this treatment, encouraged to have one crisis after another, until he has had one too many, and be sent home, or to some other place, perfectly insane. Those who have recovered from disease, after this unnatural amount of bathing, have done so after the treatment was taken off. Probably in no chronic case should a person bathe more than once a day; and then no more water should be applied than is usually applied to the face and hands in common washing. In most cases, three times a week will be more conducive to health. In some cases, once a week will be sufficient; for, as before intimated, all the benefit that can be secured by the external application of water, is to keep the skin in a natural or healthy condition.

There is another way by which a crisis, so called, is produced. That is by wearing a wet bandage somewhere on the person, night and day for several weeks. This will so soften and irritate the skin in that locality as to produce a blister. When this is done, if there is humor in the system it will show itself more in that place, because the outlet is more free, and on the same principle that it will be seen in a fly blister. The difference between the two is, that one is a water blister and the other is a fly blister. In some cases, preference should be given to the fly crisis, if a crisis be needed, rather than to the other, for the reason that it is much quicker in its operation.

In curing diseases, two organs of the system claim special attention—the stomach and the skin. If these become impaired, poor health must follow. As these are restored to a healthy condition, recovery will follow. Hence proper regard should be had to the diet, exercise, and bathing. Food may be taken in too large quantities, and still be of a right quality. In this case, injury is done by over eating. This may produce an eating crisis, such as pain in the stomach, diarrhea, colic, etc. The same may be said of exercise; it may be too violent, and so bring on a crisis of pain and lameness in various degrees. And so in bathing; if it be done too much, a crisis will follow. The very fact that what is called a crisis is produced, is proof positive that what has produced it has been over applied.

So far as a simple crisis is concerned, the person may as well have an eating one as a bathing one, save in the latter case it may not be quite as injurious as in the former. The principle is the same. In either case the crisis should be avoided. In all cases, the treatment should be to assist nature to recover from the effect of disease, and not to help disease to overpower nature, and so weaken the system by exhausting the vitality, and producing what is fanatically called a crisis.

J. S. WHITE.

☞ No law of health is more important than this: "Johnny, my boy, stand erect; and even when in bed don't watch your toes all night with three pillows under your head. Don't allow your vital organs to double up in a heap, at any time."

Pathographic Dispatches.

Office of the Mouth—at one end of the line. Office of the Stomach—at the other end of it.

DISPATCH.

Inquiry—Mouth to the Stomach. "Are you ready for breakfast?"

Stomach—"Yes; what are you going to send?"

Mouth—"You will see. Prepare!"

The table-bell rings, Body hurries, drops into a chair, Mouth opens, and down goes as quickly as possible a cup of coffee, at a temperature of one hundred and forty-five degrees of Fahrenheit. It burns the whole œsophageal track as it passes it, and when it gets into the stomach, burns it, and the stomach contracts, and shrivels, and cringes, and finally screeches, and the Mouth says, "Halloo! what is the matter?"

Stomach—"Matter! Enough I should think. Do you not know that I cannot endure slush at one hundred and forty to one hundred and sixty degrees of heat?"

Mouth—"O, never mind! Here comes some beef steak, with hot fried potatoes, hot rolls and poor butter, some salad with vinegar, some buckwheat cakes and molasses. These will heal it."

Stomach—"Stop! What earthly use is there in sending these down here all at one time? They make a hodge-podge."

Mouth—"Here comes some more coffee."

Stomach—"Hold on! wait! Give me some water!"

Mouth—Water! when you can get coffee? You must be crazy; water has no nourishment in it. One wants water only when one is dry."

Stomach—"I am thirsty! Give me some water!"

Mouth—"Cannot do it—they haven't any water up here. If they have it is hot, and I doubt if they have any of that. Persons do not like water; and you, O Stomach, are eccentric, so stop complaining and get ready to take some food—'take the good the gods provide you, and be content. Are you ready? I am in a hurry. Up here 'time is money.' I have to furnish you with material out of which strength is to be gotten for the body's use to-day, and I have ten minutes allowed me for this purpose. Now the after part is your look out, not mine. Take notice! Are you ready? Here comes apple pie, fried chicken, tripe, tomato catsup, boiled ham, minute pudding, corn bread and cucumbers, pepper, salt, gravy, mince pie, another cup of coffee, so look out!"

Stomach—"Look out! O, murder! What am I to do? Do! I must grind away at it like a horse in a bark-mill, till I am worn out. Under such a condition of things as this, I shall break down in the fourth part of the time, which I might work, ☞ then the Mouth, and for that matter the heart too, will be still, and I shall be at peace.—Laws of Life.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..............1.00
For a single copy 3 months..............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months..15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months...22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or nearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The Angel's Message.—Rev. 14: 6-7.

Tune—"Bemer."—Lyre, page 186.

Lo, an angel-voice from heaven
Rends the air with trumpet cries;
Round the earth with speed is driven,
Like the lightning, how it flies!
Hark! the message
Will the careless soul surprise!

Kindred people, tongues and nations,
Distant lands and surging seas;
Men of might, whate'er your stations,
Sons of pleasure, wealth and ease,
Time is dying!
Will ye revel on your lees?

Long the gospel trump has sounded,
Long has Mercy knelt to plead,
Gracious Love has much abounded
To supply your highest need;
But rejected,
God will measure out your meed!

Mine is one, a special mission,
Will you heed this last appeal,
Heed the final great commission
Which your destiny must seal?
Heed my gospel?
On it hangs your woe or weal!

Fear your God and give him glory,
For his judgment-hour has come!
Send abroad the fearful story,
Wake creation to her doom!
Sound the tidings,
Ere death's curtains all entomb.

Scorn to hear this solemn warning,
Quell all fears, my voice forget,
Say, "a better day is coming,"—
Still the glittering sword is whet!
It will sever
Every heart on evil set.

Heed ye not my revelations?
"Hour of judgment," hark! its knell,
Counting out the age of nations;
Ye may all its numbers tell!
Can you trifle?
Trifle on the verge of hell? S. H. B.

Chronological Prophecies.

BY REV. E. BICKERSTETH.

[Voice of the Prophets.]

The importance of these prophecies to us will be more clearly seen when it is known that these ten kingdoms are to be destroyed at the coming of Christ (Daniel 2: 44, 45; Rev. 17—19); and that it is during their continuance that he appears in the clouds to establish his own kingdom on their ruin (Dan. 2: 44; 7: 13, 14, and 27, 28; Rev. 19: 11); his being the sole kingdom then left (Dan. 7: 27, 28; Rev. 11: 15; 20—22).

The termination of the times of the Gentiles is also the more important, as it is so continually represented to us as the time of the separation of the wicked from faithful professors. Look in this view at the parables of the tares and the wheat; the net cast into the sea, the ten virgins, and the talents. See the striking statements of our Lord, Luke 17: 26—30, and of his apostles, 1 Thess. 4: 15—18; 5: 1—11; 2 Thess. 1: 5—10, and 2. The author was long satisfied to refer these to the general judgment after the millennium, but a more full consideration of Scripture leads him to think that the whole of the scriptural testimony can only be harmonized by applying them to a separation to take place previous to the millennium.

When shall these things take place? Who can answer this? The precise time is probably yet hidden from us; but the signs of the times are to be discerned, and the approach of the time may be expected to be known, as was the time of the first advent to Simeon, Anna, and others. Sir Isaac Newton, in his day, speaks of the time approaching, but adds (page 252), "the time is not yet come for understanding these prophecies perfectly, because the main revolution predicted in them is not yet come to pass." It has appeared to many that the French Revolution in 1793, is that main revolution which meets these anticipations.

On the COMMENCEMENT OF THE 1,260 YEARS, there are considerable differences of opinion amongst Protestant interpreters. The most common modern opinion (that of Mr. Cuninghame, Mr. Gisborne, Mr. Frere, and Mr. Irving,) gives A. D. 533, the date of Justinian's Edict in favor of the Pope; Mr. Faber's commencement is 604; Bishop Newton's, 727; and Lowman's, 756. In the year 1848, [illegible] Mr. Brown, Pope Pelagius claimed infallibility, [illegible] the time when Pope Vitalian would have service in the church in Latin.

The year of our Lord 608, exactly 75 years after 533, is remarkable by the Pantheon being dedicated afresh to the Virgin Mary and other saints; and the same, or following year, Mahomet's preaching began. This date of 75 years is important, as being the interval (divided into two parts 30 and 45 years) given by Daniel between the close of the 1,260 years, and the years of blessedness. On this view the first term of 30 years terminated in 1822. The events which distinguished the year 1822 were the declaration of independence by the Greeks, and the restoration thus of the seat of the third empire to political power. The gospel was then also again preached to the Jews in Jerusalem.

In the author's view the most probable of the periods is that of the year 533, ending in the French Revolution. It tended to shake this, while there was reason to think that part of Justinian's letter in favor of the Pope was a forgery of the Romanists, as stated by Comber in his Forgeries of the councils, p. 251. In the part which Comber admitted to be genuine there is much respect and honor given to the Pope; but not what could of itself be considered as putting the saints into his hands. But Mr. Cuninghame has, since this was written, investigated at some length the doubts thrown out by Comber, and has, I think, satisfactorily removed them. See his Preface to the Fulness of the Times. Page 11–22.*

There are other expressions in Justinian's Novels, making the Pope pre-eminent, to which Comber has not alluded, (Nov. 131, ch. 2.) "Sancimus sanctissimum senioris Romæ Papam PRIMUM ESSE OMNIUM SACERDOTUM." The passage in Daniel on which the commencement of the 1,260 years is chiefly founded, is thus translated by Wintle: "He shall speak words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and shall presume to alter appointed seasons and the law which shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the division of a time." —Dan. 7: 25. On which Mr. Wintle says, "Either the saints shall be subject to his power, or, as seems more agreeable to the versions, his influence shall prevail over the solemnities of the law. Possibly, both might be intended to be included in the usurpation."

From whatever dates we reckon, we cannot but consider that the time of the end is drawing near, and that awful events of judgment and of mercy are before us. The time of condemnation and salvation as concerns the professing Christian church at large, as well as each individual believer, is hastening. This should lead every Christian, on his own part, to special watchfulness; on the part of a perishing world, to the utmost exertions and prayer; and on the part of the church and the world to come, to peculiar hope and gladness of heart. When these evil times are passed away, the day of millennial glory dawns on the world (2 Peter 1: 19); or, in the words of St. Paul, speaking of the loving-kindness of God, in choosing his people out of the world, God's purpose is "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him."—Eph. 1: 10.

Connected with the subject of Chronological Prophecies is that of CYCLES and JUBILEES. It is striking that some chief Prophetical and Chronological dates should be Astronomical Cycles, as 1,260 and 2,300, and the difference between them 1,040, the most perfect cycle known. The eras of Jubilees may also yet be found much to illustrate the Chronology of Prophecy. This subject has been brought forward by Mr. Cuninghame in several of his latter publications with much application and extended research. Difficulties and mistakes in so intricate and perplexed a subject may be expected; but though pushed too far, there is valuable thought in these works, and the increasing importance of the subject fully justifies great attention to it.

The author, in his Sermon before the European Missionary Society, published in his Occasional Works, has thus stated his view of the COURSE of events yet to take place.

The beginning of the day of the Lord seems to be the breaking up of the visible Gentile kingdoms and churches, (Rev. 16: 19,) on account of their apostasy and wickedness, by a series of desolating judgments foretold distinctly in Daniel 2: 37, 35, and strengthened by the vision of the four beasts (Dan. 7,) as well as by many similar predictions. This is explicitly interpreted by the angel as pointing out Christ's kingdom breaking in pieces all the previous kingdoms and then standing forever. Here is the complete overthrow of Popery, Mohammedanism, Infidelity, and every opposing kingdom. This is the time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time.

These are some of the immensely important events which are connected with the coming of our Lord. Though the details of them may be more hid in obscurity, the events themselves are clearly revealed. And if these events are before the church and the world, they ought to be made known, that men everywhere may be awakened from their present slumber, and flee from the wrath to come.

(To be concluded.)

*The identifying of the Letters to the Pope with the civil law, and embodying his primacy in that law, was a remarkable way of accrediting the Pope, and making prominent his dignity. Gibbon says: "The vain titles of the victories of Justinian are crumbled in the dust, but the name of the legislator is inscribed on a fair and everlasting monument." Under his reign, and by his care, the civil jurisprudence was digested in the immortal works of the CODE, the PANDECTS and the INSTITUTIONS, the public reason of the Romans has been silently or studiously transfused into the domestic institutions of Europe, and the laws of Justinian still command the respect or obedience of independent nations." They did, indeed, soon after they were published, fall into neglect and oblivion about the year 1130; when a copy of the digests was found at Amalfi in Italy; which accident concurring with the policy of the Roman ecclesiastics, [illegible] the body of them.

For the Crisis.

Encouragement.

Ye weary saints, lift up your heads,
Rejoice and shout aloud for joy;
Ye doubting souls, cast off your fears,
Dismiss your doubts which now annoy.

Ye weak and feeble in the faith,
Search earnestly the word of truth;
And seek for wisdom from above,
To guide you in the narrow path.

The pilgrimage with us is short,
The long expected day will dawn,
And burst upon our waiting eyes
The glorious resurrection morn.

Ah, yes! the glorious dawn of day
Is breaking in the eastern sky;
Prophetic tokens, thick'ning fast,
Proclaim that Christ, our King, is nigh.

Though now with sore temptation prest,
And troubles rise on every hand;
Soon our deliverance will come,
And in blest Paradise we'll stand.

Then let us gird the armor on,
Fresh courage for the onset take;
Supplied with grace and love divine,
We'll press the battle to the gate.

We will not fear though Satan rage,
Our hopes are fixed on Christ secure;
He is the way, the truth, the life,
His blood avails to make us pure.

And though in death, perchance, we fall,
We shall not have to slumber long;
For soon th' Archangel's trump will sound,
And we shall join the ransomed throng.

Then, robed in garments pure and white,
With palms of vict'ry in our hands,
We'll roam the fields of living green,
With those redeemed from every land.

We'll walk the streets all paved with gold,
Beneath a bright and cloudless sky;
We'll pluck the fruit in Eden's bowers,
And eat, and live, and never die.

Questions—the North.

What or who is the King of the North?

ANSWER.—He was the Babylonian, (Jer. 40: 2–10,) "by the river Euphrates," in Asia. He was Nebuchadnezzar, the King of the North. "I will take all the families of the North, and Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon, against this land," Judea.

The North is next occupied by the "confederacy of nations," that came against Babylon to punish the King of Babylon." —Jer. 50: 9. These were "the Kings of the Medes."—Isa. 13: 17; Jer. 51: 11.

"The North" next is the sphere of the Syrian King.—Dan. 11th chap. It was the successor of the Babylonian and Persian powers, "by the river Euphrates," in Asia.

"The North" was the sphere of the Gentile power, that unwarded and oppressed India from the North of Judea; but it always lay South of the Black and Caspian Seas. "The King of the South" was not all creation!—nor every power South of somewhere, as a wandering imagination may devise, but "Egypt" throughout.—Dan. 10th chap. The King of the South remains the same. It is Egypt all through to the end.

Hence "The North," located along "the Euphrates"—"The North," as the geographical position of Nimrod, Nebuchadnezzar and Antiochus, or Babylon, Persia and Syria, (the North part of the Grecian conquest in Asia; as opposed to Egypt, the South,)—"The North in Dan. 11th chap. is geographically the same! God has given the world no new geography.

"The North quarters," (Ezek. 38: 6,) is the territory of Togarmah! The Togarmah is one of the merchant peoples then trading with Tyre. Every map locates it South of the Black Sea, and on or near the source of the river Euphrates, in Asia. (See Mitchell's ancient Atlas.) Ezek. 27: 14—"The house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses."

NOTE.—This is historical testimony to the geography of that time and that people. The time was the age of Ezekiel. The people of "Togarmah of the North quarters" then traded with Tyre—the commercial metropolis on the Mediterranean.

The prophet Ezekiel argues thus with Jeremiah and Daniel, in locating "the North" in Asia. Rome rules this territory—"the fruit (or successor) of the stout heart of Assyria."—Isa. 10th chap. The Turks now occupy it, and all the people now occupying these territories "of the North quarters" are Mohammedans.

Well, who is the "wilful King"? (Dan. 11: 36.) ANSWER.—The last head—of "the beast" (Rev. 17: 8)—the ten kings obey him. It is the fourth beast that bears the eleven horns.—Dan. 7: 7–11. It is the horn that waxed exceedingly great—the last symbol of Gentilism in Dan. 8: 9. This power is the desolater of the sanctuary and city of Israel.—Dan. 8: 11–19.

This symbol of Rome—"the fourth beast"—maintains its place in prophecy till "the consummation, and that which is determined shall be poured on the DESOLATOR"! —Dan. 9: 27.

Where is this scene laid?

ANS.—In Judea. This "head," or last form of Romanism, leads the "ten kings." Rev. 17: 11–14; Rev. 19: 11–21. The valley of Jehosophat—Joel 3: 12; Armageddon—Rev. 16: 19; the land of Israel—Zech. 14: 2–21; Ezek. 39: 21.

Does this embrace the prophetic earth?

ANS.—Rome did include the known world. Mohammedans occupy the sphere of eastern Rome—"the North" of the prophets—"the third part."

Have not the United States, Russia, and other modern nationalities, a place in prophecy?

ANS.—Yes, as "the ends of the earth—all nations," etc. But this cannot crowd out the Roman.

The Roman empire, under Vespasian and Titus, did destroy Jerusalem and the sanctuary, and this has been the principal Gentile power to perpetuate the desolation, and this desolator of Jerusalem is the subject of Divine judgment. Rome was "the desolator." The Eastern, "the third" party, the Roman empire, is now the last form of Gentileism in the "land of promise." Except as "the eighth head of the seven," shall lead "the ten kings" of the Roman earth as anti-Christ, to "war with the Lamb," among the judgments of the seven last plagues.—Rev. 16: 16; 17: 12–14; 19: 11–21; Dan. 11: 36–40.

REMARKS 1.—"The North" is located in Asia, along the Euphrates.

2. This land—the northern centre of Gentile oppression to Israel—was occupied by Israel's foes through near four thousand years. It is yet possessed by the Turks, their unrequiting and mortal enemies.

3. In the judgment, these foes of the whole Roman earth must be gathered into the land of Israel for punishment.

4. Other nations outside of this "oppressor"—modern nationalities, not named or numbered in the series of "four," not geographized nor chrolonogized in holy Scripture—will be embraced in the final issues of the "the great day."—Harbinger.

Selections.

The Waldenses and the Bible.

The Waldenses were more remarkable than any other people on the face of the earth for the large portions of Scripture which they committed to memory. Scripture was their all; and as the Jews treasured the manuscripts of the Old Testament, and carried them everywhere in their wanderings, often, as in the persecutions of Spain, winding them round their bodies to part with them only with their lives; so these Waldenses laid up rich portions alike from the Old and New Testaments in their hearts, so that they could not be taken from them. The preparation of their pastors for the ministry consisted in learning by heart the gospels of Matthew and John, all the epistles, and most of the writings of David, Solomon and the prophets.

It was reckoned, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, that a fair copy of the Bible, from a convent, would have cost more than sixty pounds ($300) of our money, for the writing only; and that a skilful scribe could not complete one in less than ten months. Very precious, therefore, was every single portion; and as their enemies seized upon and burnt every copy of which they could hear, societies of young persons were formed in the Vaudois valleys, every member of which was trusted to preserve in his memory a certain number of chapters; and when they assembled for worship, which they did with all possible precaution, from great distances, in some hidden mountain gorge, these new Levites, standing before the face of the minister, would recite, one after another, the chapters of the priceless book, for which they often paid the price of blood. Upon this church of the Book came down, for century after century, the heaviest vengeance of the church of Rome.

A striking instance of their devotion to the Bible is recorded of the inhabitants of two valleys, who, on the 21st of January, 1561, having been ordered to go to mass, or be subjected to fire, to sword, to cord, the Pope's three arguments, met to consider what should be done. In the midst of the kneeling people, the ministers pronounced these words: "We here promise, our hands on the Bible, and in the solemn presence of God, to maintain the Bible whole and alone, though it be at the peril of our lives, in order that we may transmit it to our children pure as we received it from our fathers." One hundred and thirty years afterwards, when they returned to the valleys from which they had been exiled, they met again on this very spot, the hill of Sibaond, and renewed the same oath to God and each other.—American Messenger.

"He Reads and I Pray."

Alice M—— had received a fine education. Her mind had been naturally and evenly developed. She had committed many select texts of Scripture to memory, and had enforced their lessons on her own heart. The Spirit of God took of the things of Christ and showed them unto her. She received the truth in the love of it. Her happiest hours were her seasons of communion with her Savior. The Sabbath was to her a heaven below.

Alice was but twenty-one years of age when she became the wife of a ship-master some four or five years older than herself. He was going to Europe in a new ship, and had a state-room fitted and furnished for her accommodation, and she consented to accompany him to sea. Their wedded life began upon the deep. Her husband was a stranger to the power of grace. He [illegible] loved his wife for her simple and earnest piety. On her return from her first voyage, she confided to a friend who had been her spiritual adviser, that they had lived a life of prayer even on shipboard. "Was he willing to pray with you?" asked the friend. "No," replied Alice, "but we had prayers together every day, and he seemed glad to have it so. He read and I prayed."

Is it strange that within two years that husband's soul was brought to the foot of the cross, and that the time came when she read and he prayed?

Let young wives who love the Lord Jesus, but are joined to partners who have not tasted the powers of the world to come, remember the woe which falls on the families that call not on the name of the Lord, and begin their married life, whether at home or abroad, as did young Alice, and the Lord may give them a like reward.

Sensitive People.

There is no help for being sensitive, but it ought to teach a person tenderness toward others. It does not, however. A great many people who pride themselves upon their "frankness," and always "speaking their mind," are the very last ones who will hear the same things from anybody else. They never are untrue to their convictions,—not they. They mean to be faithful and do their duty, and so they are always flaring your faults in the most offensive manner. But go to one of these people,—say to him, "Mr. Hetchel, I feel it my duty to tell you that your temper is not the sweetest, that your children behave bad at school, that they lie, pinch, play truant, and are dirty into the bargain;" —and lo! you have disturbed a whole wasp's nest of evil passion and probably your family and the Hetchels will be put in non-intercourse all the rest of your life. Speaking one's mind, with these people, means their privilege of sticking needles into every one's feelings they chose, whereas all the neighborhood must be sweet as summer toward them.—Monthly Religious Magazine.

Your Mission.

If you cannot on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet—
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay;
You can lend a hand to help them
When they launch their boats away.

If you are too weak to journey
Up the mountains steep and high,
You can stand within the valley
While the multitudes go by;
You can chant in happy measures
As they slowly pass along;
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready at command;
If you cannot toward the needy
Reach an ever open hand,
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep;
You can be a true disciple,
Sitting at the Savior's feet.

If you cannot, in the conflict,
Prove yourself a soldier true;
If, where the fire and smoke are thickest,
There's no work for you to do;
When the battle-field is silent,
You can go with careful tread,
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead.

If you cannot, in the harvest,
Garner up the richest sheaves,
Many a grain, both ripe and golden,
Which the careless reaper leaves;
You can glean among the briers,
Growing rank against the wall,
For it may be that their shadow
Hides the heaviest wheat of all.

Do not, then, stand idly waiting
For some greater work to do;
Fortune is a lazy goddess,
She will never come to you.
Go and toil in any vineyard,
Do not fear to do or dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere. —Anon.

Freaks of Memory.

A British captain, whilst giving orders on the quarter deck of his ship at the battle of the Nile, was struck on the head by a shot and immediately became senseless. He was taken home, and removed to Greenwich Hospital, where for fifteen months he evinced no sign of intelligence. He was then trepanned, and immediately upon the operation being performed, consciousness returned, and he immediately began busying himself to see the orders carried out that he had given during the battle fifteen months previously. The clock-work of the brain, unaware that it had stopped, upon being set going again, pointed to the exact minute at which it had left off.—Once a Week.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.—Do all in your power to teach your children self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle means to curb his temper. If he is sulky, charm him out of it by frank good humor. If indolent, accustom him to exertion, and train him so as perform even onerous duties with alacrity. If pride comes in to make obedience reluctant, subdue him by counsel or discipline. In short, give your children the habit of overcoming their besetting sins.

Garibaldi's Diet.

The following was first published in the native city of Garibaldi, the modern Cyrus:

Some time before the campaign of Italy, a Mr. X—— had sent to Garibaldi, in his little island of Caprera, some garden seeds—cabbages, salad, spinach, and the like. It is well known that [illegible] Garibaldi devotes every moment to agriculture, [illegible]

"Well," said Mr. X., on meeting him, "did the seed turn out well?"

"Yes! yes! yes!" replied Garibaldi.

"You answer strangely," said X. "For you particularly I had selected the very best seed. Was I deceived?"

"No! I tell you."

"You conceal something; the seeds were good for nothing."

"The seeds were very good; but—but for salad one needs oil?"

"How? have you no oil?"

"And where would you have me steal it? But don't let that prevent you from making me a visit at Caprera. I do not promise that you will always find bread there, but there will always be something to eat. Fish and game rarely fail me, and in any event, there are always corn and beans there."

On another occasion, a friend reproached Garibaldi with his indifference in the matter of money.

"As for you," said he, "it matters not, for a trifle satisfies you; but you ought to think of your children."

Garibaldi smiled. "It is clear," he answered, "that you have not thought of the subject as much as I. Listen: either my children will love an expensive style of living, or they will know how, like me, to be contented with a little. In the first case, they do not deserve that I should trouble myself about them. In the second, they will always have enough."

He added, in a mingled tone of mystery and sport: "I will wager that you have never, like me, calculated how much a man needs in order to live. Now I have made that calculation. I make no account of tobacco—that is a poison—nor of wine—that does more hurt than good, especially in our climate. The most wholesome and nourishing aliment is soup. A little water and salt, some pulse or corn—this is all that is necessary to secure a man health and independence. This diet, freely used, costs eight cents a day. Who cannot earn eights a day? To what base humiliations do men submit to acquire a fortune, with which they might so easily dispense!"

For the Crisis.

The Water Crisis.

In the hydropathic treatment of disease, there is what is called a "crisis." After the patient has taken two or more baths per day, for several weeks,—the time varying according to the strength of the constitution,—he will pass into an acute attack of some form of disease. This is called a "crisis." This crisis is said to be the "effort of nature to throw off disease." We think it is the very reverse of this; namely, the effort of disease (helped on, as it may be, by some foreign power) to prostrate and throw off nature.

The application of water to the surface of the body, so far as to keep the skin in a healthy condition, is productive of health. All beyond that is positive injury. This is self-evident; for, if it be not so, then there is no line to be drawn between using water as here named for health, and soaking in it all the time. In the latter case it is admitted that it would injure. If so, where shall we draw the mark this side of that amount, and the quantity that will keep the surface in a healthy condition?

In time, two baths a day will so far exhaust the vitality of the system, however strong may be the constitution, as to prostrate nature; and then will come what is called a crisis. To recover from the crisis, that must be laid aside which has produced it; consequently, the bathing must be suspended. This gives an opportunity for nature, which has been weakened and reduced, to revive and come up. If there be vitality enough left in the system, this will be the result. After recovery, the bathing may be renewed, but it will be with the same result—another crisis. And so the process may be continued, and the person may have one crisis after another, as long as nature can hold out under the violent attacks of this injurious amount of washing above what nature can endure.

In this mode of treating diseases, a great amount of injury may be produced. The patient may be made to believe that the crisis is essential to his recovery, though it be often repeated. The game may be carried too far, so that the patient who has gone into this treatment with health slightly impaired, may have to die with consumption; or he may be kept under this treatment, encouraged to have one crisis after another, until he has had one too many, and be sent home, or to some other place, perfectly insane. Those who have recovered from disease, after this unnatural amount of bathing, have done so after the treatment was taken off. Probably in no chronic case should a person bathe more than once a day; and then no more water should be applied than is usually applied to the face and hands in common washing. In most cases, three times a week will be more conducive to health. In some cases, once a week will be sufficient; for, as before intimated, all the benefit that can be secured by the external application of water, is to keep the skin in a natural or healthy condition.

There is another way by which a crisis, so called, is produced. That is by wearing a wet bandage somewhere on the person, night and day for several weeks. This will so soften and irritate the skin in that locality as to produce a blister. When this is done, if there is humor in the system it will show itself more in that place, because the outlet is more free, and on the same principle that it will be seen in a fly blister. [illegible] preference should be given to the [illegible] rather than to the other, for the reason that it is much quicker in its operation.

In curing disease, two organs of the system claim special attention—the stomach and the skin. If these become impaired, poor health must follow. As these are restored to a healthy condition, recovery will follow. Hence proper regard should be had to the diet, exercise, and bathing. Food may be taken in too large quantities, and still be of a right quality. In this case, injury is done by over eating. This may produce an eating crisis, such as pain in the stomach, diarrhea, colic, etc. The same may be said of exercise; it may be too violent, and so bring on a crisis of pain and lameness in various degrees. And so in bathing; if it be done too much, a crisis will follow. The very fact that what is called a crisis is produced, is proof positive that what has produced it has been over applied.

So far as a simple crisis is concerned, the person may as well have an eating one as a bathing one, save in the latter case it may not be quite as injurious as in the former. The principle is the same. In either case the crisis should be avoided. In all cases, the treatment should be to assist nature to recover from the effect of disease, and not to help disease to overpower nature, and so weaken the system by exhausting the vitality, and producing what is fanatically called a crisis.

DISPATCH.

Inquiry—Mouth to the Stomach. "Are you ready for breakfast?"

Stomach—"Yes; what are you going to send?"

Mouth—"You will see. Prepare!"

The table-bell rings, Body hurries, drops into a chair, Mouth opens, and down goes as quickly as possible a cup of coffee, at a temperature of one hundred and forty-five degrees of Fahrenheit. It burns the whole œsophageal track as it passes it, and when it gets into the stomach, burns it, and the stomach contracts, and shrivels, and cringes, and finally screeches, and the Mouth says, "Halloo! what is the matter?"

Stomach—"Matter! Enough I should think. Do you not know that I cannot endure slush at one hundred and forty to one hundred and sixty degrees of heat?"

Mouth—"O, never mind! Here comes some beef steak, with hot fried potatoes, hot rolls and poor butter, some salad with vinegar, some buckwheat cakes and molasses. These will heal it."

Stomach—"Stop! What earthly use is there in sending these down here all at one time? They make a hodge-podge."

Mouth—"Here comes some more coffee."

Stomach—"Hold on! wait! Give me some water!"

Mouth—Water! when you can get coffee? You must be crazy; water has no nourishment in it. One wants water only when one is dry."

Stomach—"I am thirsty! Give me some water!"

Mouth—"Cannot do it—they haven't any water up here. If they have it is hot, and I doubt if they have any of that. Persons do not like water; and you, O Stomach, are eccentric, so stop complaining and get ready to take some food—'take the good the gods provide you, and be content. Are you ready? I am in a hurry. Up here 'time is money.' I have to furnish you with material out of which strength is to be gotten for the body's use to-day, and I have ten minutes allowed me for this purpose. Now the after part is your look out, not mine. Take notice! Are you ready? Here comes apple pie, fried chicken, tripe, tomato catsup, boiled ham, minute pudding, corn bread and cucumbers, pepper, salt, gravy, mince pie, another cup of coffee, so look out!"

Stomach—"Look out! O, murder! What am I to do? Do! I must grind away at it like a horse in a bark-mill, till I am worn out. Under such a condition of things as this, I shall break down in the fourth part of the time, which I might work, ☞ then the Mouth, and for that matter the heart too, will be still, and I shall be at peace.—Laws of Life.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

For the Crisis.

"Come Quickly."

The word has gone forth, "Lo! quickly I come,"
And soon may we hope to inherit our home;
With gladness we wait for the Savior from heaven,
To whom lasting praises and honors be given.

"Come quickly, O Lord!" and the murmur is low,
As the sufferer's spirit makes ready to go;
And another goes down to the dreary cold grave,
To join in the chorus, "Come, Jesus, and save!"

"Come quickly!" cries Earth, for long has her breast
Been burdened with pilgrims laid away there to rest;
And the millions gone down to the depths of the sea,
Are echoing the prayer, dear Redeemer, to thee.

The flowers that fade, the leaves that decay,
Are making the cry just as prayerful as they;
All creation cries "COME!" then tarry no more,
Let thy presence illume from shore unto shore.

And Jesus will come; even now is he near;
Soon, soon to our rescue the Lord will appear;
While loud allelulas sound sweetly on earth,
The dying and dead share an immortal birth.

Qualifications for the Christian Service.

A Sermon preached by H. L. Hastings, in New Market Hall, Providence, R. I., Jan. 6th, 1861, Sunday morning.

REPORTED BY E. P. WOODWARD.

"Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."—Eph. 3: 8.

The apostle Paul speaks of his work in proclaiming "the unsearchable riches of Christ" as a privilege rather than a duty; as a grace or favor bestowed rather than a requirement made. But it is a grace not conferred upon all. For though the vessels which bear the name of Christ are but of earth, cheap, frail and valueless without the treasure they contain, yet they must be purged and prepared ere they become vessels unto honor, fitted for the Master's use. And if we would faithfully serve the Lord who has called us, we should learn what are those traits of character which peculiarly fit us to receive this grace, even to proclaim among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

There can be no greater honor conferred on mortal man than that he stand as the messenger of God, as the servant of the Most High, as the ambassador of Jesus Christ to the world. And this, too, without respect to his social position or his talents. And so there can be no greater honor put on any people whoever they may be, than to be made the messengers of God to mankind, and witnesses for God before the world. Compared with this all other dignities sink and dwindle into insignificance; all emoluments, all earthly grandeurs, seem but emptiness. If a man is really a servant of God, and if to any man is given this privilege, this honor, this trust, to declare among the nations "the unsearchable riches of Christ"; if any man has this work imparted to him, no matter how feeble or weak he is, it confers honor which no earthly power can bestow.

To be made the bearer of dispatches to a foreign government, is something of an honor, for it indicates a kind of confidence placed in the man, making him the representative of a great Power. To be dispatched as a Minister to a foreign court is an honor, provided the man is sent by those that are honorable; provided he goes out accredited by some government that is a government, not the mere figment of a thing, that grows up or "secedes," and then starts off in a kind of self-glorifying spirit, and creates all sorts of offices, and finds all sorts of men to fill them. But if the government hath in it strength, dignity and power, then the man who goes out as its Minister and Representative, partakes of all its honor,—is the foreign representative of all the honor and dignity at home.

Now I propose to talk to you a little while this morning, about the qualifications which are necessary, which are important, which are indispensable in any man, or in any company of men or women, who would faithfully represent Christ to the world, and thus have the honor and the blessing of being declarers of his unsearchable riches. For it is not every disciple that in his present position can do this work. Not every person is fitted to do it. And there are many persons who may have some of the qualifications needful, and, who yet are not eminently adapted to such a work as this.

1. In the first place, to be fitted for this work, the man must be a Christian. He must know Christ. Whatever else he may lack, or whatever else he may have, he must have that. There is nothing else in all the world that can supply the place of personal christianity in the man who stands before the world to represent Christ,—who undertakes to live the life that Christ calls men to live. For I am not speaking particularly of ministers—so called—but I mean any man who serves God and lets his light shine before the world. He must be a christian. For no man can properly teach that which he does not know himself. And no man, not a christian, can teach the way of life and salvation to others. There is something to be learned of Christ, which flesh and blood does not reveal. A man might as well undertake to teach Astronomy without any knowledge of its facts; or Philosophy, or Chemistry, without knowing anything about them, as to teach christianity until he knows it. He must be acquainted with Christ, he must have sought the Lord and been sought and found of Him, he must have repented of sin, he must have known the need which the human heart hath of pardon and of peace, he must have borne the burden which the sinful soul bears, and felt its galling bitterness; and then, having known and felt that, he must have come to Christ who says to the weary and heavy-laden, "I will give you REST," and there he must have found rest to his soul. When a man knows Christ, then he can introduce others to him. When a man has experienced the love of Christ, and come into friendship with Christ, when he has come to partake of the grace and mercy of Christ, and to know the infinite tenderness of heart, the wisdom and strength of Christ, then he can invite others to Christ, and not till then:—not till he himself has received a Savior's greeting, can he go out and tell others how warm a welcome, and how wide a heart, await them when they come to Christ.

Paul had this qualification. Small as he was,—less than the least of all the saints,—yet he was a converted man. God had changed him; the main current of his life was turned; and from the time that the Lord Jesus met him by the way as he went to Damascus, till the end of his earthly pilgrimage, he showed by unmistakable tokens that he was a new man.

2. A man having known Christ is in so far prepared to declare the grace of Christ; but there are certain qualities and peculiarities which especially prepare christians for this work. A man who would declare the "unsearchable riches of Christ" must be an honest man. He must be honest at HEART. Not only honest pecuniarily, not only honest in dollars and cents, but he must be honest in soul, he must be MORALLY honest. He must have that kind of honesty which scorns deceit, which abhors wrong, hates falsehood, abominates shams, and which stands for the right, no matter what the cost may be. An honesty such that a man cannot be wheedled from his post, cannot be turned aside by flatteries, by sneers, or by frowns. And unless a man has this kind of honesty, he will find in this land of the enemy, ten thousand bribes, cheats, and empty, rascally deceptions with which Satan will buy his soul, and the world wheedle him away from God. He must stand firmly against these things, and in heart honesty must be deeply rooted. And that has been the strength of the men who in ages past have made their mark in the church and in the world. It has not been their wealth or wisdom always. They have had their faults and failings, and these have oftentimes been great, but men have seen in them a deep-rooted purpose to do right, a stern determination to turn from the wrong; and though they have many times stepped aside, erred, blundered, and failed, yet after all, this redeeming element brought them back again. They were honest in their innermost hearts.

3. Another qualification for a man who stands as a representative of Christ in this world is fearlessness. For in an enemy's land, surrounded by adverse circumstances, there is no opportunity for success and prosperity where men are timid, and wavering, and fearful. If a man be easily frightened, he most certainly will be frightened. Just where he fears, there dangers will be piled mountain high against him. If lions in the way are any hindrance to him, then lions will be as thick as need be. If a tedious journey or a hard road are alarming to him, then he will have a constant succession of bad roads and long marches. Just what he is afraid of will happen to him. Just where he shrinks and flinches, he will be met. And the only way to success is to arm himself with the mind of Christ, with fortitude, courage, and a dauntless spirit that will enable him to go through and care for no evil or danger.

4. A man who would declare among men the unsearchable riches of Christ must be a disinterested man. He must be a man who has no party ends to serve; who is not bought, neither is he sold; who is not on the auction block, for sale at the highest bidder; who has nobody to serve but God, and is determined to serve him at the risk of all things. For if a man has a price, it can be paid; and if he has an object in his life that runs a line of selfishness through all his works, then his work is useless. For if he be selfish men can discern it. They know whether he does his work from the heart or not. They understand perfectly well about that. The distinction is sufficiently plain. If a man goes out like Tetzel of old, selling indulgences, telling the people they can be pardoned of sin if they will only hand over their silver, and be freed from guilt at the sacrifice of their gold, why, then every sensible man seeing the object and animus that rule him, will at once characterize him as a man of craft and self-interest, without love for God or man. But when a man like Martin Luther appears, who will preach against all these things, and then go and turn wooden bowls for a living, they have nothing of the kind to say against him. You will see the advantage that the old Reformers thus gained. Luther at his treadle turning wooden dishes, or in his poverty pawning the gifts of princes for bread to eat, was in a position loftier far than that of the mere hireling, who sought men's gold rather than their good. Whoever labors in the work of God must labor in that way.

There are a great many people who think that very much of the work that a christian does he never gets his pay for. They say: "What is the use? He gets no pay for it. What is the use of doing all this labor? noboby will thank you for it." That is just the principle. It is none of the christian's business whether he is paid for his labor or not. None of his business whether anybody thanks him for it or not. It is his business to sow the seed of God, to shed His light, though "poor yet making many rich," having nothing, and yet possessing all things. This leads us to speak of another qualification which becomes requisite in the christian laborer.

5. A man who is to represent Christ must endure hardness. There is no other way, and so a man may settle it first as well as last, that if he will be free in Christ, he must "endure hardness as a good soldier." There will be in the first place the reproach that comes upon every man who dares to stand out from the ordinary course of things. Then the pressure of public opinion and public influence, a constant current that comes against a man like an overwhelming flood. Then the pressure of actual necessity, the pressure that made the apostle Paul to hunger, be naked, and destitute of daily food, and have no certain dwelling-place: the necessity that caused him to toil and labor with his hands that he might not be chargeable to any; the necessity that made him endure all things for the elect's sake, that he might obtain salvation with eternal glory.

A special danger will arise from the sufferings to which he will be exposed, namely, the danger of bitterness and sourness of spirit. And it is this that kills and ruins almost every man that sets up in this world for a Reformer, if he has not the grace of God, and the strength of Christ to lean upon. For very soon through the trials he is caused to endure, the milk of human kindness in his breast which prompted him to set about the work of reformation, turns to vinegar and wormwood towards everybody else, and just as much as he has loved the right, will he now hate the wrong-doer. And he becomes great in hating, until at length almost two-thirds of his labor consist not in standing up for the right, but in fighting that which is not right. If a man will expend his strength properly, at least two-thirds must go for the right, and not more than one third against the wrong. He must build more than he destroys, he must follow Christ more than he fights antichrist. Let the man who would serve Christ go about his business with a courageous heart. Let him be patient towards all men. His patience will be sorely tried. He will find men perverse. He will find them sullen, stubborn, dull, angry, persecuting, and sordid. He will find men in whose hearts is wrapped up all ungodliness, while outside they may be clad in the very livery of heaven. And, if he is not careful, his faith in God and man will fail, and he will sink down into bitterness and despondency, and curse the world in which he lives. And in fact, there are men who have started with the brightest faith in humanity, with all sorts of fine thoughts about the progression of the race, and a "good time coming," who, when they have got out into the world and experienced its bitterness and selfishness, its pride and hollowness, then, while they held to the same theory, they have turned themselves about and gone to cursing almost the whole race incontinently, and have hated men as if they were demons. So you can find no more terrible maledictions and imprecations, no more withering sarcasm poured out upon the race, than from the lips of those very men, who once had such great faith in human nature; who said all that men wanted was a chance to develop themselves. They find upon trial that the theory does not work, and so they pour out vials of wrath upon those that stand in the way of it.

The man who preaches Christ should have an understanding of this at first, that it is no holiday work he undertakes. It is something earnest and actual. He has a battle to fight, and it is not a sham battle. He has a race to run, and it is for a glorious prize; a pilgrimage to perform, and it is not a pleasure journey, but a travel from the darkness of this world to the light of the next, through deserts that stretch themselves along his way. So a man will need to learn gentleness: to be patient and meek in all the circumstances that surround him. If he meets with those that are as weak as "the bruised reed," he must learn not to break them. If he meets with a faith that only glimmers like "the smoking flax," he must not quench it. If he meets with the ungodly and incorrigible, he must learn to turn aside and let them pass. Why need he batter his brains out undertaking to throw down that which is insurmountable? So he needs to be gentle with the good and with the bad; gentle in lifting up the fallen; gentle in warning those that are just ready to fall; that he may prove himself and his Master to be the friends of all mankind.

6. A man who will preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, needs to be apt to teach. There is, you know, a kind of aptness to impart instruction about some people to which others seem to be strangers. Persons can most easily teach what they best understand. And the first requisite is thorough knowledge. Those people can teach best who understand best. Those who are the most perfectly and familiarly acquainted with the matter in hand, can most fully declare it, other things being equal. Then there are different persons having different gifts in this direction. There is much to learn; and no effort is better put forth than the effort that is made to learn how to teach others. You meet sometimes with a man who says he has no memory. What is the matter with his memory? He says once he could remember, now he cannot. The trouble is this: He had a memory to use; to store up something in it, that he might tell it to others. But this he would not do. He kept everything locked up in his mind like a miser who buries his treasures so deep that he cannot find them himself when he wants them! Many a person says he cannot teach, and you will sometimes meet grown men who would shrink from the task of teaching a child his Alphabet. They do not know how to teach. They are not accustomed to that kind of work, and so they are awkward about a business that they never undertook.

If a man will go forth in Christ's work he needs to adapt himself to all classes. He needs to learn just how to present truth aright; to get principles and facts before the world in the best possible manner; just where people will see them clearly, and where they will appreciate them. He must study himself. He must know what affects him, what convinces him, what controls him, and when he has found out the secret springs of his own action, he has found out the springs of action of many others. When he finds out the mysteries of his own nature, he has found out the mysteries of human nature. For mankind are nearly as much alike as the drops of water in a shower; when you analyze one drop you know the general character of all. When you have found out one man, studied and read him, and understand him perfectly, you have come to understand, in great part, and read all men. And you have only to follow up the alphabet you have learned, and you can read the whole race. A deep-seeing man can observe something daily in himself and others that will profit him in his efforts to teach and unfold truth.

7. A man who will preach "the unsearchable riches of Christ," like a man who will effectually do anything else, needs to be a man of common sense. One of the most important of all the christian graces is "the grace of common sense." And there is nothing else that will supply the place of it, (and it is, I sometimes think, the most uncommon thing in the world)—that common sense that makes a man know what he is doing, why he does it, and how to do it effectually; that leads a man to know his place and to keep it, to stand steadfast where he should stand. I do not mean that cunning that keeps a man looking out for the main chance, that keeps him constantly watching the weather-cock to see which way the wind blows, but that ability to make the most of every circumstance, to act wisely in the good cause, that he may effect the desired end without imprudence, hazard or failure.

8. A man who declares the grace of Christ to the world, should be a steadfast man. It is not sufficient that he have firmness of character, that he stand up to-day like a rock in the midst of his foes; but he should stand there to-morrow, and all days as well. He should be so rooted and grounded in the great principles he has espoused, and which have taken hold of him, that he will have no disposition to turn aside from them for an hour. And this stability is not the fruit of purposes, or resolutions, or promises. It is not because the man says, "I must do this for I have promised to," while he perhaps wishes he had not promised it, and would gladly be released from his vow. It is something deeper and higher than these bonds. The sun and stars do not obey influences and impulses because of a compact. The moon does not shine to-day because it has promised it yesterday. The stars do not hold their places because they have agreed to. It is because they are taken hold of by some mighty attraction which binds them to a great central force, and sweeps them onward in their wondrous race. It is the present power of Christ's love to-day, that keeps the christian where he should be. It is to-day's experience, the grace of Christ, the hallowed memories of the past, and the glorious hopes of the future which hold him like an anchor that he swerveth not. Some substitute for this vows, promises, resolutions. But this is not the real christian disposition. These are not the elements that give power to a man who is a servant of God. In the fervor of to-day many make promises for the morrow which they find themselves indisposed to fulfill. In the high tide they float, and in the low tide they stick fast on the flats, and neither promises nor resolutions inspired by a departed fervor can carry them on their voyage till the tide of feeling rise again. Instead of this the servant of God does best when he steers his craft out into the channel where high and low tide do not affect him so materially, and then sails onward in his course.

This steadfastness is not gained by any of these spasmodic determinations and promises. The best promises in the world of faithfulness to-morrow is faithfulness to-day. The best promise in the world of final perseverance is present perseverance in doing right. For if a man turns aside but for one moment, he may for an hour, or a day, or a lifetime. The man who breaks present obligations will perhaps break future promises, and will find himself drifting away from his anchorage ground, bringing up in some place, he knows not where, but which will be dangerous in the extreme.

Paul said, "The love of Christ constraineth me." Not the love he had felt yesterday, or should feel to-morrow, but the present consciousness of Jesus' grace. And so the love of Christ is an attraction as steady as the attraction of gravitation, binding the child of God to Christ and truth and duty with a steady, a mighty and a controlling influence.

8. Further, a man who will stand as the messenger of Christ must be a hopeful man. He must have as his motto, "never despair." He must be raised above these doubts, fears and turmoils, that depend upon times and seasons. He will need to glance from the beginning to the end; he will need to learn that God has not left him in the world to straighten all the crooked things or right all the wrong ones: that he is not to be discouraged though his works seem to be like water spilled upon the ground. He is to stand for the right, leaving the result for the final day of reward, being sure that his business is to do right and rest the consequences with the Almighty. If a man does this, it matters not to him so much whether the world goes right or wrong. There is One higher than the highest who governs the world and controls the things of earth, and into His hands he commits the whole.

9. If a man will serve Christ in this way, he must deny himself. And he must have the spirit of self-denial. Mere acting is not always the thing. A man may be forced by circumstances to deny himself. But a christian man stands where he may choose, and voluntarily chooses poverty, reproach, suffering, humiliation and loneliness, that he may serve the Lord. He denies himself, cuts down the aspirations of his proud heart, and with his own hands severs the bands that would bind him to the path of sin, though it be like cutting off a right hand, or plucking out a right eye. He lands on the shore of the enemy's country, and burns the vessels that bore him, so that he must conquer or die. He breaks up the bridges over which he passes, that the irresolute heart seeing this may press on to victory. He has no expectation of turning back, and the very thought is scouted as an idea that fires the soul with indignation. He does present duty. He says, "to-day I will go forward and render it impossible to return." All these qualifications are necessary, but there is also another which is specially important.

10. The man who will do these things must be a man of purity. He must be a holy man. Holy in the sense of being separate from the world. Not separate locally, for he must mingle with the world from day to day. Not separated by occupation, for he makes tents with Paul or goes fishing with Peter. But he must be separated spiritually; separated by the grace and love of God. He must realize that he is a called and chosen man of God; that God has led him out of the world; that on him has been poured the oil of a divine anointing. He must realize that henceforth, whatever his hands do, his heart is reserved for God; whatever his labors may be, his reward is beyond this world; whatever his calling, his ultimate object is a crown of glory that fadeth not away, and all these things of mortal time are emptiness and vanity compared with this. They are the trials of the day, the necessities of the hour, and he turns aside to attend to them only for the passing moment, while the work of God is the work of his life. He may have a hundred or a thousand occupations, but running through the whole like a golden thread, like the key-note in a piece of music, like a chain that binds them all together, is the great purpose that he hath been enabled to form by grace divine, to serve the Lord, and gain eternal life.

These are some of the qualifications which in the individual are important; and they are no less so in the associated family of the children of God. What is requisite for me as a servant of God to do, is requisite for you to do if you are servants of the Lord. The same principles which guide me should guide you. The same impulses which should control me, should control you. We should both shun the same dangers. So God's people should have all these elements. They should be christians; they should know Christ, not merely as sectarians and members of churches, but as christians in the deep, personal experience of the grace and love of Christ, which, though it may have been born of sorrow, and baptized in tears, yet is more precious than all the joys they have ever tasted in this world of sin and folly.

They must bind themselves on the altar of the Lord, and the altar shall sanctify the gift; for, though weak and unworthy, and sinful, yet when a man has given himself to Christ, Christ takes him as he is, and infuses into him the energies of undying life, and makes him to partake of his own holiness. So they also need to be gentle; they need to be patient; they need to be full of hope, and joy, and generous enthusiasm, working that which is pleasing in the sight of the Lord, and faithfully performing that which he has appointed them to do. If God has given us a message to the world, this is the spirit in which we should carry it, this is the spirit in which we should labor, and these are the objects which should inspire our souls. I pray God to help us worthily to fulfill our work, and save us at last in his glory!

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

In No. 18 of the World's Crisis, T. M. Preble says that the brethren who answered his inquiries on the pre-existence of Jesus have done well; but he says they have overlooked the main point in his inquiries. The main point he says is this: did Jesus pre-exist before the world began? I as a German, (though unlearned in college education, and more so in your English language; feel glad that I have some learning of the Word of God, and a little experience of its powerful work on my heart,) feel to make a few remarks to all the brethren concerned in the matter.

It does seem to my mind [illegible] waste of time to question the pre-existence of Jesus at all, not of the name Jesus; then the name is not the being itself, but the appellation, by which that being which had a pre-existence was identified, when he took upon himself the nature of man, or the seed of Abraham. He had a great many names given him by the prophets, before he made his first advent; but neither one of all these names, or altogether, were the being itself, but the names of that being which had a pre-existence with God, before the world began. He is called likewise a mediator. But the word mediator was not the being itself, which had a pre-existence, but it was only an official term, under which character he had to appear before God, so soon as Adam did transgress. He had to have a pre-existence before the world began, or else he could not be an equal with God*; and nothing short of an equal with God could carry out a mediation between God and man. He officiated as a mediator between God and man in his divine character in heaven, as soon as the first opportunity required it; and as he had not taken the seed of Abraham on himself (by and through the virgin Mary), there were proxy mediators of men, to officiate between him and men, as the second party. God himself was the first party. Therefore he appeared so often to the patriarchs of old, which were the heads of their own families; all of them officiated as proxy mediators between men and the angel of the covenant, which is another name of that pre-existent being, which was afterward called Jesus, by taking the seed of Abraham on himself. Through these patriarchs, as proxy mediators, which delivered their office over from one to another until Moses came, the covenant of the Old Testament has been established and finished under Moses, and so Moses was made a mediator of the old covenant; of course, he was made such by proxy between men and the angel of the covenant, which was the real mediator between God and men. Then Moses could not appear in the presence of God, because he was only a man himself, and he needed another one between him and God, which was more than a man, to present all his offices, from the second party men, to the first party God. These official duties of the old covenant were carried out after Moses through the priests as ambassadors of that old covenant, until the fullness of the times came in, and then the real mediator, that pre-existent being, which was before the world began, took on himself the seed of Abraham. But he had to remove all the ordinances of the old covenant, established by the aid of proxy mediators, and he had to establish the new covenant, besprinkled with his own blood, in nailing the old to the cross, and by appearing again in heaven as real mediator, without any proxy before God; when all his proceedings were ratified and testified to by the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on both Jews and Gentiles. Glory to God in the highest for such a gift! Hallelujah! I think this will be enough to prove the pre-existence, if not of Jesus, of the being which was called Jesus.

PHILIPP PFEIL.

Shelby, N. Y.

*I do not mean to say, when I say that the being which was called Jesus, was equal with God in his pre-existence as a God, and like God; but as the Son of God; which existed before the world began, and to which he (God) delegated his power, to make him an equal, so that he could be a mediator between God and men. Christianity in Cities.

Now, as at all past periods, the great battle of christianity and of the church is in the large towns. Those central seats of human activity and life are the fulcrum by which she would move the world. The leaven that would leaven the whole lump must be planted in the very center of the mass. Wherever man is, there christianity, the religion of man, follows, and the cities are pre-eminently the haunts and the rallying points of man. They constitute the very backbone and spinal cord of the social system of the world, through which, therefore, every intellectual and moral influence that is to tell on the happiness and welfare of the race must circulate. Here, then, in this thronging, teeming place of concourse, the heavenly wisdom ever lifts her voice. Incarnate love still beholds the city and weeps over it; and the same instinct, caught from his inspiration, which led the steps of the missionary apostle straight to the Antiochs, the Corinths, and the Romes of the old world, still directs the eyes of the christian philanthropist to the Londons, the Manchesters and the Glasgows of the new. The course of ages has only tended to enhance the importance of this principle. If the city has always been the master position in the battle-field of the faith, it is pre-eminently so now.—North British Review.

For the Crisis.

"Come Quickly."

The word has gone forth, "Lo! quickly I come,"
And soon may we hope to inherit our home;
With gladness we wait for the Savior from heaven,
To whom lasting praises and honors be given.

"Come quickly, O Lord!" and the murmur is low,
As the sufferer's spirit makes ready to go;
And another goes down to the dreary cold grave,
To join in the chorus, "Come, Jesus, and save!"

"Come quickly!" cries Earth, for long has her breast
Been burdened with pilgrims laid away there to rest;
And the millions gone down to the depths of the sea,
Are echoing the prayer, dear Redeemer, to thee.

The flowers that fade, the leaves that decay,
Are making the cry just as prayerful as they;
All creation cries "Come!" then tarry no more,
Let thy presence illume from shore unto shore.

And Jesus will come; even now is he near;
Soon, soon to our rescue the Lord will appear;
While loud allelulas sound sweetly on earth,
The dying and dead share an immortal birth.

Qualifications for the Christian Service.

A Sermon preached by H. L. Hastings, in New Market Hall, Providence, R. I., Jan. 6th, 1861, Sunday morning.

REPORTED BY E. P. WOODWARD.

"Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."—Eph. 3: 8.

The apostle Paul speaks of his work in proclaiming "the unsearchable riches of Christ" as a privilege rather than a duty; as a grace or favor bestowed rather than a requirement made. But it is a grace not conferred upon all. For though the vessels which bear the name of Christ are but of earth, cheap, frail and valueless without the treasure they contain, yet they must be purged and prepared ere they become vessels unto honor, fitted for the Master's use. And if we would faithfully serve the Lord who has called us, we should learn what are those traits of character which peculiarly fit us to receive this grace, even to proclaim among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

There can be no greater honor conferred on mortal man than that he stand as the messenger of God, as the servant of the Most High, as the ambassador of Jesus Christ to the world. And this, too, without respect to his social position or his talents. And so there can be no greater honor put on any people whoever they may be, than to be made the messengers of God to mankind, and witnesses for God before the world. Compared with this all other dignities sink and dwindle into insignificance; all emoluments, all earthly grandeurs, seem but emptiness. If a man is really a servant of God, and if to any man is given this privilege, this honor, this trust, to declare among the nations "the unsearchable riches of Christ"; if any man has this work imparted to him, no matter how feeble or weak he is, it confers honor which no earthly power can bestow.

To be made the bearer of dispatches to a foreign government, is something of an honor, for it indicates a kind of confidence placed in the man, making him the representative of a great Power. To be dispatched as a Minister to a foreign court is an honor, provided the man is sent by those that are honorable; provided he goes out accredited by some government that is a government, not the mere figment of a thing, that grows up or "secedes," and then starts off in a kind of self-glorifying spirit, and creates all sorts of offices, and finds all sorts of men to fill them. But if the government hath in it strength, dignity and power, then the man who goes out as its Minister and Representative, partakes of all its honor,—is the foreign representative of all the honor and dignity at home.

Now I propose to talk to you a little while this morning, about the qualifications which are necessary, which are important, which are indispensable in any man, or in any company of men or women, who would faithfully represent Christ to the world, and thus have the honor and the blessing of being declarers of his unsearchable riches. For it is not every disciple that in his present position can do this work. Not every person is fitted to do it. And there are many persons who may have some of the qualifications needful, and, who yet are not eminently adapted to such a work as this.

1. In the first place, to be fitted for this work, the man must be a Christian. He must know Christ. Whatever else he may lack, or whatever else he may have, he must have that. There is nothing else in all the world that can supply the place of personal christianity in the man who stands before the world to represent Christ,—who undertakes to live the life that Christ calls men to live. For I am not speaking particularly of ministers—so called—but I mean any man who serves God and lets his light shine before the world. He must be a christian. For no man can properly teach that which he does not know himself. And no man, not a christian, can teach the way of life and salvation to others. There is something to be learned of Christ, which flesh and blood does not reveal. A man might as well undertake to teach Astronomy without any knowledge of its facts; or Philosophy, or Chemistry, without knowing anything about them, as to teach christianity until he knows it. He must be acquainted with Christ, he must have sought the Lord and been sought and found of Him, he must have repented of sin, he must have known the need which the human heart hath of pardon and of peace, he must have borne the burden which the sinful soul bears, and felt its galling bitterness; and then, having known and felt that, he must have come to Christ who says to the weary and heavy-laden, "I will give you REST," and there he must have found rest to his soul. When a man knows Christ, then he can introduce others to him. When a man has experienced the love of Christ, and come into friendship with Christ, when he has come to partake of the grace and mercy of Christ, and to know the infinite tenderness of heart, the wisdom and strength of Christ, then he can invite others to Christ, and not till then:—not till he himself has received a Savior's greeting, can he go out and tell others how warm a welcome, and how wide a heart, await them when they come to Christ.

Paul had this qualification. Small as he was,—less than the least of all the saints,—yet he was a converted man. God had changed him; the main current of his life was turned; and from the time that the Lord Jesus met him by the way as he went to Damascus, till the end of his earthly pilgrimage, he showed by unmistakable tokens that he was a new man.

2. A man having known Christ is in so far prepared to declare the grace of Christ; but there are certain qualities and peculiarities which especially prepare christians for this work. A man who would declare the "unsearchable riches of Christ" must be an honest man. He must be honest at HEART. Not only honest pecuniarily, not only honest in dollars and cents, but he must be honest in soul, he must be MORALLY honest. He must have that kind of honesty which scorns deceit, which abhors wrong, hates falsehood, abominates shams, and which stands for the right, no matter what the cost may be. An honesty such that a man cannot be wheedled from his post, cannot be turned aside by flatteries, by sneers, or by frowns. And unless a man has this kind of honesty, he will find in this land of the enemy, ten thousand bribes, cheats, and empty, rascally deceptions with which Satan will buy his soul, and the world wheedle him away from God. He must stand firmly against these things, and in heart honesty must be deeply rooted. And that has been the strength of the men who in ages past have made their mark in the church and in the world. It has not been their wealth or wisdom always. They have had their faults and failings, and these have oftentimes been great, but men have seen in them a deep-rooted purpose to do right, a stern determination to turn from the wrong; and though they have many times stepped aside, erred, blundered, and failed, yet after all, this redeeming element brought them back again. They were honest in their innermost hearts.

3. Another qualification for a man who stands as a representative of Christ in this world is fearlessness. For in an enemy's land, surrounded by adverse circumstances, there is no opportunity for success and prosperity where men are timid, and wavering, and fearful. If a man be easily frightened, he most certainly will be frightened. Just where he fears, there dangers will be piled mountain high against him. If lions in the way are any hindrance to him, then lions will be as thick as need be. If a tedious journey or a hard road are alarming to him, then he will have a constant succession of bad roads and long marches. Just what he is afraid of will happen to him. Just where he shrinks and flinches, he will be met. And the only way to success is to arm himself with the mind of Christ, with fortitude, courage, and a dauntless spirit that will enable him to go through and care for no evil or danger.

4. A man who would declare among men the unsearchable riches of Christ must be a disinterested man. He must be a man who has no party ends to serve; who is not bought, neither is he sold; who is not on the auction block, for sale at the highest bidder; who has nobody to serve but God, and is determined to serve him at the risk of all things. For if a man has a price, it can be paid; and if he has an object in his life that runs a line of selfishness through all his works, then his work is useless. For if he be selfish men can discern it. They know whether he does his work from the heart or not. They understand perfectly well about that. The distinction is sufficiently plain. If a man goes out like Tetzel of old, selling indulgences, telling the people they can be pardoned of sin if they will only hand over their silver, and be freed from guilt at the sacrifice of their gold, why, then every sensible man seeing the object and animus that rule him, will at once characterize him as a man of craft and self-interest, without love for God or man. But when a man like Martin Luther appears, who will preach against all these things, and then go and turn wooden bowls for a living, they have nothing of the kind to say against him. You will see the advantage that the old Reformers thus gained. Luther at his treadle turning wooden dishes, or in his poverty pawning the gifts of princes for bread to eat, was in a position loftier far than that of the mere hireling, who sought men's gold rather than their good. Whoever labors in the work of God must labor in that way.

There are a great many people who think that very much of the work that a christian does he never gets his pay for. They say: "What is the use? He gets no pay for it. What is the use of doing all this labor? noboby will thank you for it." That is just the principle. It is none of the christian's business whether he is paid for his labor or not. None of his business whether anybody thanks him for it or not. It is his business to sow the seed of God, to shed His light, though "poor yet making many rich," having nothing, and yet possessing all things. This leads us to speak of another qualification which becomes requisite in the christian laborer.

5. A man who is to represent Christ must endure hardness. There is no other way, and so a man may settle it first as well as last, that if he will be free in Christ, he must "endure hardness as a good soldier." There will be in the first place the reproach that comes upon every man who dares to stand out from the ordinary course of things. Then the pressure of public opinion and public influence, a constant current that comes against a man like an overwhelming flood. Then the pressure of actual necessity, the pressure that made the apostle Paul to hunger, be naked, and destitute of daily food, and have no certain dwelling-place: the necessity that caused him to toil and labor with his hands that he might not be chargeable to any; the necessity that made him endure all things for the elect's sake, that he might obtain salvation with eternal glory.

A special danger will arise from the sufferings to which he will be exposed, namely, the danger of bitterness and sourness of spirit. And it is this that kills and ruins almost every man that sets up in this world for a Reformer, if he has not the grace of God, and the strength of Christ to lean upon. For very soon through the trials he is caused to endure, the milk of human kindness in his breast which prompted him to set about the work of reformation, turns to vinegar and wormwood towards everybody else, and just as much as he has loved the right, will he now hate the wrong-doer. And he becomes great in hating, until at length almost two-thirds of his labor consist not in standing up for the right, but in fighting that which is not right. If a man will expend his strength properly, at least two-thirds must go for the right, and not more than one third against the wrong. He must build more than he destroys, he must follow Christ more than he fights antichrist. Let the man who would serve Christ go about his business with a courageous heart. Let him be patient towards all men. His patience will be sorely tried. He will find men perverse. He will find them sullen, stubborn, dull, angry, persecuting, and sordid. He will find men in whose hearts is wrapped up all ungodliness, while outside they may be clad in the very livery of heaven. And, if he is not careful, his faith in God and man will fail, and he will sink down into bitterness and despondency, and curse the world in which he lives. And in fact, there are men who have started with the brightest faith in humanity, with all sorts of fine thoughts about the progression of the race, and a "good time coming," who, when they have got out into the world and experienced its bitterness and selfishness, its pride and hollowness, then, while they held to the same theory, they have turned themselves about and gone to cursing almost the whole race incontinently, and have hated men as if they were demons. So you can find no more terrible maledictions and imprecations, no more withering sarcasm poured out upon the race, than from the lips of those very men, who once had such great faith in human nature; who said all that men wanted was a chance to develop themselves. They find upon trial that the theory does not work, and so they pour out vials of wrath upon those that stand in the way of it.

The man who preaches Christ should have an understanding of this at first, that it is no holiday work he undertakes. It is something earnest and actual. He has a battle to fight, and it is not a sham battle. He has a race to run, and it is for a glorious prize; a pilgrimage to perform, and it is not a pleasure journey, but a travel from the darkness of this world to the light of the next, through deserts that stretch themselves along his way. So a man will need to learn gentleness: to be patient and meek in all the circumstances that surround him. If he meets with those that are as weak as "the bruised reed," he must learn not to break them. If he meets with a faith that only glimmers like "the smoking flax," he must not quench it. If he meets with the ungodly and incorrigible, he must learn to turn aside and let them pass. Why need he batter his brains out undertaking to throw down that which is insurmountable? So he needs to be gentle with the good and with the bad; gentle in lifting up the fallen; gentle in warning those that are just ready to fall; that he may prove himself and his Master to be the friends of all mankind.

6. A man who will preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, needs to be apt to teach. There is, you know, a kind of aptness to impart instruction about some people to which others seem to be strangers. Persons can most easily teach what they best understand. And the first requisite is thorough knowledge. Those people can teach best who understand best. Those who are the most perfectly and familiarly acquainted with the matter in hand, can most fully declare it, other things being equal. Then there are different persons having different gifts in this direction. There is much to learn; and no effort is better put forth than the effort that is made to learn how to teach others. You meet sometimes with a man who says he has no memory. What is the matter with his memory? He says once he could remember, now he cannot. The trouble is this: He had a memory to use; to store up something in it, that he might tell it to others. But this he would not do. He kept everything locked up in his mind like a miser who buries his treasures so deep that he cannot find them himself when he wants them! Many a person says he cannot teach, and you will sometimes meet grown men who would shrink from the task of teaching a child his Alphabet. They do not know how to teach. They are not accustomed to that kind of work, and so they are awkward about a business that they never undertook.

If a man will go forth in Christ's work he needs to adapt himself to all classes. He needs to learn just how to present truth aright; to get principles and facts before the world in the best possible manner; just where people will see them clearly, and where they will appreciate them. He must study himself. He must know what affects him, what convinces him, what controls him, and when he has found out the secret springs of his own action, he has found out the springs of action of many others. When he finds out the mysteries of his own nature, he has found out the mysteries of human nature. For mankind are nearly as much alike as the drops of water in a shower; when you analyze one drop you know the general character of all. When you have found out one man, studied and read him, and understand him perfectly, you have come to understand, in great part, and read all men. And you have only to follow up the alphabet you have learned, and you can read the whole race. A deep-seeing man can observe something daily in himself and others that will profit him in his efforts to teach and unfold truth.

7. A man who will preach "the unsearchable riches of Christ," like a man who will effectually do anything else, needs to be a man of common sense. One of the most important of all the christian graces is "the grace of common sense." And there is nothing else that will supply the place of it, (and it is, I sometimes think, the most uncommon thing in the world)—that common sense that makes a man know what he is doing, why he does it, and how to do it effectually; that leads a man to know his place and to keep it, to stand steadfast where he should stand. I do not mean that cunning that keeps a man looking out for the main chance, that keeps him constantly watching the weather-cock to see which way the wind blows, but that ability to make the most of every circumstance, to act wisely in the good cause, that he may effect the desired end without imprudence, hazard or failure.

8. A man who declares the grace of Christ to the world, should be a steadfast man. It is not sufficient that he have firmness of character, that he stand up to-day like a rock in the midst of his foes; but he should stand there to-morrow, and all days as well. He should be so rooted and grounded in the great principles he has espoused, and which have taken hold of him, that he will have no disposition to turn aside from them for an hour. And this stability is not the fruit of purposes, or resolutions, or promises. It is not because the man says, "I must do this for I have promised to," while he perhaps wishes he had not promised it, and would gladly be released from his vow. It is something deeper and higher than these bonds. The sun and stars do not obey influences and impulses because of a compact. The moon does not shine to-day because it has promised it yesterday. The stars do not hold their places because they have agreed to. It is because they are taken hold of by some mighty attraction which binds them to a great central force, and sweeps them onward in their wondrous race. It is the present power of Christ's love to-day, that keeps the christian where he should be. It is to-day's experience, the grace of Christ, the hallowed memories of the past, and the glorious hopes of the future which hold him like an anchor that he swerveth not. Some substitute for this vows, promises, resolutions. But this is not the real christian disposition. These are not the elements that give power to a man who is a servant of God. In the fervor of to-day many make promises for the morrow which they find themselves indisposed to fulfill. In the high tide they float, and in the low tide they stick fast on the flat-, and neither promises nor resolutions inspired by a departed fervor can carry them on their voyage till the tide of feeling rise again. Instead of this the servant of God does best when he steers his craft out into the channel where high and low tide do not affect him so materially, and then sails onward in his course.

This steadfastness is not gained by any of these spasmodic determinations and promises. The best promises in the world of faithfulness to-morrow is faithfulness to-day. The best promise in the world of final perseverance is present perseverance in doing right. For if a man turns aside but for one moment, he may for an hour, or a day, or a lifetime. The man who breaks present obligations will perhaps break future promises, and will find himself drifting away from his anchorage ground, bringing up in some place, he knows not where, but which will be dangerous in the extreme.

Paul said, "The love of Christ constraineth me." Not the love he had felt yesterday, or should feel to-morrow, but the present consciousness of Jesus' grace. And so the love of Christ is an attraction as steady as the attraction of gravitation, binding the child of God to Christ and truth and duty with a steady, a mighty and a controlling influence.

8. Further, a man who will stand as the messenger of Christ must be a hopeful man. He must have as his motto, "never despair." He must be raised above these doubts, fears and turmoils, that depend upon times and seasons. He will need to glance from the beginning to the end; he will need to learn that God has not left him in the world to straighten all the crooked things or right all the wrong ones: that he is not to be discouraged though his works seem to be like water spilled upon the ground. He is to stand for the right, leaving the result for the final day of reward, being sure that his business is to do right and rest the consequences with the Almighty. If a man does this, it matters not to him so much whether the world goes right or wrong. There is One higher than the highest, who governs the world and controls the things of earth, and into His hands he commits the whole.

9. If a man will serve Christ in this way, he must deny himself. And he must have the spirit of self-denial. Mere acting is not always the thing. A man may be forced by circumstances to deny himself. But a christian man stands where he may choose, and voluntarily chooses poverty, reproach, suffering, humiliation and loneliness, that he may serve the Lord. He denies himself, cuts down the aspirations of his proud heart, and with his own hands severs the bands that would bind him to the path of sin, though it be like cutting off a right hand, or plucking out a right eye. He lands on the shore of the enemy's country, and burns the vessels that bore him, so that he must conquer or die. He breaks up the bridges over which he passes, that the irresolute heart seeing this may press on to victory. He has no expectation of turning back, and the very thought is scouted as an idea that fires the soul with indignation. He does present duty. He says, "to-day I will go forward and render it impossible to return." All these qualifications are necessary, but there is also another which is specially important.

10. The man who will do these things must be a man of purity. He must be a holy man. Holy in the sense of being separate from the world. Not separate locally, for he must mingle with the world from day to day. Not separated by occupation, for he makes tents with Paul or goes fishing with Peter. But he must be separated spiritually; separated by the grace and love of God. He must realize that he is a called and chosen man of God; that God has led him out of the world; that on him has been poured the oil of a divine anointing. He must realize that henceforth, whatever his hands do, his heart is reserved for God; whatever his labors may be, his reward is beyond this world; whatever his calling, his ultimate object is a crown of glory that fadeth not away, and all these things of mortal time are emptiness and vanity compared with this. They are the trials of the day, the necessities of the hour, and he turns aside to attend to them only for the passing moment, while the work of God is the work of his life. He may have a hundred or a thousand occupations, but running through the whole like a golden thread, like the key-note in a piece of music, like a chain that binds them all together, is the great purpose that he hath been enabled to form by grace divine, to serve the Lord, and gain eternal life.

These are some of the qualifications which in the individual are important; and they are no less so in the associated family of the children of God. What is requisite for me as a servant of God to do, is requisite for you to do if you are servants of the Lord. The same principles which guide me should guide you. The same impulses which should control me, should control you. We should both shun the same dangers. So God's people should have all these elements. They should be christians; they should know Christ, not merely as sectarians and members of churches, but as christians in the deep, personal experience of the grace and love of Christ, which, though it may have been born of sorrow, and baptized in tears, yet is more precious than all the joys they have ever tasted in this world of sin and folly.

They must bind themselves on the altar of the Lord, and the altar shall sanctify the gift; for, though weak and unworthy, and sinful, yet when a man has given himself to Christ, Christ takes him as he is, and infuses into him the energies of undying life, and makes him to partake of his own holiness. So they also need to be gentle; they need to be patient; they need to be full of hope, and joy, and generous enthusiasm, working that which is pleasing in the sight of the Lord, and faithfully performing that which he has appointed them to do. If God has given us a message to the world, this is the spirit in which we should carry it, this is the spirit in which we should labor, and these are the objects which should inspire our souls. I pray God to help us worthily to fulfill our work, and save us at last in his glory!

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

In No. 18 of the World's Crisis, T. M. Preble says that the brethren who answered his inquiries on the pre-existence of Jesus have done well; but he says they have overlooked the main point in his inquiries. The main point he says is this: did Jesus pre-exist before the world began? I as a German, (though unlearned in college education, and more so in your English language; feel glad that I have some learning of the Word of God, and a little experience of its powerful work on my heart,) feel to make a few remarks to all the brethren concerned in the matter.

[illegible] time to question the pre-existence of Jesus at all, not of the name Jesus; then the name is not the being itself, but the appellation, by which that being which had a pre-existence was identified, when he took upon himself the nature of man, or the seed of Abraham. He had a great many names given him by the prophets, before he made his first advent; but neither one of all these names, or altogether, were the being itself, but the names of that being which had a pre-existence with God, before the world began. He is called likewise a mediator. But the word mediator was not the being itself, which had a pre-existence, but it was only an official term, under which character he had to appear before God, so soon as Adam did transgress. He had to have a pre-existence before the world began, or else he could not be an equal with God*; and nothing short of an equal with God could carry out a mediation between God and man. He officiated as a mediator between God and man in his divine character in heaven, as soon as the first opportunity required it; and as he had not taken the seed of Abraham on himself (by and through the virgin Mary), there were proxy mediators of men, to officiate between him and men, as the second party. God himself was the first party. Therefore he appeared so often to the patriarchs of old, which were the heads of their own families; all of them officiated as proxy mediators between men and the angel of the covenant, which is another name of that pre-existent being, which was afterward called Jesus, by taking the seed of Abraham on himself. Through these patriarchs, as proxy mediators, which delivered their office over from one to another until Moses came, the covenant of the Old Testament has been established and finished under Moses, and so Moses was made a mediator of the old covenant; of course, he was made such by proxy between men and the angel of the covenant, which was the real mediator between God and men. Then Moses could not appear in the presence of God, because he was only a man himself, and he needed another one between him and God, which was more than a man, to present all his offices, from the second party men, to the first party God. These official duties of the old covenant were carried out after Moses through the priests as ambassadors of that old covenant, until the fullness of the times came in, and then the real mediator, that pre-existent being, which was before the world began, took on himself the seed of Abraham. But he had to remove all the ordinances of the old covenant, established by the aid of proxy mediators, and he had to establish the new covenant, besprinkled with his own blood, in nailing the old to the cross, and by appearing again in heaven as real mediator, without any proxy before God; when all his proceedings were ratified and testified to by the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on both Jews and Gentiles. Glory to God in the highest for such a gift! Hallelujah! I think this will be enough to prove the pre-existence, if not of Jesus, of the being which was called Jesus. PHILIPP PFEIL.

Shelby, N. Y.

*I do not mean to say, when I say that the being which was called Jesus, was equal with God in his pre-existence as a God, and like God; but as the Son of God; which existed before the world began, and to which he (God) delegated his power, to make him an equal, so that he could be a mediator between God and men. Christianity in Cities.

Now, as at all past periods, the great battle of christianity and of the church is in the large towns. Those central seats of human activity and life are the fulcrum by which she would move the world. The leaven that would leaven the whole lump must be planted in the very center of the mass. Wherever man is, there christianity, the religion of man, follows, and the cities are pre-eminently the haunts and the rallying points of man. They constitute the very backbone and spinal cord of the social system of the world, through which, therefore, every intellectual and moral influence that is to tell on the happiness and welfare of the race must circulate. Here, then, in this thronging, teeming place of concourse, the heavenly wisdom ever lifts her voice. Incarnate love still beholds the city and weeps over it; and the same instinct, caught from this inspiration, which led the steps of the missionary apostle straight to the Antiochs, the Corinths, and the Romes of the old world, still directs the eyes of the christian philanthropist to the Londons, the Manchesters and the Glasgows of the new. The course of ages has only tended to enhance the importance of this principle. If the city has always been the master position in the battlefield of the faith, it is pre-eminently so now.—North British Review.

A Singular Conversion.

Between two and three years ago, an intelligent and well educated young lady from a neighboring town came into this vicinity to teach school. After a while she came to board for a few weeks in my family. I had been informed indirectly that she was a Spiritualist, and I somewhat disliked the idea of forming an acquaintance with her, but was fully resolved that on no occasion would I swerve from duty, or a full confession of my faith in the gospel of the Son of God. I soon found that I had been misinformed concerning her, and saw that she was deeply interested in the views I held, and which appeared new to her. She was very free to converse, and her many inquiries evinced deep thought, as well as an unbiased mind. These, with the oft-starting tear, betokened an interest too deep, as I thought, for an unrenewed heart, and at an early opportunity I asked her concerning her hopes of salvation. She said she had never publicly professed faith in Christ, but thought she had been converted a little more than a year before, and would like to relate to me what she had passed through. I thus became acquainted with the following facts:

Her parents were people of some property, occupying a respectable position in society. Her father was a professed Congregationalist, her mother a Baptist in sentiment, but had never united with a church. They were never in the habit of conversing personally on religious subjects, with their children, of whom Miss C. was the eldest. Her childhood was mostly spent with her grandmother until the age of fourteen, when she entered a Seminary for young ladies in Hartford, where she remained several years. During this time she attended, with her teachers, an Episcopal church, and was in the habit of observing their usual form of worship, both in public and private, but without any serious convictions. Her mind seemed mostly interested in her studies, and religion with her was only an outward form. During her last year at school she boarded with a family consisting only of a gentleman and his wife, in middle age, between whom and herself a strong attachment existed. A year or two after leaving school she returned to H. for a few months, and again boarded with her old friends. She heard previously that they had become Spiritualists, but, to use her own words, "that was something in which she felt no interest, and she would not trouble herself with it." They often introduced the subject, telling her of many marvelous things connected therewith, and urging her attention to it. She however remained indifferent, and the many books and papers they gave her, were received only to be transferred to her table without a passing notice.

One afternoon as she was sitting in her room, her eye fell on a pamphlet, which she took up and commenced reading without any object or interest. She had heard her friends tell of persons becoming writing mediums by yielding themselves to the spirits, and quick as thought, and more for fun than for any other reason, she drew toward her some paper, took her pen, dipped it in ink, and placed her hand in a proper position for writing. Immediately she felt a twitching of the nerves of her wrist, and finally her whole arm became affected, and she commenced writing in a rapid manner. This continued for several hours without any knowledge of what she was writing, or any power to stop. She was neither frightened nor excited, but seemed to have wholly lost the power of volition, and to be controlled by some foreign influence. Many sheets of paper were written over, in different styles of writing and on different subjects, purporting to be messages from friends (both living and dead,) in their own handwriting. It was nearly night when she stopped and went down to the family, and told them what had happened. They were much pleased, and told her she would become a superior writing medium. A little while after, while waiting for tea, she had a very singular exercise in which she was drawn into various positions—personating a very aged person, etc., until they all became somewhat alarmed.

From this time she was entirely under the influence of the spirits, for several weeks, until her health began to fail very perceptibly, the spirits telling her that she was soon to die. She was the subject of various exercises and manifestations. She grew very gloomy and sad and wished to be alone in her room. Many times she felt hungry and, on going to the table to eat, was forbidden; when her appetite would be suddenly gone, until she was nearly starved. She became very unhappy, her mind constantly excited by revelations of the spirits, some of which she began to doubt. She did not understand the nature of the influence she was under, and began to feel a desire to know if she was being deceived. Sometimes after a revelation something would seem to say to her, "that was all a lie." With these conflicting thoughts, passages of Scripture suited to her case would come to her mind and she felt that the Lord only could help her. In this state of mind she began to cry unto him. "O," said she, "how I did pray, as I never in my life prayed before."

While engaged thus, at one time, she seemed to be suddenly delivered from the influence that had held her, and she was as one awakened from a dream. It was a final deliverance, and her mind was filled with a sweet peace, to which she had hitherto been a stranger. She rejoiced in the Lord, and felt like praising him continually, for what he had done for her. She began to live a new life, engaging with deep interest in prayer and study of the Bible. She longed much for christian society, for some one to whom she could unburden her heart, of whom she could ask advice, but as she knew no one, she locked her feelings in her own heart. Not even after her return home did she talk with her parents, because, as she said, "my case was so unlike that of others, I did not feel free to talk about it." Said she, "you are the first person who ever asked me if I were a christian." Yet she had been in the families of professed christians all summer.

I became deeply interested in her, and improved every opportunity of presenting the truth to her, and as the plan of redemption was unfolded to her mind, she was perfectly delighted, often remarking, "this is just what I've needed," and, "I have often felt impressed that there was something more for me." She seemed anxious to follow the Bible as her only sure guide, and said she had for some time seen baptism, as a duty, clearly presented to her.

Whenever Spiritualism was mentioned, she would say, "I believe it is a snare of the devil, and if one ever was delivered from it, I have been."

She attended meeting with me a few times and left town soon after. The same season she went South as a teacher of music, and failing to learn her address, I have never heard from her since, but have often prayed that the good seed sown may yet appear to the glory of God.

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

Permit me to say to our friends that it is impossible to remove all mystery from the existence of Jesus. Yet this mystery is not an absurdity, contradicting our consciousness like the doctrine of the trinity, for Paul declares the fact, (viz., God manifest in the flesh,) and calls it a great mystery. 1 Tim. 3: 16. The Bible testimony is the testimony of God. God would not establish the word of an impostor. But he did establish the word of Jesus by raising him from the dead. Therefore whatever Jesus said is true. Jesus said; "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." John 6: 38. "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" Verse 62. "Glorify thou me with the glory that I had with thee before the world was." John 17: 5. Jesus therefore must have lived in another form before he was born of the Virgin Mary.

The Jews first raised the objection, which we sometimes hear repeated, viz.: How can this Jesus have had a pre-existence, come down from heaven, seeing we have known him and his parents from his infancy until this time? Jesus answers by saying; No man can come unto me, know and believe on me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him, enlighten and incline by his Holy Spirit. No man knoweth the Son but the Father. Matt. 11: 27. No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Spirit. 1 Cor. 12; 3. Happy art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for man has not revealed thee to me, but my Father which is in heaven. Matt. 16: 17.

Though we may know every past and future event, and have all faith, if the knowledge and love of Jesus is not shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, we must soon be as though we had never been.

Cold Comfort.

Our brethren out West, who receive for their ministerial services but just enough to keep from starving, will see by the following that they are not alone. No doubt times are hard, but somebody is to blame for these things and somebody will be held responsible by the Master. T.

"Baptists in Wisconsin.—The Board of the State Convention report that of the two hundred Baptist churches in Wisconsin more than fifty are languishing and pressingly need pecuniary aid; and of the one hundred and forty ministers, more than half do not receive an adequate support, and are obliged to pursue some secular calling to make up the deficiency. Eight missionaries were employed during the year, for whom $996,26 were collected."

Queries.

Will Bro. J. S. White please answer through the Crisis the following questions on 2 Cor. 12: 2—5?

1. Of the man Paul says he knew in Christ—does he mean himself or somebody else?

2. If he means himself in vers. 2 and 3, what meaning is there in verse 5, where he says, "of such a one will I glory; yet of myself I will not glory"?

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 30, 1861.

"Public Distress."

In the President's last message, he speaks of the present state of things as one of "public distress." We apprehend there will be still more reason to use the words "distress" and "perplexity" as we approach the great day of the Lord. A storm of gigantic dimensions is evidently approaching, about to burst upon the wicked nations of earth, that have forgotten God, and trampled his laws under their feet, with a degree of recklessness equalled only among the Antediluvians and Sodomites. They have boasted of their light and privileges, but have been more careless than the heathen. They must be filled with their own doings. They have mingled the cup, and the time has come for them to drink the bitter draught, even to the dregs. The oppressor's work is almost ended, and tyrants will soon finish their work of torment. The right is about to be vindicated, and the truth to enjoy an eternal triumph.

Civil War.

It appears to be almost certain that we are, as a nation, about entering into the horrors of civil war. The South Carolinians seem determined to take Fort Sumter, unless surrendered without a struggle. This fort, in Charleston harbor, is considered the strongest in the United States, and cannot be forcibly taken without a great destruction of life and property. But it is said to be the decision of the Carolinians to have it at all hazards. It is thought the President will firmly refuse to give up the United States forts at Charleston; hence, if the inhabitants of South Carolina keep their resolutions, as expressed, hard fighting will soon begin; but who can tell the awful results? Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia have already seceded. All these states, of course, will aid South Carolina in carrying on the war.

A few short months may witness thousands upon the battle field in bloody slaughter, while widows and orphans sit weeping in their desolated homes, and their husbands and fathers lie mangled among the slain. Three months since, but few thought of seeing what we now behold; but could we now unfold the future for six months to come, we apprehend the stoutest hearts would quail at the sight. We see no hope for brighter days till Jesus comes. Till then, we may expect the world will make rapid progress in every species of wickedness. We can hope for no "bow of peace" till the Prince of peace arrives. Soon all nations will mourn at the sign of his appearing: and the faithful ones will exclaim,—"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Dear reader, let us be found in that happy company.

What the Spirits Say.

The spirits keep talking; and they say many strange things which many are foolish enough to believe; preferring their lies to the truth of the Lord; thus putting themselves in the class named in 2 Thess. 2: 10–12, where it is said, "They received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." Nearly all the men who are leaders in Spiritualism are backsliders, who have once had the light and truth, but have rejected it; hence left to be filled with their own ways, and trample upon their best interests here and hereafter.

But what do the spirits say? One recently said, "Heathen mythology is the basis of the christian religion, and not only the basis, but a law pervading every point of christianity .... The christian religion is but a portion of heathen mythology .... But the light of to-day gives you to know that you are gods." So Satan said to our first parents, but he was a liar from the beginning.

Another spirit says:—"If man would become satisfied of modern Spiritualism, he must first be satisfied that he is an immortal being." In this declaration we find the pith of Satan's lie, as declared to Adam and Eve. We are astonished that those who believe the Bible cannot see the origin of the doctrine that man is immortal in this present state; and also that the entire man lies dead between death and the resurrection. To us, there is not a plainer doctrine in the Scriptures; and, besides, it is in harmony with all true philosophy, as well as common sense. We feel thankful that every shade of doubt is removed from our mind on this subject. We are as well satisfied on this point, as we are that Jesus is our Savior.

The Revolutionary Conspiracy.

The "fierce" spirit in man, which is to characterise him "in the last days," is beginning to develop itself in good earnest. Instead of being subject one to another, almost every one is declaring his independence, thus manifesting the unfitness which is to be a sign of the last days. All are impatient for a change of some kind. The whole world is in a state of "perplexity," which is continually increasing. Turn which way they may, the people engaged in the party strife can see no ray of hope for better times; but all seems growing "worse and worse." The following is said to be the plan of operations by the Secessionists, who propose to form a new confederacy:—

1. The secession from the Union of all the slave States, including Virginia and Maryland.

2. The coup d'etat of a seizure and occupation by a Southern armed force of the city of Washington, including the public buildings, archives, etc., for the purposes of a Southern confederacy.

3. The expulsion (coup d'etat), by force of arms, of the existing federal government, including the present and the incoming administration, on the 3d or 4th of March.

4. The establishment of the general government of the Southern confederacy in Washington, and its proclamation to the world as the government which has superseded the ejected government of the United States."

How far this programme may be carried out, remains to be seen. Stirring events are at hand. Every christian should keep perfectly free from the war spirit and political strife, or he may soon expect to be a backslider.

The Chinese Revolutionists.

It has been said that the gospel has not yet been preached in China, and therefore the second coming of Christ cannot yet take place; for Jesus said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24: 14. But recent developments prove that China has heard the gospel, consequently the objection that has been urged on this point has no force in it now. The following will give some idea of the state of things in China:—

"Three English missionaries, Messrs. Hartwell, Crawford and Holmes, who at great risk paid a visit to Qung San and Suchau to gain authentic information of the principles, intentions, and mode of warfare of the Chinese rebels, have forwarded to the North China Herald a long and interesting account of their journey. They ascertained that the original King of the rebels, Hung-Sien-Tsen, is still living and well, and is the present reigning king at Nanking. The rebels observe the Sabbath on the same day with us; when not engaged in actual war, they meet regularly for social worship; they sing in their worship; they use Mr. Shuck's version of the Doxology; and for baptism they wipe the breast, implying cleansing of the heart. The following is a copy of their Doxology:

Praise to Shangti, who is the heavenly Holy Father; praise to Jesus, who is the Holy Savior. Praise to the holy Spiritual Wind, which is the Holy Ghost. Praise to the three persons, who are one true God.

Here is a brief abstract of their faith: Is the true doctrine like the doctrines of the world? It saves the soul of man that he may enjoy everlasting happiness. Those who are wise will diligently perform it, (i. e., conform to its teachings) and blessed are they who receive it. If a man search his heart and perceive his own sinfulness, the road to heaven is open to him. The mercy of our Heavenly Father is boundless. He spared not his first-born Son, but sent him down to the world to give up his life as a ransom, that he might forgive the sins of men. If a man know this doctrine, repent and depart from evil, his soul shall ascend to heaven.

The rebels also use a form of morning and evening prayer, and a blessing before meat, which are decidedly of a christian character."

The following extract from a letter of Chung Wang, the "Faithful King," and commander-in-chief of the Imperial forces of the Tae-Ping Teen Kok dynasty, to the British Plenipotentiary, Lord Eglin, will show that the gospel is quite well known in China. He says:—

"Christ's system of religion, which has hitherto only been practised in western counties, now flourishes in our middle country—China, which has had its commencement from our true and holy Lord. Every foreign minister near us in our country must be able fully to know these things, his own eyes seeing, and his own ears hearing them. . . . Again, the New Testament, which your honourable country so greatly prizes, is that which our heavenly dynasty has cut on blocks for printing; and though the languages are different, the meaning is but one, and soon we shall obey it, regard it, and thoroughly circulate it throughout China."

God hears Prayer.

If any one doubts it, let him read the history of George Muller's Orphan Asylum, at Bristol, England, at which seven hundred destitute orphans are daily provided for, in answer to prayer. The following extract will give the reader a faint idea of the management of the institution:—

"Its managers are all poor, but God sends them means, and has done so for years, and they never want. When straitened for accommodations for the increasing number of children appealing to them for support, though in the receipt of means only sufficient for daily expenses, they have sought in prayer for funds to build, and numerous and noble contributions, unsolicited of any one, have been poured into their hands, and large and costly houses have been erected. Helpers for the work have been obtained in answer to prayer; and large sums for missionary work have also been sought and obtained by the same means. This enterprise is well known in England and on the Continent, and its history is soon to appear in this country. Persons most familiar with it have sometimes styled it 'The Bristol Miracle,' so manifest is the hand of God in its affairs. God is also able to accomplish great things for us; and it is grateful to find in those set over us in church and State, as well as in the people themselves, a disposition to seek the aid of Him, who has thus far been our defense, and whose wisdom is sufficient for us in every emergency."

Many seem willing to believe that God did hear prayers many centuries since; but act and talk as though he did not at the present time. Truly there is but "little faith" in the professed church of Christ; and consequently but little works. We may well pray, "Lord, increase our faith."

"The Angel Movement."

These are truly strange times. All things indicate a grand crisis at hand. We learn that a "new phase in Spiritualism" is proposed by the spirits and their followers. Under the above heading, they give the following announcement:—

"New phase in Spiritualism! Great national symbolic out-wrought spiritual manifestation! All sects, denominations, creeds, parties, nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples now existing on the face of the earth, to be dissolved and pass away, and a new divine governmental order to arise instead. The judgment day, millennial morn, and resurrection of the dead at hand."

A Case of Healing.

We clipped the following from one of our exchanges. We are rejoiced to see the church becoming more interested in these things, and more follow the instruction of the Scriptures. The following account is from a correspondent of the Sandusky (O.) Register. The writer says;—

"A little over four years ago, a blacksmith living at Cherry-tree Corners, about four miles from Vermillion, was severely kicked by a horse while shoeing the animal. Since that time, and until very recently, the man has been unable to walk a step or leave his chair without assistance. About two months since the blacksmith, whose name is Willard, had a dream, or vision, directing him to be baptized by immersion at a time and place designated, if he desired to be cured of his malady. Mr. W. stated the circumstance to his family and neighbors, declaring his determination to strictly comply with the requirements of his vision. He expressed the utmost confidence in his restoration.

The affair created considerable excitement in the neighborhood and became the principal topic of conversation for miles around. On the appointed day, the 22d of March, several hundred people gathered at a point on Chapel Creek, where the ceremony was to take place. Mr. Willard arrived punctual to the hour, and was taken from his carriage to the bank of the stream. Two clergymen were present, but both refused to officiate, having no confidence in the so-called vision of the blacksmith. Two acquaintences of Mr. Willard expressed their willingness to assist in the solemn rite, and taking the sick man in their arms, they walked into the water. He was immersed in the usual manner, and when he arose to his feet, he cried, in a loud voice: 'Glory to God! I told you so! I told you it would cure me! All that was required was faith!' etc. Mr. Willard then walked unattended from the water, and received the hearty congratulations of of the multitude who crowded around him. He walked to his carriage with ease and elasticity, and to all appearance his lameness has entirely vanished."

But few seem to be aware of the amount of infidelity existing at the present time, even within the nominal church. While Protestantism is boasting of its progress, the following facts, relative to the city of New York, which we clipped from one of our exchanges in that city, will give us some idea of the kind of progression which is being made. The writer says:—

"We find in the religious daily a lengthy editoral upon 'The progress of heathenism in this city.' It is there stated that in the lower part of the fifteenth ward there are no less than five churches for sale, and that during the last twenty years thirty-two churches have been sold out below Grand street, and no others been erected in their places, though 'the resident population below that line is far larger now than then.' We learn from other sources that during the last ten years twenty more churches have been sold between Grand and Houston streets.

The present places of worship in the city, 'including some twenty-five mission stations, twenty-five Catholic churches, and twenty others un-evangelical, number 274,' with seats for 205,580 people, out of a population of 850,000, leaving over 600,000 unprovided for. In other words, two-thirds of the population of the city could not go to church if they would. Four hundred more edifices are needed to accommodate the whole city.

But in the language of a report made to the New York Evangelical Alliance, 'this is not the worst feature of the case.' Many of the present places of worship are never filled. The congregations do not probably average more than four hundred. Many capable of holding a thousand often seat less than two hundred.' Not more than from one-third to one-half of the 200,000 seats in the churches are regularly occupied.

This Evangelical Alliance, composed of members and pastors of various city churches, who have silently permitted, or themselves aided, this disposal of down-town churches, and the erection of up-town pagodas—palatial temples of worship, cushioned and carpeted to shut out the poor—now profess to awake to a painful consciousness of the destitution of the residents of the lower wards of the city, who most need religious instruction, and propose renting temporary places of worship, and calling the people in. They may accomplish this work to a limited extent, but we fear they have retraced their steps too late.

The World admits that 'seven-tenths of the people of our lower wards live on, as destitute of religious instruction as the heathen in the interior of Africa,' and that there is rank heathenism in our midst daily gathering more colossal magnitude and strength."

What is true of New York is also true of other large cities in all parts of our globe. Instead of an increase of religious interest, for the last few years it has been continually diminishing; running to a mere form, without the power. And, according to the Scriptures, there is no ground to hope for any improvement. The progress is great, but it is toward perdition. Dear reader, remember the Bible direction, "Be not conformed to this world."

Torture in Rome.

Notwithstanding the Catholics claim that their government is very paternal, causing the people to feel very contented under the government of the Pope, the following correspondence of the N. Y. Times presents a different phase of the matter. The writer says:—

"I landed in Genoa, from Boston, somewhere in 1853, and wishing to see the south of Italy, traveled till I came near Viterbo, when I was cautioned not to go to Rome; but I still persevered in my intention of doing so, when I was arrested as not having a passport, and carried to the Eternal City, where I was placed in the Carcere Nuovo. Not satisfied with the report which I gave of myself, I was tortured for three months as follows: My hands and arms were bound together, and then, by ropes tied round the upper part of the arms, they were drawn back till my breast protruded, and my bones sounded 'Crick! crick!'

There was another species of torment practiced upon me, which was this: At night while sleeping, the door was secretly opened, and buckets of water were thrown over my body. How I survived it I cannot tell. The keepers were astonished, and said they had never had such an instance. 'But you will never get out alive,' said the Caporale Rosaloi. I replied that I never expected so to do, and prayed for the angel of death to come.

The worst torture of all, however, was the prison itself, a room into which a few rays of light struggled from above, and the stench of which (for it had been used by the jailors as a privy) was as bad as death. For three months I suffered thus, and then, without any reason assigned, was taken from it and placed, always alone, in a room called the 'Salone dei Preti,' a large airy room, and was well fed and well treated for twenty-one months more. I was the prisoner of the cardinal secretary, Antonelli.

About the middle of 1855, again without reason being given, I was sent off to Naples; was placed first in the Vicaria, and afterward in San Francisco, in a small close room, where I have been detained four and a half years. I was questioned on several occasions, and at last refused to answer, saying that my persecutors already knew what I had to say; that I was unjustly and illegally confined, and nothing should compel me to utter another word.

On another occasion I was called before Bianchini, the director of police, who interrogated me. I appealed against my sufferings, and all the reply I received was, 'Va bene!' from a christian man to one suffering as I was. I have been asked to send a supplication for my liberation, but my invariable answer was, 'I will die; never will I ask anything of this government.'"

Extracts of a Philadelphian's Letters from Syria.

Jerusalem, July 1st, 1860.

When I came here in 1844, this city was in a miserable condition, streets crooked and dirty, houses poor and uncomfortable, business dull, and there was not a single building or improvement outside the Jaffa gate except the American cemetery. Now there are many new houses, a large school, gardens all walled in, with hundreds of thousands of olives, figs, vines and mulberries planted, roads and walks straightened, walled, and stones gathered out, and many cisterns built, coffee-houses built in all directions, where all classes of people of all nations, go in the cool of the day to smoke nargalias and tontoons, with sartokia or tobacco, and the fumes of them wafting all around, under the shade of large teribenth trees, accompanied with the soft and delightful tunes of the cannoon (a kind of horizontal harp,) and violin, and tamborines.

Forts and guard houses are now built all the way between here and Jaffa, within rifle-shot of each other. Within the walls of Jerusalem a person would hardly know it now, for streets have been straightened, new stores built, and business of all kinds revived. Large and beautiful churches, synagogues, hospitals, dispensaries, consulates of all nations erected, good hotels, large and fine dwelling houses built, in all directions, and over the streets, new and substantial arches have been sprung. Indeed rich men from Constantinople, Babylon, Bagdad, Damascus, Egypt, France, England, and from all parts of the known world, seem to be now vieing with each other in the improvement of Jerusalem.

The "Great Eastern Question" is, and has been, who shall possess this land? Russia makes the first grasp, and possession is nine-tenths in law. It is certainly true that Russia has actually taken possession of, not a small piece of this city, but a piece quite as large, west of the Jaffa gate, as the present city is east of it, and is enclosing it with a high and strong wall, and is now engaged in building very extensively upon it.

The nephew of Louis Phillippe and suite, also Rothschilds, of Vienna, were here during the month of April last.

Jerusalem, July 25th, 1860.

In a few weeks the Russians will have finished their great wall. There are twelve to fourteen hundred more of these ravenous and rapacious Northern bears expected here by the next steamer. The mother of the Russian Emperor will move at the same time. The Russians have their women to assist them in carrying dirt and stones. They build substantial and well, but in a very singular manner, their windows being eight to ten feet from the ground. Their building stones are squared and dressed well. They are extending and building up Jerusalem between one thousand and eleven hundred steps, or yards, (which is two-thirds of a mile) west of the main gate building walls and houses, and digging out great cisterns for water, making roads, laying out gardens and walks, planting thousand of olives, pomegranates and mulberries. They have repaired the roads all the way from Jerusalem to Jaffa, (thirty-five miles) easing up the highway preparing the way for the people by gathering out the stones. The Sultan has given the Emperor of Austria a firman to make a carriage road all the way from Jaffa.

He has built forts every half hour (which is 1 1-2 miles) between Jerusalem and Jaffa, which will make thirty-five or thirty-six in number, all of them looped (holed) with cannon holes, so that the whole distance can be reached by the best rifle or cannon shot. They are now blowing rocks, and making another carriage road from Jerusalem to the Convents of the Cross and St. John, and have got it partly walled and finished. They build the walls about four feet thick, and edge each side with large dressed stones, and fill the middle full with small stones; and strange to say this is all done by strangers, to a man; not a single Jew have I seen engaged in the whole work, much as they desire work at this dear time.

Minutes of the 10th Quarterly R. I. Conference.

Providence, Dec. 26th, 1860.

Conference met as adjourned from Danielsonville. The Moderator being absent, after trying some time to find some one that would serve, Bro. Macomber of Block Island was chosen Mod. pro tem. Prayer was offered by Bro. Hancock. Minutes of the last Conference were called for and read. They were accepted. The Moderator had then arrived, and took the chair. Delegates reported themselves from all churches excepting Foster, Chestnut Hill, and Danielsonville.

Motion made that brethren from abroad, not members, be invited to take part in our deliberations. Passed. It being the Annual meeting, the first business was the choice of officers for the ensuing year. After some difficulty in finding some one that would accept, Bro. P. C. Rodman, of Peace dale, was chosen Moderator. No one would accept the service of Clerk. The present Clerk was asked if he positively declined. He said he would serve rather than have the Conference stop; but thought there were others that might relieve him if they would, and he did not like the idea of having one man fill the office too long. Bro. Bellows then introduced a motion that Eld. M. R. Phetteplace become a member of this Conference. Passed. Bro. Phetteplace was then nominated for Clerk and chosen. Bro. Jno. P. Babcock was re-elected Treasurer.

A motion was then made that Bro. A. Bellows become a member of this Conference. Carried. The delegates were then called upon to report the condition of their respective churches. Bro. Babcock from River Point, reported that that church was in a prosperous condition. There has been a revival interest, both in the spiritual condition of the church and in the awakening of sinners to the importance of salvation. Two had been baptized under the labors of Eld. W. Sutherland.

Bro. Peckam reported from the Central Coventry church that it had been in a low condition, but the good Lord had again refreshed them with the spirit of his presence. Six have been baptized and several joined the church. Bro. Wood reported from Exeter church that they were laboring under many disadvantages, but the members were still spiritual stones offering up "spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." Bro. B. Arnold reported from Lafayette church that the conference meetings were interesting, having three a week. Five have recently joined the church.

Bro. C. T. Sweet, of Providence church, reported that the cloud of spiritual darkness and death had, at length, broken in mercy. The church has arisen from a dreamy slumber to vigilant activity in the cause of Christ, under the labors of Eld P. C. Rodman. A Sabbath school has been organized under the untiring efforts of Sr. H. B. Hastings, of the poor and despised, taken from their miserable haunts of poverty, clothed and prepared for the teaching of the gospel; and upon these benighted and poverty-stricken hearts has the blessed sunshine of heavenly grace beamed with its radiance of glory and salvation. Several have been converted. May the good Lord speed the work. Bro. Noka gave a very interesting account of his labors in Westerly, R. I. He had been laboring there for several weeks past and had seen the work of the Lord prospering. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, converts baptized, and he organized a church of sixteen. It is a good field for labor. Bro. J. D. Brown had been labor

A Singular Conversion.

Between two and three years ago, an intelligent and well educated young lady from a neighboring town came into this vicinity teach school. After a while she came to board for a few weeks in my family. I had been informed indirectly that she was a Spiritualist, and I somewhat disliked the idea of forming an acquaintance with her, but was fully resolved that on no occasion would I swerve from duty, or a full confession of my faith in the gospel of the Son of God. I soon found that I had been misinformed concerning her, and saw that she was deeply interested in the views I held, and which appeared new to her. She was very free to converse, and her many inquiries evinced deep thought, as well as an unbiased mind. These, with the oft-starting tear, betokened an interest too deep, as I thought, for an unrenewed heart, and at an early opportunity I asked her concerning her hopes of salvation. She said she had never publicly professed faith in Christ, but thought she had been converted a little more than a year before, and would like to relate to me what she had passed through. I thus became acquainted with the following facts:

Her parents were people of some property, occupying a respectable position in society. Her father was a professed Congregationalist, her mother a Baptist in sentiment, but had never united with a church. They were never in the habit of conversing personally on religious subjects, with their children, of whom Miss C. was the eldest. Her childhood was mostly spent with her grandmother until the age of fourteen, when she entered a Seminary for young ladies in Hartford, where she remained several years. During this time she attended, with her teachers, an Episcopal church, and was in the habit of observing their usual form of worship, both in public and private, but without any serious convictions. Her mind seemed mostly interested in her studies, and religion with her was only an outward form. During her last year at school she boarded with a family consisting only of a gentleman and his wife, in middle age, between whom and herself a strong attachment existed. A year or two after leaving school she returned to H. for a few months, and again boarded with her old friends. She heard previously that they had become Spiritualists, but, to use her own words, "that was something in which she felt no interest, and she would not trouble herself with it." They often introduced the subject, telling her of many marvelous things connected therewith, and urging her attention to it. She however remained indifferent, and the many books and papers they gave her, were received only to be transferred to her table without a passing notice.

One afternoon as she was sitting in her room, her eye fell on a pamphlet, which she took up and commenced reading without any object or interest. She had heard her friends tell of persons becoming writing mediums by yielding themselves to the spirits, and quick as thought, and more for fun than for any other reason, she drew toward her some paper, took her pen, dipped it in ink, and placed her hand in a proper position for writing. Immediately she felt a twitching of the nerves of her wrist, and finally her whole arm became affected, and she commenced writing in a rapid manner. This continued for several hours without any knowledge of what she was writing, or any power to stop. She was neither frightened nor excited, but seemed to have wholly lost the power of volition, and to be controlled by some foreign influence. Many sheets of paper were written over, in different styles of writing and on different subjects, purporting to be messages from friends (both living and dead,) in their own handwriting. It was nearly night when she stopped and went down to the family, and told them what had happened. They were much pleased, and told her she would become a superior writing medium. A little while after, while waiting for tea, she had a very singular exercise in which she was drawn into various positions—personating a very aged person, etc., until they all became somewhat alarmed.

From this time she was entirely under the influence of the spirits, for several weeks, until her health began to fail very perceptibly, the spirits telling her that she was soon to die. She was the subject of various exercises and manifestations. She grew very gloomy and sad and wished to be alone in her room. Many times she felt hungry and, on going to the table to eat, was forbidden, when her appetite would be suddenly gone, until she was nearly starved. She became very unhappy, her mind constantly excited by revelations of the spirits, some of which she began to doubt. She did not understand the nature of the influence she was under, and began to feel a desire to know if she was being deceived. Sometimes after a revelation something would seem to say to her, "that was all a lie." With these conflicting thoughts, passages of Scripture suited to her case would come to her mind and she felt that the Lord only could help her. In this state of mind she began to cry unto him. "O," said she, "how I did pray, as I never in my life prayed before."

While engaged thus at one time, she seemed to be suddenly delivered from the influence that had held her, and she was as one awakened from a dream. It was a final deliverance, and her mind was filled with a sweet peace, to which she had hitherto been a stranger. She rejoiced in the Lord, and felt like praising him continually, for what he had done for her. She began to live a new life, engaging with deep interest in prayer and study of the Bible. She longed much for christian society, for some one to whom she could unburden her heart, of whom she could ask advice, but as she knew no one, she locked her feelings in her own heart. Not even after her return home did she talk with her parents, because, as she said, "my case was so unlike that of others, I did not feel free to talk about it." Said she, "you are the first person who ever asked me if I were a christian." Yet she had been in the families of professed christians all summer.

I became deeply interested in her, and improved every opportunity of presenting the truth to her, and as the plan of redemption was unfolded to her mind, she was perfectly delighted, often remarking, "this is just what I've needed," and, "I have often felt impressed that there was something more for me." She seemed anxious to follow the Bible as her only sure guide, and said she had for some time seen baptism, as a duty, clearly presented to her.

Whenever Spiritualism was mentioned, she would say, "I believe it is a snare of the devil, and if one ever was delivered from it, I have been."

She attended meeting with me a few times and left town soon after. The same season she went South as a teacher of music, and failing to learn her address, I have never heard from her since, but have often prayed that the good seed sown may yet appear to the glory of God.

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

Permit me to say to our friends that it is impossible to remove all mystery from the existence of Jesus. Yet this mystery is not an absurdity, contradicting our consciousness like the doctrine of the trinity, for Paul declares the fact, (viz., God manifest in the flesh,) and calls it a great mystery. 1 Tim. 3:16. The Bible testimony is the testimony of God. God would not establish the word of an impostor. But he did establish the word of Jesus by raising him from the dead. Therefore whatever Jesus said is true. Jesus said; "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." John 6:38. "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" Verse 62. "Glorify thou me with the glory that I had with thee before the world was." John 17:5. Jesus therefore must have lived in another form before he was born of the Virgin Mary.

The Jews first raised the objection, which we sometimes hear repeated, viz.: How can this Jesus have had a pre-existence, come down from heaven, seeing we have known him and his parents from his infancy until this time? Jesus answers by saying; No man can come unto me, know and believe on me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him, enlighten and incline by his Holy Spirit. No man knoweth the Son but the Father. Matt. 11:27. No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Spirit. 1 Cor. 12:3. Happy art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for man has not revealed thee to me, but my Father which is in heaven. Matt. 16:17.

Though we may know every past and future event, and have all faith, if the knowledge and love of Jesus is not shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, we must soon be as though we had never been.

Cold Comfort.

Our brethren out West, who receive for their ministerial services but just enough to keep from starving, will see by the following that they are not alone. No doubt times are hard, but somebody is to blame for these things and somebody will be held responsible by the Master. T.

"Baptists in Wisconsin.—The Board of the State Convention report that of the two hundred Baptist churches in Wisconsin more than fifty are languishing and pressingly need pecuniary aid; and of the one hundred and forty ministers, more than half do not receive an adequate support, and are obliged to pursue some secular calling to make up the deficiency. Eight missionaries were employed during the year, for whom $996,26 were collected."

Queries.

Will Bro. J. S. White please answer through the Crisis the following questions on 2 Cor. 12:2—5?

1. Of the man Paul says he knew in Christ—does he mean himself or somebody else?

2. If he means himself in vers. 2 and 3, what meaning is there in verse 5, where he says, "of such a one will I glory; yet of myself I will not glory"?

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 30, 1861.

"Public Distress."

In the President's last message, he speaks of the present state of things as one of "public distress." We apprehend there will be still more reason to use the words "distress" and "perplexity" as we approach the great day of the Lord. A storm of gigantic dimensions is evidently approaching, about to burst upon the wicked nations of earth, that have forgotten God, and trampled his laws under their feet, with a degree of recklessness equalled only among the Antediluvians and Sodomites. They have boasted of their light and privileges, but have been more careless than the heathen. They must be filled with their own doings. They have mingled the cup, and the time has come for them to drink the bitter draught, even to the dregs. The oppressor's work is almost ended, and tyrants will soon finish their work of torment. The right is about to be vindicated, and the truth to enjoy an eternal triumph.

Civil War.

It appears to be almost certain that we are, as a nation, about entering into the horrors of civil war. The South Carolinians seem determined to take Fort Sumter, unless surrendered without a struggle. This fort, in Charleston harbor, is considered the strongest in the United States, and cannot be forcibly taken without a great destruction of life and property. But it is said to be the decision of the Carolinians to have it at all hazards. It is thought the President will firmly refuse to give up the United States forts at Charleston; hence, if the inhabitants of South Carolina keep their resolutions, as expressed, hard fighting will soon begin; but who can tell the awful results? Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia have already seceded. All these states, of course, will aid South Carolina in carrying on the war.

A few short months may witness thousands upon the battle field in bloody slaughter, while widows and orphans sit weeping in their desolated homes, and their husbands and fathers lie mangled among the slain. Three months since, but few thought of seeing what we now behold; but could we now unfold the future for six months to come, we apprehend the stoutest hearts would quail at the sight. We see no hope for brighter days till Jesus comes. Till then, we may expect the world will make rapid progress in every species of wickedness. We can hope for no "bow of peace" till the Prince of peace arrives. Soon all nations will mourn at the sign of his appearing: and the faithful ones will exclaim,—"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Dear reader, let us be found in that happy company.

What the Spirits Say.

The spirits keep talking; and they say many strange things which many are foolish enough to believe; preferring their lies to the truth of the Lord; thus putting themselves in the class named in 2 Thess. 2:10–12, where it is said, "They received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." Nearly all the men who are leaders in Spiritualism are backsliders, who have once had the light and truth, but have rejected it; hence left to be filled with their own ways, and trample upon their best interests here and hereafter.

But what do the spirits say? One recently said, "Heathen mythology is the basis of the christian religion, and not only the basis, but a law pervading every point of christianity .... The christian religion is but a portion of heathen mythology .... But the light of to-day gives you to know that you are gods." So Satan said to our first parents, but he was a liar from the beginning.

Another spirit says:—"If man would become satisfied of modern Spiritualism, he must first be satisfied that he is an immortal being." In this declaration we find the pith of Satan's lie, as declared to Adam and Eve. We are astonished that those who believe the Bible cannot see the origin of the doctrine that man is immortal in this present state; and also that the entire man lies dead between death and the resurrection. To us, there is not a plainer doctrine in the Scriptures; and, besides, it is in harmony with all true philosophy, as well as common sense. We feel thankful that every shade of doubt is removed from our mind on this subject. We are as well satisfied on this point, as we are that Jesus is our Savior.

The Revolutionary Conspiracy.

The "fierce" spirit in man, which is to characterise him "in the last days," is beginning to develop itself in good earnest. Instead of being subject one to another, almost every one is declaring his independence, thus manifesting the influence which is to be a sign of the last days. All are impatient for a change of some kind. The whole world is in a state of "perplexity," which is continually increasing. Turn which way they may, the people engaged in the party strife can see no ray of hope for better times; but all seems growing "worse and worse." The following is said to be the plan of operations by the Secessionists, who propose to form a new confederacy:—

1. The secession from the Union of all the slave States, including Virginia and Maryland.

2. The coup d'etat of a seizure and occupation by a Southern armed force of the city of Washington, including the public buildings, archives, etc., for the purposes of a Southern confederacy.

3. The expulsion (coup d'etat), by force of arms, of the existing federal government, including the present and the incoming administration, on the 3d or 4th of March.

4. The establishment of the general government of the Southern confederacy in Washington, and its proclamation to the world as the government which has superseded the ejected government of the United States."

How far this programme may be carried out, remains to be seen. Stirring events are at hand. Every christian should keep perfectly free from the war spirit and political strife, or he may soon expect to be a backslider.

The Chinese Revolutionists.

It has been said that the gospel has not yet been preached in China, and therefore the second coming of Christ cannot yet take place; for Jesus said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24:14. But recent developments prove that China has heard the gospel, consequently the objection that has been urged on this point has no force in it now. The following will give some idea of the state of things in China:—

"Three English missionaries, Messrs. Hartwell, Crawford and Holmes, who at great risk paid a visit to Qung San and Suchau to gain authentic information of the principles, intentions, and mode of warfare of the Chinese rebels, have forwarded to the North China Herald a long and interesting account of their journey. They ascertained that the original King of the rebels, Hung-Sien-Tsen, is still living and well, and is the present reigning king at Nanking. The rebels observe the Sabbath on the same day with us; when not engaged in actual war, they meet regularly for social worship; they sing in their worship; they use Mr. Shuck's version of the Doxology; and for baptism they wipe the breast, implying cleansing of the heart. The following is a copy of their Doxology:

Praise to Shangti, who is the heavenly Holy Father; praise to Jesus, who is the Holy Savior. Praise to the holy Spiritual Wind, which is the Holy Ghost. Praise to the three persons, who are one true God.

Here is a brief abstract of their faith: Is the true doctrine like the doctrines of the world? It saves the soul of man that he may enjoy everlasting happiness. Those who are wise will diligently perform it, (i. e., conform to its teachings) and blessed are they who receive it. If a man search his heart and perceive his own sinfulness, the road to heaven is open to him. The mercy of our Heavenly Father is boundless. He spared not his first-born Son, but sent him down to the world to give up his life as a ransom, that he might forgive the sins of men. If a man know this doctrine, repent and depart from evil, his soul shall ascend to heaven.

The rebels also use a form of morning and evening prayer, and a blessing before meat, which are decidedly of a christian character."

The following extract from a letter of Chung Wang, the "Faithful King," and commander-in-chief of the Imperial forces of the Tae-Ping Teen Kok dynasty, to the British Plenipotentiary, Lord Elgin, will show that the gospel is quite well known in China. He says:—

"Christ's system of religion, which has hitherto only been practised in western counties, now flourishes in our middle country—China, which has had its commencement from our true and holy Lord. Every foreign minister near us in our country must be able fully to know these things, his own eyes seeing, and his own ears hearing them. . . . Again, the New Testament, which your honorable country so greatly prizes, is that which our heavenly dynasty has out on blocks for printing; and though the languages are different, the meaning is but one, and soon we shall obey it, regard it, and thoroughly circulate it throughout China."

God hears Prayer.

If any one doubts it, let him read the history of George Muller's Orphan Asylum, at Bristol, England, at which seven hundred destitute orphans are daily provided for, in answer to prayer. The following extract will give the reader a faint idea of the management of the institution:—

"Its managers are all poor, but God sends them means, and has done so for years, and they never want. When straitened for accommodations for the increasing number of children appealing to them for support, though in the receipt of means only sufficient for daily expenses, they have sought in prayer for funds to build, and numerous and noble contributions, unsolicited of any one, have been poured into their hands, and large and costly houses have been erected. Helpers for the work have been obtained in answer to prayer; and large sums for missionary work have also been sought and obtained by the same means. This enterprise is well known in England and on the Continent, and its history is soon to appear in this country. Persons most familiar with it have sometimes styled it 'The Bristol Miracle,' so manifest is the hand of God in its affairs. God is also able to accomplish great things for us; and it is grateful to find in those set over us in church and State, as well as in the people themselves, a disposition to seek the aid of Him who has thus far been our defense, and whose wisdom is sufficient for us in every emergency."

Many seem willing to believe that God did hear prayers many centuries since; but act and talk as though he did not at the present time. Truly there is but "little faith" in the professed church of Christ; and consequently but little works. We may well pray, "Lord, increase our faith."

"The Angel Movement."

These are truly strange times. All things indicate a grand crisis at hand. We learn that a "new phase in Spiritualism" is proposed by the spirits and their followers. Under the above heading, they give the following announcement:—

"New phase in Spiritualism! Great national symbolic out-wrought spiritual manifestation! All sects, denominations, creeds, parties, nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples now existing on the face of the earth, to be dissolved and pass away, and a new divine governmental order to arise instead. The judgment day, millennial morn, and resurrection of the dead at hand."

A Case of Healing.

We clipped the following from one of our exchanges. We are rejoiced to see the church becoming more interested in these things, and more follow the instruction of the Scriptures. The following account is from a correspondent of the Sandusky (O.) Register. The writer says;—

"A little over four years ago, a blacksmith living at Cherry-tree Corners, about four miles from Vermillion, was severely kicked by a horse while shoeing the animal. Since that time, and until very recently, the man has been unable to walk a step or leave his chair without assistance. About two months since the blacksmith, whose name is Willard, had a dream, or vision, directing him to be baptized by immersion at a time and place designated, if he desired to be cured of his malady. Mr. W. stated the circumstance to his family and neighbors, declaring his determination to strictly comply with the requirements of his vision. He expressed the utmost confidence in his restoration.

The affair created considerable excitement in the neighborhood and became the principal topic of conversation for miles around. On the appointed day, the 22d of March, several hundred people gathered at a point on Chapel Creek, where the ceremony was to take place. Mr. Willard arrived punctual to the hour, and was taken from his carriage to the bank of the stream. Two clergymen were present, but both refused to officiate, having no confidence in the so-called vision of the blacksmith. Two acquaintences of Mr. Willard expressed their willingness to assist in the solemn rite, and taking the sick man in their arms, they walked into the water. He was immersed in the usual manner, and when he arose to his feet, he cried, in a loud voice: 'Glory to God! I told you so! I told you it would cure me! All that was required was faith!' etc. Mr. Willard then walked unattended from the water, and received the hearty congratulations of of the multitude who crowded around him. He walked to his carriage with ease and elasticity, and to all appearance his lameness has entirely vanished."

But few seem to be aware of the amount of infidelity existing at the present time, even within the nominal church. While Protestantism is boasting of its progress, the following facts, relative to the city of New York, which we clipped from one of our exchanges in that city, will give us some idea of the kind of progression which is being made. The writer says:—

"We find in the religious daily a lengthy editoral upon 'The progress of heathenism in this city.' It is there stated that in the lower part of the fifteenth ward there are no less than five churches for sale, and that during the last twenty years thirty-two churches have been sold out below Grand street, and no others been erected in their places, though 'the resident population below that line is far larger now than then.' We learn from other sources that during the last ten years twenty more churches have been sold between Grand and Houston streets.

The present places of worship in the city, 'including some twenty-five mission stations, twenty-five Catholic churches, and twenty others un-evangelical, number 274,' with seats for 205,580 people, out of a population of 850,000, leaving over 600,000 unprovided for. In other words, two-thirds of the population of the city could not go to church if they would. Four hundred more edifices are needed to accommodate the whole city.

But in the language of a report made to the New York Evangelical Alliance, 'this is not the worst feature of the case.' Many of the present places of worship are never filled. The congregations do not probably average more than four hundred. 'Many capable of holding a thousand often seat less than two hundred.' Not more than from one-third to one-half of the 200,000 seats in the churches are regularly occupied.

This Evangelical Alliance, composed of members and pastors of various city churches, who have silently permitted, or themselves aided, this disposal of down-town churches, and the erection of up-town pagodas—palatial temples of worship, cushioned and carpeted to shut out the poor—now profess to awake to a painful consciousness of the destitution of the residents of the lower wards of the city, who most need religious instruction, and propose renting temporary places of worship, and calling the people in. They may accomplish this work to a limited extent, but we fear they have retraced their steps too late.

The World admits that 'seven-tenths of the people of our lower wards live on, as destitute of religious instruction as the heathen in the interior of Africa,' and that there is rank heathenism in our midst daily gathering more colossal magnitude and strength.'"

What is true of New York is also true of other large cities in all parts of our globe. Instead of an increase of religious interest, for the last few years it has been continually diminishing; running to a mere form, without the power. And, according to the Scriptures, there is no ground to hope for any improvement. The progress is great, but it is toward perdition. Dear reader, remember the Bible direction, "Be not conformed to this world."

Torture in Rome.

Notwithstanding the Catholics claim that their government is very paternal, causing the people to feel very contented under the government of the Pope, the following correspondence of the N. Y. Times presents a different phase of the matter. The writer says:—

"I landed in Genoa, from Boston, somewhere in 1853, and wishing to see the south of Italy, traveled till I came near Viterbo, when I was cautioned not to go to Rome; but I still persevered in my intention of doing so, when I was arrested as not having a passport, and carried to the Eternal City, where I was placed in the Carcere Nuovo. Not satisfied with the report which I gave of myself, I was tortured for three months as follows: My hands and arms were bound together, and then, by ropes tied round the upper part of the arms, they were drawn back till my breast protruded, and my bones sounded 'Crick! crick!'

There was another species of torment practiced upon me, which was this: At night while sleeping, the door was secretly opened, and buckets of water were thrown over my body. How I survived it I cannot tell. The keepers were astonished, and said they had never had such an instance. 'But you will never get out alive,' said the Caporale Rosaloi. I replied that I never expected so to do, and prayed for the angel of death to come.

The worst torture of all, however, was the prison itself, a room into which a few rays of light struggled from above, and the stench of which (for it had been used by the jailors as a privy) was as bad as death. For three months I suffered thus, and then, without any reason assigned, was taken from it and placed, always alone, in a room called the 'Salone dei Preti,' a large airy room, and was well fed and well treated for twenty-one months more. I was the prisoner of the cardinal secretary, Antonelli.

About the middle of 1855, again without reason being given, I was sent off to Naples; was placed first in the Vicaria, and afterward in San Francisco, in a small close room, where I have been detained four and a half years. I was questioned on several occasions, and at last refused to answer, saying that my persecutors already knew what I had to say; that I was unjustly and illegally confined, and nothing should compel me to utter another word.

On another occasion I was called before Bianchini, the director of police, who interrogated me. I appealed against my sufferings, and all the reply I received was, 'Va bene!' from a christian man to one suffering as I was. I have been asked to send a supplication for my liberation, but my invariable answer was, 'I will die; never will I ask anything of this government.'"

Extracts of a Philadelphian's Letters from Syria.

Jerusalem, July 1st, 1860.

When I came here in 1844, this city was in a miserable condition, streets crooked and dirty, houses poor and uncomfortable, business dull, and there was not a single building or improvement outside the Jaffa gate except the American cemetery. Now there are many new houses, a large school, gardens all walled in, with hundreds of thousands of olives, figs, vines and mulberries planted, roads and walks straightened, walled, and stones gathered out, and many cisterns built, coffee-houses built in all directions, where all classes of people of all nations, go in the cool of the day to smoke nargalias and tontoons, with sartokia or tobacco, and the fumes of them wafting all around, under the shade of large teribenth trees, accompanied with the soft and delightful tunes of the cannoon (a kind of horizontal harp,) and violin, and tamborines.

Forts and guard houses are now built all the way between here and Jaffa, within rifle-shot of each other. Within the walls of Jerusalem a person would hardly know it now, for streets have been straightened, new stores built, and business of all kinds revived. Large and beautiful churches, synagogues, hospitals, dispensaries, consulates of all nations erected, good hotels, large and fine dwelling houses built, in all directions, and over the streets, new and substantial arches have been sprung. Indeed rich men from Constantinople, Babylon, Bagdad, Damascus, Egypt, France, England, and from all parts of the known world, seem to be now vieing with each other in the improvement of Jerusalem.

The "Great Eastern Question" is, and has been, who shall possess this land? Russia makes the first grasp, and possession is nine-tenths in law. It is certainly true that Russia has actually taken possession of, not a small piece of this city, but a piece quite as large, west of the Jaffa gate, as the present city is east of it, and is enclosing it with a high and strong wall, and is now engaged in building very extensively upon it.

The nephew of Louis Philippe and suite, also Rothschilds, of Vienna, were here during the month of April last.

Jerusalem, July 25th, 1860.

In a few weeks the Russians will have finished their great wall. There are twelve to fourteen hundred more of these ravenous and rapacious Northern Bears expected here by the next summer. The mother of the Russian Emperor will move at the same time. The Russians have their women to assist them in carrying dirt and stones. They build substantial and well, but in a very singular manner, their windows being eight to ten feet from the ground. Their building stones are squared and dressed well. They are extending and building up Jerusalem between one thousand and eleven hundred steps, or yards, (which is two-thirds of a mile) west of the main gate building walls and houses, and digging out great cisterns for water, making roads, laying out gardens and walks, planting thousand of olives, pomegranates and mulberries. They have repaired the roads all the way from Jerusalem to Jaffa, (thirty-five miles) casing up the highway preparing the way for the people by gathering out the stones. The Sultan has given the Emperor of Austria a firman to make a carriage road all the way from Jaffa.

He has built forts every half hour (which is 1 1-2 miles) between Jerusalem and Jaffa, which will make thirty-five or thirty-six in number, all of them looped (holed) with cannon holes, so that the whole distance can be reached by the best rifle or cannon shot. They are now blowing rocks, and making another carriage road from Jerusalem to the Convents of the Cross and St. John, and have got it partly walled and finished. They build the walls about four feet thick, and edge each side with large dressed stones, and fill the middle full with small stones; and strange to say this is all done by strangers, to a man; not a single Jew have I seen engaged in the whole work, much as they desire work at this dear time.

For the Crisis.

Minutes of the 10th Quarterly R. I. Conference.

Providence, Dec. 26th, 1860.

Conference met as adjourned from Danielsonville. The Moderator being absent, after trying some time to find some one that would serve, Bro. Macomber of Block Island was chosen Mod. pro tem. Prayer was offered by Bro. Hancock. Minutes of the last Conference were called for and read. They were accepted. The Moderator had then arrived, and took the chair. Delegates reported themselves from all churches excepting Foster, Chestnut Hill, and Danielsonville.

Motion made that brethren from abroad, not members, be invited to take part in our deliberations. Passed. It being the Annual meeting, the first business was the choice of officers for the ensuing year. After some difficulty in finding some one that would accept, Bro. P. C. Rodman, of Peace dale, was chosen Moderator. No one would accept the service of Clerk. The present Clerk was asked if he positively declined. He said he would serve rather than have the Conference stop; but thought there were others that might relieve him if they would, and he did not like the idea of having one man fill the office too long. Bro. Bellows then introduced a motion that Eld. M. R. Phetteplace become a member of this Conference. Passed. Bro Phetteplace was then nominated for Clerk and chosen. Bro. Jno. P. Babcock was re-elected Treasurer.

A motion was then made that Bro. A. Bellows become a member of this Conference. Carried. The delegates were then called upon to report the condition of their respective churches. Bro. Babcock from River Point, reported that that church was in a prosperous condition. There has been a revival interest, both in the spiritual condition of the church and in the awakening of sinners to the importance of salvation. Two had been baptized under the labors of Eld. W. Sutherland.

Bro. Peckam reported from the Central Coventry church that it had been in a low condition, but the good Lord had again refreshed them with the spirit of his presence. Six have been baptized and several joined the church. Bro. Wood reported from Exeter church that they were laboring under many disadvantages, but the members were still spiritual stones offering up "spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." Bro. B. Arnold reported from Lafayette church that the conference meetings were interesting, having three a week. Five have recently joined the church.

Bro. C. T. Sweet, of Providence church, reported that the cloud of spiritual darkness and death had, at length, broken in mercy. The church has arisen from a dreamy slumber to vigilant activity in the cause of Christ, under the labors of Eld. P. C. Rodman. A Sabbath school has been organized under the untiring efforts of Sr. H. B. Hastings, of the poor and despised, taken from their miserable haunts of poverty, clothed and prepared for the teaching of the gospel; and upon these benighted and poverty-stricken hearts has the blessed sunshine of heavenly grace beamed with its radiance of glory and salvation. Several have been converted. May the good Lord speed the work. Bro. Noka gave a very interesting account of his labors in Westerly, R. I. He had been laboring there for several weeks past and had seen the work of the Lord prospering. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, converts baptized, and he organized a church of sixteen. It is a good field for labor. Bro. J. D. Brown had been labor ing in Danville and vicinity, and different places in Western N. Y. A good interest had been manifested in the different places in which he had labored. Several had risen for prayers but he could not stay to see the work finished. Bro. Macomber, of Block Island, believed in persevering. There were a few laboring christians on the Island who kept the seventh day.

Bro. Babcock then offered some amendments to the Constitution. On motion they were laid on the table and each member ordered to be presented with a copy. (The Clerk, through mistake, not having said amendments, will see they are published before the next Conference.) A letter was then read from Exeter church requesting the ordination of Bro. Wood to the gospel ministry. Motion made by Bro. Bellows that he be ordained Friday afternoon. Carried. Bro. E. Bellows proposed that when the Conference adjourned it meet at River Point the last Friday instead of the last Wednesday of March in 1861. Moved and carried. The remainder of the day was occupied in discussing the following proposition: "Are the ten commandments binding on the people of God now?" Bro. Sweet, who introduced the proposition, Hancock and Macomber, maintained the affirmative and argued in behalf of the seventh day Sabbath: Brn. Brown and Bellows in the negative. The discussion was conducted in a christian spirit and much ability on both sides, and we trust that much good was done thereby. The discussion occupied most of Thursday. A conference meeting occupied the early part of the evening, which had for its seal the spirit and power of God. The meeting closed with an interesting and cheering discourse by Bro. S. C. Hancock, founded on Acts 17: 30, 31. That we should repent not for the fear of death but in view of the judgment, was clearly demonstrated. Bro. Hancock requested ordination. Granted. Prayer of ordination of Bro. Hancock by Eld. P. C. Rodman. Charge by the same. Prayer of ordination of Bro. Wood by Eld. Peter Noka. Charge by Eld. J. D. Brown. Ordination sermon by M. R. Phetteplace, founded on 2 Tim. 4: 2, showing why, how, when and where the Word should be preached, and the importance of having it preached in the spirit of Christ. Discourse in the evening by Eld. W. Sutherland. The Clerk not being present cannot state the particulars.

The conference meetings throughout the Conference were highly spiritual, earnest and cheering to the way-worn pilgrim. The Conference closed with the conviction resting upon our minds it was the best we have ever enjoyed. Although there were none who openly professed religion, of the unregenerate, we trust it will result in great good to the church in this place.

M. R. Phetteplace, Clerk.

For the Crisis.

"Who is Right?"

[ANSWER TO BRO. GILLESPIE.]

"To the Law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them."

Many of the brethren quote the verse preceding the above in Isaiah 8: 19, and if the language is applicable to this day of lying wonders, etc., of the spirits of devils, why should not the verse following be also? My dear Bro., we will notice in the first place that God made a law and through a disobedience of that law by our first parents, death, with all of its pains and sorrows, has come upon mankind. We read in Gen. 2: 3—"And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," or, "set apart for a Sabbath," as we find in reading Ex. 20: 10, and many other parts of holy writ. I might cite your attention to the New, as well as to the Old. Fifty times the seventh day is mentioned in the New Testament, and considered by the apostles and disciples as the Sabbath before and after the crucifixion of our dear Lord, as we read in Mark 15: 42,—"And now the even was come because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath," etc.

We find that the disciples regarded the day insomuch that they deferred the anointing of Jesus until the first day of the week, as is recorded by Luke 16: 1, 2.

We notice that Jehovah has stirred up the minds of his children occasionally to observe his laws, and has shown his people by miracle, as we read in Ex. 16: 27, 28. You will notice here, Bro., that it is not Moses' law, but God's law, as in verse 28: —"And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?"

You observed the law (Mosaic) was "our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." So it was, but we must remember that there is a difference between God's holy law that he took pains to write with his own finger upon the tables of stone, choosing these undoubtedly as an emblem of their durability. Now the law (Mosaic) required sacrifices, bullocks, lambs, doves and pigeons, etc., all these pointing to Christ the great Sacrifice. When he gave himself a sacrifice, it was the fulfilling of that law (Mosaic) that required blood, etc. But we hear Jesus saying, "I come not to destroy the law nor the prophets"—no more one than the other. Have we not the good word of prophecy now? Have we not the good law now? Jesus says he came to make the law honorable. He first honored his Father's law, and says to them that come to him to know what they should do to inherit eternal life, "Keep the commandments." He requires the same of us—the same law unaltered. I cannot think that Jehovah made a law and has found a defect in it. The law of rites and ceremonies was good in its day, it was all good in the wisdom of God and had its designed object; and the moral law will also have its effect, as it is transferred from the tables of stone to the heart. We nowhere find that it has been altered.

Paul, speaking to the Romans by his Epistle 2: 12,—"For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law." 13th verse: "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." Again, more definite in regard to God's moral law, the ten commandments, we find recorded in James 1: 25,—"But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Again, chap. 2: 8,—"If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scriptures, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well."

Finally, when the wrath of God is poured out without mixture, which I am convinced is but one step before us, then we shall want patience, such as will endure all things. We find there will be God's dear children having this patience, as we read in Rev. 14: 12,—"Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God."* Is it right to obey God? You and every professed follower of Christ will say yes. Now let us make the application to ourselves, and may the Lord assist us to search our hearts as Jerusalem was searched with lighted candles, and give us grace to strip from them every wrong, and then we shall walk uprightly before the Lord, and he will not withhold any good thing from us. What a blessed company that will be. Hallelujah! Glory to God! I mean to be one of the number that is spoken of in Rev. 22: 14, —"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." But I expect to be placed in the position where I shall call upon the Lord to deliver out of great trouble, as the Scripture saith, Jer. 30: 7,—"Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble," etc.

E. Macomber.

* I understand this to mean the ten commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus his Son. E. M.

Correspondence.

From L. H. Washburn.

Bro. Grant:—I see in the last number of the "Crisis" an editorial, urging upon our preachers to contribute by their pens to the "Crisis;" and among the many very good reasons why they should do so is— "A large number of our readers have no other preaching but what they get through the columns of their paper."

Now I wish to add a full endorsement to that, and if I may take the liberty, to urge upon all those that are standing upon the watch-tower of Zion to write! write!! You do not know how cheering it it to us who are out in the West, and have no other means of hearing from you or of hearing the truth as it is in Jesus, to read your epistles. May the Holy Spirit move you to preach to us through that thrice welcome messenger, the "Crisis."

It is true that in this immediate locality we are few in numbers who are looking for the immediate return of our blessed Savior, but we are none the less interested in the spread of the glad tidings that our Lord and Master will soon appear to reign King of kings and Lord over all.

Our dear brethren, P. B. Morgan, M. Chandler, and W. Pratt, have labored with us as often as they could within the past three years, but we being so poor as to this world's goods that we could not support them without doing injustice to our own families, they have had to go where they could get sufficient remuneration to support them. May He who cares for the needy be with them and provide abundantly for all their wants, both temporal and spiritual —and may we all meet at last in the new heavens and new earth, where we shall never want for anything, and where we may drink in the waters of eternal life without money and without price.

Again let me urge upon our dear brethren to write—time is short, the nations are angry, the last vials, it would seem, are about to be poured out, and we want to hear from the watchmen, what of the night?

Yours in Christ looking for his speedy return and hoping to be a sharer in the gifts of our great Life Giver.

Muscatine, Iowa, Jan. 14th, 1861.

From Sr. E. S. Willard.

Bro. Grant:—Thanks be to God for what we are enjoying here in the opening of this new year. Six precious souls in our Bible class have expressed hope in Christ and are awaiting the coming of Bro. Cook, for whom we have written to plant them in the likeness of his death, that they may be also raised in the likeness of his resurrection, to walk in a new life. We simply followed the leadings of God's Holy Spirit, and appointed a prayer meeting at the house of the three young ladies who first sought and found Jesus precious the last Lord's day in the old year. This meeting was in the evening of the National Fast day; and such a meeting as it was! A perfect baptism of the Holy Spirit to the praying souls present, and a conviction of "sin, of righteousness and a judgment to come" to the unconverted present, all young, and some of them having denied themselves the pleasure of going to the ball given in honor of the young people especially, to please those who had invited them to come. All were in tears, and some of them groaning aloud for mercy. After the meeting broke up these young people stayed and had a prayer meeting of their own, and vowed together to be the Lord's, and expressed their thanks that they did not go to the ball. We met again on Sunday eve., and the interest still continued, and they appointed a union prayer meeting to be holden every night this week. Last night two youth, of about 17 and 19, members of our class, rose and professed faith in Jesus as their Savior. O bless God! Pray for us in this new place.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in this city, 16th inst., Sarah F., wife of Calvin Hutchins, aged thirty-two.

Sister Hutchins has been a patient sufferer for the last two years; but death would not yield his victim, and she fell under the conqueror at last. Though anxious to live to be useful in the service of Him who was her chief support in the trying hours, her faith held out to the last that God would be glorified in whatever he willed for her future, whether life or death. She believed that she would sleep with the saints but a short time, and looked beyond the gloom of the grave to the new earth, made glorious for her abode, with the loving and faithful, where no pain would come, no sleepless nights, no tears or sighs, no griefs or fears, but one eternal home of peace, where the molten sea of glory will cover the whole vast host of the redeemed. The thought of that blissful meeting so enraptured her vision that she longed for its commencement with almost impatient desire. The sound of prayer was comfort to her, and could she but make one more request, it would be to remember in your prayers her little ones left without a mother's care.

She was taken for burial to Dayton, Me., her native place.

W. C. Stone.

Died, in Hartford, Nov. 1st, 1860, Bro. D. B. Pierson, aged thirty-six.

Bro. Pierson was converted in 1852 among the Methodists, but not feeling free to join the church, remained without membership anywhere, until in 1854, when he received the truth of the soon coming of Christ as the Life-giver, and united with the Advent Church in Bridgeport. In 1857 he removed to Hartford, and united with the Adventists here. Although but three years a resident, and an entire stranger when he came, yet at the time of his death he was greatly endeared to a large circle of friends, who manifested their sympathy by filling the church on the funeral occasion.

Bro. A. Ross attended the funeral, and gave us a very impressive discourse on the reasons of our hope.

Bro. P. was one of those who are ready to do what they can for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and he has left us good reason to believe that he sleeps in Jesus.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 12th.]

It is officially announced that the French fleet leaves Gaeta on the 19th.

ITALY.

The intelligence from Gaeta is contradictory. One dispatch asserts that an armistice of ten days has been signed. Another says the Piedmontese had redoubled their vigilance and activity before Gaeta. And the Paris Moniteure says the negotiations for an armistice remained without result.

A correspondent of the Times has been ordered to quit Rome.

CHINA.

The Hong Kong mail of Nov. 29th reached Marseilles on the 10th.

The following is from the Government telegram: The whole army had left Pekin, excepting about 1500 men, who remained at Hosur, and reached Tien Sin on the 17th.

The treaty, with the Emperor's consent, was posted on the walls of Pekin. He was arranging for the residence of Mr. Bruce, the English Minister. Mr Bruce, in the meantime, winters at Tien Sin. A Chinese representative is to reside in England.

All of the important Chinese ports are open to trade, and permission has been granted for foreign steamers to trade in the inland waters.

The rebels were again threatening Shanghae and Ningpo, causing the greatest alarm. Civil disturbances were also anticipated at Foo-choo-foo.

WAR RUMORS.

The Turin correspondent of the London Times writes:

"There are men, however, who still feel uneasy as they look at the signs of the times. The Emperor Napoleon, they think, is still going to do a job for the Italians. He has still Venetia to conquer for them. There is little doubt in the minds of these deep searchers into men's intentions that Garibaldi, Cavour, and Napoleon, whether by a secret understanding, or unintentionally playing into each other's hands, have for some time been plotting a final stroke to be presently dealt against Austria. Ships laden with rifled field pieces, muskets, ammunition, and every variety of warlike material have been seized by the Turkish Government at the mouth of the Danube. The ostensible owners of these contraband goods were, it would seem, Garibaldi and his Hungarian friends, and the object of the expedition, it is obvious to surmise, was an attack upon Austria in Hungary, favored by a simultaneous attack on Venetia."

FOUR DAYS LATER.

It is stated that several rifled cannon have been shipped from Liverpool for Charleston.

Hostilities have been suspended at Gaeta. Part of the French fleet had left and all of the fleet would leave on the 19th.

It is reported that a Congress will meet in Paris to settle the Italian question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says that people seem fully convinced the armistice will expire without any decision of Francis II. to surrender.

It is understood that General Turr has consented to act as mediator between Cavour and Garibaldi, with a view to persuade the latter to post pone his threatened attack on Venice in the spring.

DOMESTIC.

Continued Preparations to attack Fort Pickens.—Pensacola, Jan. 24th.—Volunteers are engaged in mounting and ranging cannons, carpenters are making scaling ladders, and the utmost bustle prevails.

The Wyandotte is anchored west of Fort Pickens, under her guns, and it is supposed she will assist Lieut. Slimmer in defense. The Pilots have been notified that they may bring government vessels into the harbor if they bear a flag of truce.

A special despatch to the American says that the Charleston Vigilance Committee have discovered that a man named Dodge, a soldier at Fort Moultrie, was the correspondent of the New York Tribune, and compelled him to leave the State.

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 24.—The Committee of Fifteen reported an ordinance dissolving all connection with the United States; but all treaties, acts of Congress, etc., not incompatible with the ordinance of secession, are to remain in force; also recognizing the right of ingress and egress to and from the mouths of the Mississippi river by all friendly States, and declaring the willingness of Louisiana to enter into stipulations or guaranties for the exercise of those rights.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 25.—The U. S. steamer Brooklyn sailed yesterday with sealed orders for the South, with two companies on board for Fort Monroe.

No Mutiny.—New York, Jan. 24.—The Herald's Washington dispatch says that a letter from Fort Sumter denies that there had been mutiny in the garrison. It also states that the whole command are in good spirits, and prepared to defend the fort to the last extremity. Two steamers watched the Fort all night of the 19th, and mortars had been planted by the South Carolinians, on the nearest land to Fort Sumter.

The Southern Senators are telegraphing home to have peace preserved.

Attack on Sumter Imminent.—New York, Jan. 25.—The Post's Washington correspondent says that the buoys in the harbor of Mobile have been removed; also that two thousand persons are engaged in building fortifications on the islands in Charleston harbor, but they could be easily taken. An attack on Fort Sumter is liable to take place at any moment by the populace, who are displeased with Governor Pickens policy.

Washington, Jan. 26. The French Minister has received assurances of the anxiety and sympathy of the French government under the present American troubles. France hopes for a continuance of the Union for commercial reasons.

Letters from Springfield say that Mr. Lincoln opposes all concessions.

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 28. In the House, to-day, a resolution was passed instructing the Senators, and requesting the Representatives at Washington to vacate their seats and return home.

In the Senate, a resolution was passed that Louisiana will regard any attempt to coerce her sister Southern States as a hostile act.

Charleston, Jan. 28. The Legislature to-day unanimously resolved while acknowledging the courtesy of the Virginia Legislature in sending commissioners to South Carolina, to decline having any intercourse on the subject proposed—regarding her separation from the Union as final and irrevocable.

The correspondence of Col. Hayne with Governor Pickens, with the former at Washington, was considered to-day in Executive session. It appears that the ultimatum of South Carolina was the surrender of Fort Sumter and withdrawal of the Federal troops.

The War in the Spring.—The impression is deep and settled that unless Venetia is either ceded or sold by Austria to Piedmont, there will be a most bloody war in the Spring. Preparations are being made on all hands. Garibaldi makes no secret of his intentions, and Austria is strengthening her defenses. The hope of the King of Naples is that he may hold out until the war opens in the north of Italy, as this will demand troops at the north, and thus leave the Neapolitan territory less defended. The Pope hopes to secure delays until the war rages, when the contending parties will have enough to do to take care of themselves and let him alone. But all is in the hands of the wise and merciful Ruler of Nations, and he will dispose of this and any other question as shall best promote the happiness of men and show forth his glory.—Cor. of Independent.

By the same, Dec. 26th, in Eastham, Mass., Mr. Wm. Rich of Truro, and Miss Mercy C. Dill of Eastham.

Notices, &c.

Eld. M. Grant in Canada East.

In compliance with the earnest solicitation of the church in Danville, C. E., Eld. Miles Grant will commence a series of meetings on Sabbath, Feb. 10th, and continue over the following Lord's day.

In behalf of the church, J. Porter.

Quarterly Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be held in the Bean school-house, Mt Vernon, about three miles east of the village, to commence Thursday, 1 o'clock, P. M., Feb. 21st, and continue over Sunday. I am instructed to say that the Christian church and friends will sustain the conference. We shall expect to see all our ministers present who belong to this conference, and hope to see those from other parts who can come. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can come to work for the Lord, that his cause may be revived and sinners converted. Behold the Judge standeth at the door; soon our work will be over and the end come. Let us work while it is day. Brethren from abroad will come into the place and find directions where to put up. We have not the names of persons to give.

I. C. Wellcome, Scribe.

Richmond, Me., Jan. 23d, 1861.

☞ Will brethren wanting me in Eastern Mass., New Hampshire, or Maine, to spend a Sabbath or two, please write me at Thorndike, Mass., until Feb. 10th.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1 25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.61; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

ing in Danville and vicinity, and different places in Western N. Y. A good interest had been manifested in the different places in which he had labored. Several had risen for prayers but he could not stay to see the work finished. Bro. Macomber, of Block Island, believed in persevering. There were a few laboring christians on the Island who kept the seventh day.

Bro. Babcock then offered some amendments to the Constitution. On motion they were laid on the table and each member ordered to be presented with a copy. (The Clerk, through mistake, not having said amendments, will see they are published before the next Conference.) A letter was then read from Exeter church requesting the ordination of Bro. Wood to the gospel ministry. Motion made by Bro. Bellows that he be ordained Friday afternoon. Carried. Bro. E. Bellows proposed that when the Conference adjourned it meet at River Point the last Friday instead of the last Wednesday of March in 1861. Moved and carried. The remainder of the day was occupied in discussing the following proposition: "Are the ten commandments binding on the people of God now?" Bro. Sweet, who introduced the proposition, Hancock and Macomber, maintained the affirmative and argued in behalf of the seventh day Sabbath: Bro. Brown and Bellows in the negative. The discussion was conducted in a christian spirit and much ability on both sides, and we trust that much good was done thereby. The discussion occupied most of Thursday. A conference meeting occupied the early part of the evening, which had for its seal the spirit and power of God. The meeting closed with an interesting and cheering discourse by Bro. S. C. Hancock, founded on Acts 17: 30, 31. That we should repent not for the fear of death but in view of the judgment, was clearly demonstrated. Bro. Hancock requested ordination. Granted. Prayer of ordination of Bro. Hancock by Eld. P. C. Rodman. Charge by the same. Prayer of ordination of Bro. Wood by Eld. Peter Noka. Charge by Eld. J. D. Brown. Ordination sermon by M. R. Phetteplace, founded on 2 Tim. 4: 2, showing why, how, when and where the Word should be preached, and the importance of having it preached in the spirit of Christ. Discourse in the evening by Eld. W. Sutherland. The Clerk not being present cannot state the particulars.

The conference meetings throughout the Conference were highly spiritual, earnest and cheering to the way-worn pilgrim. The Conference closed with the conviction resting upon our minds it was the best we have ever enjoyed. Although there were none who openly professed religion, of the unregenerate, we trust it will result in great good to the church in this place.

M. R. PHETTEPLACE, Clerk.

For the Crisis.

"Who is Right?"

[ANSWER TO BRO. GILLESPIE.]

"To the Law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them."

Many of the brethren quote the verse preceding the above in Isaiah 8: 19, and if the language is applicable to this day of lying wonders, etc., of the spirits of devils, why should not the verse following be also? My dear Bro., we will notice in the first place that God made a law and through a disobedience of that law by our first parents, death, with all of its pains and sorrows, has come upon mankind. We read in Gen. 2: 3—"And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," or, "set apart for a Sabbath," as we find in reading Ex. 20: 10, and many other parts of holy writ. I might cite your attention to the New, as well as to the Old. Fifty times the seventh day is mentioned in the New Testament, and considered by the apostles and disciples as the Sabbath before and after the crucifixion of our dear Lord, as we read in Mark 15: 42,—"And now the even was come because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath," etc.

We find that the disciples regarded the day insomuch that they deferred the anointing of Jesus until the first day of the week, as is recorded by Luke 16: 1, 2.

We notice that Jehovah has stirred up the minds of his children occasionally to observe his laws, and has shown his people by miracle, as we read in Ex. 16: 27, 28. You will notice here, Bro., that it is not Moses' law, but God's law, as in verse 28: —"And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?"

You observed the law (Mosaic) was "our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." So it was, but we must remember that there is a difference between God's holy law that he took pains to write with his own finger upon the tables of stone, choosing these undoubtedly as an emblem of their durability. Now the law (Mosaic) required sacrifices, bullocks, lambs, doves and pigeons, etc., all these pointing to Christ the great Sacrifice. When he gave himself a sacrifice, it was the fulfilling of that law (Mosaic) that required blood, etc. But we hear Jesus saying, "I come not to destroy the law nor the prophets"—no more one than the other. Have we not the good word of prophecy now? Have we not the good law now? Jesus says he came to make the law honorable. He first honored his Father's law, and says to them that come to him do know what they should do to inherit eternal life, "Keep the commandments." He requires the same of us—the same law unaltered. I cannot think that Jehovah made a law and has found a defect in it. The law of rites and ceremonies was good in its day, it was all good in the wisdom of God and had its designed object; and the moral law will also have its effect, as it is transferred from the tables of stone to the heart. We nowhere find that it has been altered.

Paul, speaking to the Romans by his Epistle 2: 12,—"For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law." 13th verse: "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." Again, more definite in regard to God's moral law, the ten commandments, we find recorded in James 1: 25,—"But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Again, chap. 2: 8,—"If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scriptures, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well."

Finally, when the wrath of God is poured out without mixture, which I am convinced is but one step before us, then we shall want patience, such as will endure all things. We find there will be God's dear children having this patience, as we read in Rev. 14: 12,—"Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God."* Is it right to obey God? You and every professed follower of Christ will say yes. Now let us make the application to ourselves, and may the Lord assist us to search our hearts as Jerusalem was searched with lighted candles, and give us grace to strip from them every wrong, and then we shall walk uprightly before the Lord, and he will not withhold any good thing from us. What a blessed company that will be. Hallelujah! Glory to God! I mean to be one of the number that is spoken of in Rev. 22: 14, —"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." But I expect to be placed in the position where I shall call upon the Lord to deliver out of great trouble, as the Scripture saith, Jer. 30: 7,—"Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble," etc.

E. MACOMBER.

* I understand this to mean the ten commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus his Son. E. M.

Correspondence.

From L. H. Washburn.

BRO. GRANT:—I see in the last number of the "Crisis" an editorial, urging upon our preachers to contribute by their pens to the "Crisis;" and among the many very good reasons why they should do so is— "A large number of our readers have no other preaching but what they get through the columns of their paper."

Now I wish to add a full endorsement to that, and if I may take the liberty, to urge upon all those that are standing upon the watch-tower of Zion to write! write!! You do not know how cheering it is to us who are out in the West, and have no other means of hearing from you or of hearing the truth as it is in Jesus, to read your epistles. May the Holy Spirit move you to preach to us through that thrice welcome messenger, the "Crisis."

It is true that in this immediate locality we are few in numbers who are looking for the immediate return of our blessed Savior, but we are none the less interested in the spread of the glad tidings that our Lord and Master will soon appear to reign King of kings and Lord over all.

Our dear brethren, P. B. Morgan, M. Chandler, and W. Pratt, have labored with us as often as they could within the past three years, but we being so poor as to this world's goods that we could not support them without doing injustice to our own families, they have had to go where they could get sufficient remuneration to support them. May He who cares for the needy be with them and provide abundantly for all their wants, both temporal and spiritual —and may we all meet at last in the new heavens and new earth, where we shall never want for anything, and where we may drink in the waters of eternal life without money and without price.

Again let me urge upon our dear brethren to write—time is short, the nations are angry, the last vials, it would seem, are about to be poured out, and we want to hear from the watchmen, what of the night?

Yours in Christ looking for his speedy return and hoping to be a sharer in the gifts of our great Life Giver.

Muscatine, Iowa, Jan. 14th, 1861.

From Sr. E. S. Willard.

BRO. GRANT:—Thanks be to God for what we are enjoying here in the opening of this new year. Six precious souls in our Bible class have expressed hope in Christ and are awaiting the coming of Bro. Cook, for whom we have written to plant them in the likeness of his death, that they may be also raised in the likeness of his resurrection, to walk in a new life. We simply followed the leadings of God's Holy Spirit, and appointed a prayer meeting at the house of the three young ladies who first sought and found Jesus precious the last Lord's day in the old year. This meeting was in the evening of the National Fast day; and such a meeting as it was! A perfect baptism of the Holy Spirit to the praying souls present, and a conviction of "sin, of righteousness and a judgment to come" to the unconverted present, all young, and some of them having denied themselves the pleasure of going to the ball given in honor of the young people especially, to please those who had invited them to come. All were in tears, and some of them groaning aloud for mercy. After the meeting broke up these young people stayed and had a prayer meeting of their own, and vowed together to be the Lord's, and expressed their thanks that they did not go to the ball. We met again on Sunday eve., and the interest still continued, and they appointed a union prayer meeting to be holden every night this week. Last night two youth, of about 17 and 19, members of our class, rose and professed faith in Jesus as their Savior. O bless God! Pray for us in this new place.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in this city, 16th inst., SARAH F., wife of Calvin Hutchins, aged thirty-two.

Sister Hutchins has been a patient sufferer for the last two years; but death would not yield his victim, and she fell under the conqueror at last. Though anxious to live to be useful in the service of Him who was her chief support in the trying hours, her faith held out to the last that God would be glorified in whatever he willed for her future, whether life or death. She believed that she would sleep with the saints but a short time, and looked beyond the gloom of the grave to the new earth, made glorious for her abode, with the loving and faithful, where no pain would come, no sleepless nights, no tears or sighs, no griefs or fears, but one eternal home of peace, where the molten sea of glory will cover the whole vast host of the redeemed. The thought of that blissful meeting so enraptured her vision that she longed for its commencement with almost impatient desire. The sound of prayer was comfort to her, and could she but make one more request, it would be to remember in your prayers her little ones left without a mother's care.

She was taken for burial to Dayton, Me., her native place.

W. C. STONE.

Died, in Hartford, Nov. 1st, 1860, Bro. D. B. PIERSON, aged thirty-six.

Bro. Pierson was converted in 1852 among the Methodists, but not feeling free to join the church, remained without membership anywhere, until in 1854, when he received the truth of the soon coming of Christ as the Life-giver, and united with the Advent Church in Bridgeport. In 1857 he removed to Hartford, and united with the Adventists here. Although but three years a resident, and an entire stranger when he came, yet at the time of his death he was greatly endeared to a large circle of friends, who manifested their sympathy by filling the church on the funeral occasion.

Bro. A. Ross attended the funeral, and gave us a very impressive discourse on the reasons of our hope.

Bro. P. was one of those who are ready to do what they can for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and he has left us good reason to believe that he sleeps in Jesus.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 12th.]

It is officially announced that the French fleet leaves Gaeta on the 19th.

ITALY.

The intelligence from Gaeta is contradictory. One dispatch asserts that an armistice of ten days has been signed. Another says the Piedmontese had redoubled their vigilance and activity before Gaeta. And the Paris Moniteure says the negotiations for an armistice remained without result.

A correspondent of the Times has been ordered to quit Rome.

CHINA.

The Hong Kong mail of Nov. 29th reached Marseilles on the 10th.

The following is from the Government telegram: The whole army had left Pekin, excepting about 1500 men, who remained at Hosur, and reached Tien Sin on the 17th.

The treaty, with the Emperor's consent, was posted on the walls of Pekin. He was arranging for the residence of Mr. Bruce, the English Minister. Mr Bruce, in the meantime, winters at Tien Sin. A Chinese representative is to reside in England.

All of the important Chinese ports are open to trade, and permission has been granted for foreign steamers to trade in the inland waters.

The rebels were again threatening Shanghae and Ningpo, causing the greatest alarm. Civil disturbances were also anticipated at Foo-choo-foo.

WAR RUMORS.

The Turin correspondent of the London Times writes:

"There are men, however, who still feel uneasy as they look at the signs of the times. The Emperor Napoleon, they think, is still going to do a job for the Italians. He has still Venetia to conquer for them. There is little doubt in the minds of these deep searchers into men's intentions that Garibaldi, Cavour, and Napoleon, whether by a secret understanding, or unintentionally playing into each other's hands, have for some time been plotting a final stroke to be presently dealt against Austria. Ships laden with rifled field pieces, muskets, ammunition, and every variety of warlike material have been seized by the Turkish Government at the mouth of the Danube. The ostensible owners of these contraband goods were, it would seem, Garibaldi and his Hungarian friends, and the object of the expedition, it is obvious to surmise, was an attack upon Austria in Hungary, favored by a simultaneous attack on Venetia."

FOUR DAYS LATER.

It is stated that several rifled cannon have been shipped from Liverpool for Charleston.

Hostilities have been suspended at Gaeta. Part of the French fleet had left and all of the fleet would leave on the 19th.

It is reported that a Congress will meet in Paris to settle the Italian question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says that people seem fully convinced the armistice will expire without any decision of Francis II. to surrender.

It is understood that General Turr has consented to act as mediator between Cavour and Garibaldi, with a view to persuade the latter to postpone his threatened attack on Venice in the spring.

DOMESTIC.

CONTINUED PREPARATIONS TO ATTACK FORT PICKENS.—Pensacola, Jan. 24th.—Volunteers are engaged in mounting and ranging cannons, carpenters are making scaling ladders, and the utmost bustle prevails.

The Wyandotte is anchored west of Fort Pickens, under her guns, and it is supposed she will assist Lieut. Slimmer in defense. The Pilots have been notified that they may bring government vessels into the harbor if they bear a flag of truce.

A special despatch to the American says that the Charleston Vigilance Committee have discovered that a man named Dodge, a soldier at Fort Moultrie, was the correspondent of the New York Tribune, and compelled him to leave the State.

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 24.—The Committee of Fifteen reported an ordinance dissolving all connection with the United States; but all treaties, acts of Congress, etc., not incompatible with the ordinance of secession, are to remain in force; also recognizing the right of ingress and egress to and from the mouths of the Mississippi river by all friendly States, and declaring the willingness of Louisiana to enter into stipulations or guaranties for the exercise of those rights.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 25.—The U. S. steamer Brooklyn sailed yesterday with sealed orders for the South, with two companies on board for Fort Monroe.

NO MUTINY.—New York, Jan. 24.—The Herald's Washington dispatch says that a letter from Fort Sumter denies that there had been mutiny in the garrison. It also states that the whole command are in good spirits, and prepared to defend the fort to the last extremity. Two steamers watched the Fort all night of the 19th, and mortars had been planted by the South Carolinians, on the nearest land to Fort Sumter.

The Southern Senators are telegraphing home to have peace preserved.

ATTACK ON SUMTER IMMINENT.—New York, Jan. 25.—The Post's Washington correspondent says that the buoys in the harbor of Mobile have been removed; also that two thousand persons are engaged in building fortifications on the islands in Charleston harbor, but they could be easily taken. An attack on Fort Sumter is liable to take place at any moment by the populace, who are displeased with Governor Pickens policy.

Washington, Jan. 26. The French Minister has received assurances of the anxiety and sympathy of the French government under the present American troubles. France hopes for a continuance of the Union for commercial reasons.

Letters from Springfield say that Mr. Lincoln opposes all concessions.

BATON ROUGE, LA., Jan. 28. In the House, to-day, a resolution was passed instructing the Senators, and requesting the Representatives at Washington to vacate their seats and return home.

In the Senate, a resolution was passed that Louisiana will regard any attempt to coerce her sister Southern States as a hostile act.

Charleston, Jan. 28. The Legislature to-day unanimously resolved while acknowledging the courtesy of the Virginia Legislature in sending commissioners to South Carolina, to decline having any intercourse on the subject proposed—regarding her separation from the Union as final and irrevocable.

The correspondence of Col. Hayne with Governor Pickens, with the former at Washington, was considered to-day in Executive session. It appears that the ultimatum of South Carolina was the surrender of Fort Sumter and withdrawal of the Federal troops.

THE WAR IN THE SPRING.—The impression is deep and settled that unless Venetia is either ceded or sold by Austria to Piedmont, there will be a most bloody war in the Spring. Preparations are being made on all hands. Garibaldi makes no secret of his intentions, and Austria is strengthening her defenses. The hope of the King of Naples is that he may hold out until the war opens in the north of Italy, as this will demand troops at the north, and thus leave the Neapolitan territory less defended. The Pope hopes to secure delays until the war rages, when the contending parties will have enough to do to take care of themselves and let him alone. But all is in the hands of the wise and merciful Ruler of Nations, and he will dispose of this and any other question as shall best promote the happiness of men and show forth his glory.—Cor. of Independent.

Notices, &c.

Eld. M. Grant in Canada East.

In compliance with the earnest solicitation of the church in Danville, C. E., Eld Miles Grant will commence a series of meetings on Sabbath, Feb. 10th, and continue over the following Lord's day.

In behalf of the church, J. PORTER.

Quarterly Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be held in the Bean school-house, Mt Vernon, about three miles east of the village, to commence Thursday, 1 o'clock, P. M., Feb. 21st, and continue over Sunday. I am instructed to say that the Christian church and friends will sustain the conference. We shall expect to see all our ministers present who belong to this conference, and hope to see those from other parts who can come. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can come to work for the Lord, that his cause may be revived and sinners converted. Behold the Judge standeth at the door; soon our work will be over and the end come. Let us work while it is day. Brethren from abroad will come into the place and find directions where to put up. We have not the names of persons to give.

I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Richmond, Me., Jan. 23d, 1861.

☞ Will brethren wanting me in Eastern Mass., New Hampshire, or Maine, to spend a Sabbath or two, please write me at Thorndike, Mass., until Feb. 10th.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 [illegible]

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

The Morning Star.

O, bright and Morning Star, arise!
Herald of coming day;
Beam forth, and from our weeping eyes
Chase sorrow's tears away.

O, Morning Star! no light but thine
Can the glad day bring in:
We wait for thee, O Christ divine!
To light this world of sin.

O, Morning Star! Thy beams alone
Can pierce death's chilling gloom;
No light but that which is thine own,
Illuminates the tomb.

O, Morning Star! we look to thee
Ever while here we stay;
May brighter still our pathway be,
Until the perfect day.

Chronological Prophecies.

BY REV. E. BICKERSTETH.

[Voice of the Prophets.]

(Concluded.)

It may be useful to refer the reader to CERTAIN SPECIFIC DATES which have been SUPPOSED TO BE NEAR THEIR CLOSE. The circumstance of so many scriptural dates having probable terminations about the same time, and the possibility that these terminations may be near, both calls for attention, and, in proportion as we see they have a real foundation, they are well calculated to impress our minds and increase our watchfulness. Yet the author would be far from dogmatizing on such dates.

1,260 years.—Rev. 13 : 5

This date occurs frequently, and in three different forms. Dan. 7 : 23–25. time, times, and dividing of a time; Rev. 12 : 6, 1,260 days; Rev. 13 : 5, forty-two months. All, after the length of the Jewish year and month, point out, 1,260. This date refers to the duration of Popery.

If we take its rise in 538 it reaches to 1,793, when Popery began to fall; if we take its fuller establishment, (Rev. 11 : 2; 13 : 8,) in 608 to its final fall, it reaches 1,868. The interval is 75 years.

666.—Rev. 13 : 18

This, by the Lutheran expositors, has been considered as a name of date, as well as of person and character.

Three words seem specially intended to be set before us, as having Greek letters that make 666.

Latinos.—The king who gave name to the Latin empire.

Apostatas.—The character of the power ruling it.

E latin basileia.—The only Greek name of an empire, among two or three thousand, that has the number 666.

If taken as a date. We have before 1,260 days, a date veiled under a mystery, and afterwards an explicit 1,000. In 666, the mystery begins to break: the number of a man counted by human reckoning.

If taken as a period both of rise and fall. In its rise from 538—666 brings us to 1,198–9, the time of Innocent III. Popery was then at its height, the Inquisition was established, there was a crusade against the Albigenses, and the number was applied by that Pope to Mohammedanism, as expected to be then near its end from the time of its rise.

From 1,198–9, 666 brings us to 1864, just before Daniel's time of blessedness, leaving us only a period of half a week, mentioned in Daniel 9 : 27, for the infidel persecution, from which the Philadelphian church was saved; (Rev. 3 : 10; 18 : 20;) but the Laodicean part in it to be purified, and to be the last gathering of the church to the marriage supper.

2,300.—Daniel 8 : 13.

There are two things in this number, the restoration of the daily sacrifice, and the time of desolation. The first, the restoration of the daily sacrifice, was to be determined, or rather cut off, Dan. 9 : 24, from the 2,300 years to the completing of the perfect sacrifice of Christ.

If this 2,300 years be taken from Ezra's decree, 457 years before Christ, it will bring us to 1843, the beginning of the cleansing of the sanctuary, and of the restoration of the Jews, and of the approach of the great tribulation. If taken from Nehemiah's completed cleansing in 433—4, it will bring us to 1867–8, the completed Jewish restoration.

390.—Ezek. 4 : 5; Rev. 9 : 15.

This might be rendered, (Rev. 9 : 15,) The four angels prepared against (is) the hour and day (the hour of judgment and the day of wrath) were loosed for a month and a year (eniauton), that is, 390 years.

If this 390 years commence in 1063, the beginning of the Turkish power, it will bring us to 1453, the height of their power in the fall of Constantinople. And if taken onward, it will bring us to 1843, the time of the fall of the Turkish empire.

1,290 and 1,335.—Dan. 12 : 11, 12.

These years date from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up. This is connected also with the time, times, and a half, verse 7. It is the spiritual aspect of, and the counterpart to, the interruption of the temple service and the daily worship; or the rise of Popery in the Christian church, A. D. 533.

From 533, the period of 1,290 would bring us to 1823, which is remarkable for [illegible]

From 533, the period of 1,335 years would bring us to 1868, at the commencement of the full blessedness of the earth.

A time no longer, or not 360 years. (Chronos ouk esti eti.)—Rev. 10 : 6.

The oath in Revelation is in many respects similar to that in Daniel 12. The speaker the same; shown to be the Redeemer by the rainbow round his head and his face as the sun. It does not mean time should end,—events occur after; and delay no longer, seems too vague: but, it may be taken, there should be a time no longer, in the same sense as time, times, and a half. Formerly the angel had said, there were three times and half, (Dan. 12 : 7,) now not a single time. Rev. 10 : 6. This is quite in accordance with the spirit of prophecy, seeking to produce an impression of the nearness of the time. As soon as the times of the Gentiles are within the verge of one time, lest men should think the end was indefinitely prolonged, the angel swears there shall be a time no longer.

The era of this chapter (Rev. 10,) is supposed to be that of the Reformation. It follows the two woe trumpets of the Saracens and the Turks, and is the next great event of history. It was then that the little book, or the Bible, in contrast with the larger sealed book of all God's Providence, was first fully opened to the church, and light dawned upon Europe (his countenance as the sun).

If the date of the Reformation be 1517, a time, or 360 years, carries us to 1877, a period within which the mystery of God should be finished. This mystery is described in other parts of Scripture. The mystery of the blindness of Israel, and the consequent reception of the Gentiles.—Rom. 11 : 25 The resurrection of the dead saints, and the change of the living saints, and their being caught up to Christ. 1 Cor. 15 : 51; 1 Thess. 4 : 17. The union of Jew and Gentile as fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of the promises in Christ. Eph. 3 : 4—9. The marriage union of the church to Christ.—Eph. 5 : 31, 32; Rev. 19 : 7.

These events, the appearance of our Lord, and the first resurrection of the saints, would in this view take place within 360 years from the Reformation 1517, that is before 1877.

Mr. Clinton, one of the ablest chronologers of the present times, gives an additional period of 132 years to the interval in the time of the Judges, on the ground of St. Paul's statement, (Acts 13 : 20.) If this be correct, it would bring the year 1864 to the close of the 6000th year of the world, or the 6th Millennium: 1864 is the date when the 666 years close above, and assigned by Mr. Faber for the time of the end.

If these periods, (except the last, the close of which is less definite,) be correctly commenced, without fixing precise dates for each event, they point out that, within the next thirty years, Popery shall fall, the Jews shall be restored, the Turkish empire shall perish, the time of great tribulation will take place, our Lord Jesus Christ will return to our earth, the saints shall be raised, and the time of their full blessedness, and the kingdoms of this world becoming Christ's kingdom shall have arrived.

Jesus, or an Angel.

Rev. 22: 9.—"Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."

Many think this passage refers to one of the old prophets, who sleep in the dust of the earth: but it is evident to my own mind that it is our great Prophet who is speaking; and to prove this, I should like to have the reader turn with me to the 6th verse of the 22d chap. of Rev., where the angel commences addressing John in the following words: "These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. Behold, I come quickly." Now I suppose it is Jesus who is coming quickly, not an angel; not one of the old prophets.

He proceeds to pronounce a blessing upon those who keep the sayings of the prophecy of this book. John then falls down to worship the angel, but is told not to do so; "for," said he, "I am thy fellow-servant," and (as I understand him to say,) I am fellow-servant of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Jesus showed to his disciples before his crucifixion, by his humiliating acts, that he was not only fellow-servant, but servant of all. We read also that he is not ashamed to call them brethren.

In verse 12 he repeats what he had said before; "Behold, I come quickly," and adds, "my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Now I suppose it is Jesus that is coming to give rewards; not the prophets, nor an angel. He continues, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Can an angel or one of the prophets use this language in truth? In the 16th verse, "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." The reader will observe it is to the churches [illegible] and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star." Surely this can be no other than Jesus.

In 20th verse we read, "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly;" and John was so sure it was our Savior, that he responds in a rapture, "Even so come, Lord Jesus." In the 1st chapter, the description given of the angel corresponds with this; his personal appearance is also given.

I should like to have some of the brethren write their views on this subject for truth's sake. E. A. BARTLETT.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

"The Union cannot be dissolved without bloodshed, and the first drop of blood that falls in the contest will be like a flash of powder. The Lord only knows where it will end."

—A man of the world.

Watchman, on the tower of Zion,
Tell us what these clouds portend:
Ye who hold the chart and compass,
Tell us, where will these things end?
Darkness gathers o'er our nation,
Ghastly shadows flit around,
Peace no longer waves her sceptre
O'er our broad, united land!
Hearts are quaking, strong men tremble,
Lips grow pallid while we hear,
Sounding over hill and valley,
Rumors of impending war.

Watchman, whither are we tending?
To those dark and troublous times,
Such as never have been numbered
In the annals of past time?
While with war the Eastern nations
Surge and swell in one vast flood,
Will our "happy," "free America"
Beat her ploughshares into swords?
Must our nation's pride and glory
Sink in an ruby and strife,
Neighbor against neighbor rising,
Brother taking brother's life?

Watchman, seest thou 'mid the tumult
Michael, the anointed Prince,
Traveling in his power and greatness,
Coming for the saints' defense?
Do you hear his loved voice calling
To the trembling, scattered ones,—
"Come, my people, to thy chamber,
Hide thee while my anger burns.
I will tread them in my fury!
From the wine-press of God's wrath
Blood shall flow and mingle freely
With the slain upon the earth!"

Seest thou the dead arising,
Hearest thou a mighty swell
Of voluptuous music, floating
O'er the ruins of our world?
From the wreck and wild disorder
Seest thou a new earth spring,
Wherein dwelleth truth and beauty,
Free from each unholy thing?
Tell us, watchman, give us warning,
Sound the trumpet loud and long,
Cease not while the voice of Mercy
Pleadeth at the Father's throne!

Sonship of Christ.

DEAR EDITOR:—In the Essays of Andrew Fuller on various scriptural subjects, there is one on the "Sonship of Christ." The following extracts appear to me so scriptural and logical, that I beg leave to offer them for the consideration of your readers. Yours for the truth,

HENRY GREW.

"It has been frequently suggested, that the ground of Christ's Sonship is given us in Luke 1 : 35, and is no other than his miraculous conception: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

"It is true that our Lord was miraculously conceived of the Holy Spirit, and that such a conception was peculiar to him; but it does not follow that by this he became the Son or "only begotten Son of God." Nor does the passage in question prove any such thing. It may be a reason given why Christ is called the Son of God; but not why he is so. Christ is called the Son of God as raised from the dead, and as exalted at the right hand of God. Acts 13 : 33; Rom. 1 : 4. Did he then become the Son of God by these events? This is impossible; for sonship is not a progressive matter. If it arose from his miraculous conception, it could not for that reason arise from his resurrection or exaltation: and so, on the other hand, if it arose from his resurrection or exaltation, it could not proceed feom his miraculous conception. But if each be understood of his being hereby proved, acknowledged, or, as the Scriptures express it, declared to be the Son of God with power, all is easy and consistent. Whether the terms, Son of God, and only begotten Son of God, be not expressive of his divine personality, antecedent to all consideration of his being conceived of the Holy Spirit, in the womb of the virgin, let the following things determine.

"First: the glory of the "only begotten of the Father," and the glory of the "Word," are used as convertible terms as being the same; but the latter is allowed to denote the divine person of Christ, antecedent to his being made flesh; the same therefore must be true of the former. "The Word was made flesh, and we beheld his glory," that is, the glory of the Word, "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." John 1 : 14.

"God is frequently said to have sent his Son into the world. John 3 : 17; 10 : 36; 1 John 4 : 9, 10; but this implies that he was his Son antecedent to his being sent. To suppose otherwise, is no less absurd than [illegible] not disciples, but in consequence of his sending them, or of some preparation pertaining to their mission.

"Christ is called the Son of God antecedently to his miraculous conception, and consequently he did not become such by it—"In the fullness of time God sent forth his Son, made of a woman; made under the law, that he might redeem them that were under the law."—"God sent his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh."—The terms "made of a woman, made under the law," are a parenthesis. The position affirmed is that God sent forth his Son to redeem the transgressors of the law. There is equal proof that Christ was "the Son of God" before he was "made of a woman," as that he was "the Word" before he was "made flesh." The phraseology is the same in the one case as in the other. If it be alleged that Christ is here called the Son of God on account of his being made of a woman; I answer, if so, it is also on account of his being made under the law, which is too absurd to admit of a question. Moreover, to say that "God sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh," is equal to saying—that the Son of God assumed human nature: he must therefore have been the Son of God before his incarnation.

"Christ is called the Son of God antecedent to his being "manifested to destroy the works of the devil:" but he was manifested to destroy the works of the devil by taking upon him human nature; consequently he was the Son of God antecedent to the human nature being assumed."

Mr. Fuller was a trinitarian, and believed the contradictory dogma of eternal Sonship, and of his supreme Deity eternally begotten. An absurdity which he himself implicity repudiated in his concession that "in the order of nature, the Father must have existed before the Son;" which harmonizes with our Savior's own testimony, "I live by the Father," and can neither be reconciled with strict eternity or independence. His scriptural arguments, to prove his pro-existence as the Son of God, appear to me to be conclusive. H. G.

Questions for J. S. White.

1. Did "Christ that existed prior to his advent, as a separate person from the Father," suffer in the garden, expire on the cross, and lie three days and three nights in the heart of the earth?

2. We read in Gen. 1 : 1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Also, in Isa. 44 : 6, 'Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God." Also, 8th verse; "Is there a God beside me? Yea, there is no God; I know not any." Does the God spoken of in these Scriptures refer to God the Father, or to Christ the Son?

3. If Christ is "from everlasting," is there any being older than the Son, or before him?

Please answer these few questions, and oblige one seeking after truth.

My Experience.—No. 3.

Many passages in the sacred Book I found to strengthen and encourage me in seeking the Lord, such as the following: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, "etc. Thus, by searching the Word and earnest, constant prayer, I at length obtained a hope that I might possibly some day obtain a pardon of my sins and that peace and rest I so much desired. I was a stranger to faith, to its power and utility. Could I have had right instruction with regard to this most important of the christian graces and especially in the work of regeneration, I might have avoided days, weeks, yea, months of almost hopeless sorrow and suffering. Hope, fear, and unbelief, only wait for the promised blessing, while faith claims, receives, and enjoys it.

Sept. 3d, 1827, a Methodist camp-meeting was commenced in the vicinity of my residence. I went with a strong desire to obtain mercy and find salvation, yet I did not expect or believe that I should, such were the doubts, fears and darkness of my youthful mind. In the evening, while prayer was being offered, some one observed my tender feelings which I was no longer careful to conceal, and inquired if I loved the Savior? To which I replied that I did not. They then inquired if I was willing to seek him?

"Yes," said I, "with all my heart."

"Will you kneel while I pray for you?"

I quickly fell upon my knees without waiting to be afraid or ashamed. Tears now flowed afresh and such a view of my lost condition, together with a view of the blessed Savior, his tender affection, love and mercy, manifested towards me, his willingness to save, now melted my heart and laid me at his feet. I tried to pray, to submit and give all to God as I had been told to do, but hardly knew how or what, and still found no comfort. I arose, they commenced singing.

ing relief. Still singing they come to the second verse—

"I've given all for Christ, he's my all, he's my all,"—

"Yes" said I, clear down in the very depths of my heart, "I will give all for Christ, if I can only find him. Here am I, Lord, all that I have, soul and body, time and talents, thine forever! I will be thine and thou art mine!" In an instant my burden of sin and guilt was removed, and it seemed not only a stream, but a flood of light and glory from heaven came flowing into my soul, filling me to overflowing while I refrained not to join in that glad song which once floated o'er Judah's hallowed plain, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to men." Glory to God for what he has done for my soul! O! the happiness I then enjoyed. The flowing stream from which I drank was love, pure love, and such were the ecstasies of heavenly joy which filled my soul, that for a long time I could not refrain from praising God aloud while many of the saints joined in the song. I could now sing from the heart—

"How precious is the name.
Of Christ our Paschal Lamb," etc.

who has borne my sin and shame, appeared my deliverer, and redeemed me from its bondage and power. O precious Redeemer, I could truly say—

"All over-glorious is my Lord,
Must be beloved and yet adored,
His worth, if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love him too."

For the Crisis.

"I don't like it."

Talent must be buried, the Spirit grieved, God disobeyed, a soul lost,—all because you don't like a woman to "prophesy," thereby fulfilling Scripture. And yet a man can preach, through thick and thin, fire and water; no matter if he is not very gifted; perhaps his wife is three times as able as he is,—can exhort, teach, and influence others to come to Jesus,—but she happens to be a woman. Keep her down; she might eclipse you, husband. No matter about the strivings of the Spirit—force her to obey you; no matter how it stands with her Lord. Tell her it is immodest, etc., etc., and then pull good old Paul's harp-strings and make them tell lies to save you the trouble of being called inventor. Turn and twist, jump over, any way to get over the plain rights of women. Let their hearts break, and their light be extinguished, their peace in God die out, any thing to keep them starching for you, and make them pass respectfully in community.

Well, when Jesus comes, the question will be, "Where is the talent committed?" Sisters will say, "My husband tempted me." Serves you right. The blame falls where it belongs. We learned it from Adam, who laid the blame on Eve. But this is no trifling affair. Brethren, don't ask us to sing,

"This adorable will let us gladly fulfill,
Our talent improve,"

unless you consent for us to practice. Don't call on us to sing, for half of our hymns are prayers; we must not pray in public. Don't ask us to lead in singing at our social meetings. Just put us into the bonds of your will, make us slaves and done with it. For my part, if it is wicked to pray, it is wicked to sing; if this is right, it is right to preach. I want the sisters to see their privilege, and act as circumstances and abilities require. Remember to let man be foremost, . . . but don't you keep back out of sight. You, too, have a God to serve, a salvation to secure. Then stand up for Jesus. Never mind the cross. The crown will be weighed in the same scales. God is God.

Selections.

"The Hour is Coming."

"I believe in the resurrection of the dead!"

Philosophy, falsely so called, may scoff at this item of my faith, and ask me how it can be so, and I cannot tell; but my confidence staggers not, for it is founded upon the Omnipotence of God. I know that his word spoke the earth into existence, and the life that makes it beautiful; I know not that it will be harder for him to resurrect the dead. I grasp the promise, and expect its literal fulfillment.

"The hour is coming." See you that bright array of immortal ones upsprung from the dust of death? Hear you the music of their shout of victory? List you the first sweep of those golden harps? Behold you the whiteness of those priestly robes, the flashing of those kingly crowns? Note you the meeting of the parted—the child upon the bosom of the mother, and the wife clasped to the husband's heart?

Hebrew Women.

The Hebrew woman in her love for her kindred soars above her christian sisters. The tender devotion which the daughters of Israel bestow upon their parents, especially upon their father, is full of beauty and pathos. In the dark alleys of the World's Ghetti, when the old Hebrew man toddles home from his daily strife with prejudice and lucre, a wondrous change transforms his face as he crosses the threshold of his weather-beaten house. The furtive glance expands, the crooked gait is made straight, the many wrinkles of his brow are made smooth, the crouching form [illegible] things; the smile loses its sinister grin, and is clothed with genial beauty. Rebecca has kissed away the ugliness of the money changer, and to see him sit down at his table after having sent up to Jehovah a prayer for good luck and plenty of gain for the coming day, and chat with his daughter, who delights in humoring his jokes, is a treat for an artist in search of the picturesque, or for a poet in quest of the romantic. Rebeccas abound not only in the regions of the Ghetti, but in the middle and highest order of Hebrew abodes. Here we find the daughters, as a class, watching with Argus eyes fathers' and mothers' happiness and comfort. Here on the domestic shrine, all the fires of love and affection are burning so vigorously that unwittingly even the sympathies are consumed, which are wanted to kindle the great flames round the sacred altar of common humanity. Unless this drawback is constantly kept in view, our description of the Hebrew daughter's love for her parents would be calculated to surround the feelings with a too angelic atmosphere. —Crayon.

How am I to know whether I have the Holy Spirit?

If you have the Holy Spirit, you have seen the evil of sin; you have repented of sin; you have forsaken sin; you hate sin; you watch and pray against sin; you have received the spirit of love. If you have the Spirit of God, you love God supremely. You love the Father, who gave his Son to suffer and die. You love the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, for what he hath done and suffered on your account. You love all the sincere followers of Jesus Christ, and confine not your regards to a party. You love the human race at large, as children of the same family, and you wish them to know the things that belong to their peace. You are of a forbearing and forgiving temper; you pity, and pray for sinners, who, through blindness and ignorance, oppose at present their own eternal interest; you are of a thankful spirit; you thank God for making you to differ, by his grace, from many others, and you praise him for every favor, both of a temporal and spiritual nature; you are zealous for the honor of God in the world; you desire to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and in all the duties of christianity; you esteem the applause, the pleasure and the wealth of the whole world as nothing, in comparison of the love and blessing of God, through Christ Jesus.

An Apostolic Preacher.

I venerate the man whose heart is warm,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof
That he is honest in the sacred cause.
To such I render more than mere respect,
Whose actions say that they respect themselves.
Would I describe a preacher such as Paul,
Were he on earth, would hear, approve and own,
Paul should himself direct me. I would trace
His master-strokes, and draw from his design.
I would express him simple, grave, sincere;
In doctrine uncorrupt; in language plain;
And plain in manner. Decent, solemn, chaste,
And natural in gesture. Much impressed
Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
And anxious mainly that the flock he feeds
May feel it too. Affectionate in look,
And tender in address, as well becomes
A messenger of grace to guilty men.

A Swearer alone with God.

A carrier in a large town in Yorkshire heard his carter one day in the yard swearing dreadfully at his horses. The carrier was a man who feared God, spent his Sabbaths as a teacher in a Sunday school, and endeavored to promote the spiritual good of his fellow creatures. He was shocked to hear the terrible oaths that resounded through the yard. He went up to the young man, who was just setting off with his cart for Manchester, and kindly expostulated with him on the enormity of his sin, and then added: "But if thou wilt swear, stop till thou get through the turnpike on S—— Moor, where none but God and thyself can hear." He then put "The Swearer's Prayer" into his hand, and left him.

The poor fellow cracked his whip and pursued his journey; but he could not get over his master's words. Some time after, his master observed him in the yard, and was very much surprised to see him so altered. There was a seriousness and quietness about him which he had never seen before: and he often seemed as if he had something to say which he could not get out. At length his master was so much struck with his manner, that he asked him if he wanted anything. "Ah! master," said he, "do you remember what you said to me about swearing, and the tract you gave me?" I was thunderstruck. "I went on the road, and I got through the turnpike, and reached S—— Moor; and there I thought that though I was alone, yet God was with me; and I trembled to think how he had been with me, and had known all my sins and follies all my life long. My sins came to my remembrance; I was afraid that he would strike me dead; and I thank God that I have been aroused to seek after the salvation of my poor soul."

The master, as may be supposed, was overjoyed to hear the young man's confession; and it is gratifying to know that his subsequent conduct gave proof of his having ceased to be a slave to sin. "A word spoken in due season, how good is it!"

KINDNESS.—How much misery may be abated, how much suffering removed, by the simple tone and expression of the human voice! Upon the heart that is lone and desolate, how sweetly falls the voice of sympathy and consolation! Why is it, then, that each should be so sparing of that which costs nothing, but which might raise the drooping spirits of his neighbor, and cheer him on his journey—a few kind words and kindly looks?

The Goose that laid the Golden Eggs.

A FABLE FOR THE CHILDREN.

Once, a long time ago, I cannot tell when, While men acted like geese more than geese did like men, There lived a man who, his taste to please, Kept, sheltered and fed, one of those same geese. And day by day as his goose he fed, For him in return, an egg she laid. The days went on and the man was content, Till as things fell out great riches were sent; For one day as he looked in the nest, behold! His goose had laid a great egg of gold. "What! a golden egg? Uncle L——, is it true?" Well, really, I don't know much better than you; It may be false, though it sounds quite fair, But when it happened I wasn't there. That's the way I heard it, you know, but you see, If it's true, geese are not as they used to be.

Well, this goose having got in a wealthy way, Laid eggs of gold almost every day. If at night she swallowed the golden corn, You might look for a golden egg in the morn. For a while the man was in perfect bliss,—Who wouldn't be with a goose like this? But at length his passion for gold so grew, That instead of one egg he must needs have two. (Thus passion when fed will ne'er abate, But rushes on till we strive too late To save ourselves from its rolling tide, Ere over the cataract's brow we glide.) Once a common egg was enough for a day, But now one of gold was so small 'twouldn't pay. So he reasoned thus—"This goose I know, Must have lived in Ophir a long time ago; And there while she had to herself her time, She swallowed gold that she ever could find; And now she thinks for her board to pay By laying one paltry egg a day. But no, "I'm entirely too old," said he, "For her to play a goose game on me; I've bought the goose and she's all my own, All her quills and feathers and pads and down; All the gold within and the flesh without Is mine—and I know what I'm about." So at it he went with a furious will, His poor old goose for her gold to kill. He caught her first and he wrung her neck, Then he went her carcass to dissect; And he turned it over and twisted it round, But not a jot of gold in the goose he found. So the goose was dead and the work was done, And the fool of golden eggs had none. Then too late he did bitterly lament, And his foolish cruelty repent; But of no avail, for the goose was dead, And with her his hopes of wealth had fled.

Now learn from this, since my tale is done, This lesson—"Let well enough alone," Nor strive with covetous vain desire, To satisfy lust that burns like fire. Learn to be content with your present lot, Nor cast away what you now have got, That you may feed your love of gain, And something better far obtain. But if to heed me you do not choose, Why, just go ahead and kill your goose; And then you will learn in a sorrowful way, Not to kill the goose that such eggs does lay.

UNCLE LORENZO.

"We'll all meet again in the Morning."

Such was the exclamation of a dying child, as the red rays of the sunset streamed on him through the casement. "Good by, papa, good by! Mamma has come for me to-night; don't cry, papa! we'll all meet again in the morning!" It was as if an angel had spoken to that father, and his heart grew lighter under his burden; for something assured him that his little one was safe with Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." There is something cheerful to all who are in trouble in this, "We'll all meet again in the morning!" It rouses up the fainting soul like a trumpet blast, and frightens away forever the dark shapes thronging the avenues of the outer life. Clouds may gather upon our paths—disappointments gather around us like an army with banners, but all this cannot destroy the hope within us, if we have this motto upon our lips: "All will be right in the morning!" If you were to die to-night would it be well in the morning?

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$1.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

The Morning Star.

O, bright and Morning Star, arise!
Herald of coming day;
Beam forth, and from our weeping eyes
Chase sorrow's tears away.

O, Morning Star! no light but thine
Can the glad day bring in;
We wait for thee, O Christ divine!
To light this world of sin.

O, Morning Star! Thy beams alone
Can pierce death's chilling gloom;
No light but that which is thine own,
Illuminates the tomb.

O, Morning Star! we look to thee
Ever while here we stay;
May brighter still our pathway be,
Until the perfect day.

Chronological Prophecies.

BY REV. E. BICKERSTETH.

[Voice of the Prophets.]

(Concluded.)

It may be useful to refer the reader to CERTAIN SPECIFIC DATES which have been SUPPOSED TO BE NEAR THEIR CLOSE. The circumstance of so many scriptural dates having probable terminations about the same time, and the possibility that these terminations may be near, both calls for attention, and, in proportion as we see they have a real foundation, they are well calculated to impress our minds and increase our watchfulness. Yet the author would be far from dogmatizing on such dates.

1,260 years.—Rev. 13 : 5.

This date occurs frequently, and in three different forms. Dan. 7 : 23–25. time, times, and dividing of a time; Rev. 12 : 6, 1,260 days; Rev. 13 : 5, forty-two months. All, after the length of the Jewish year and month, point out, 1,260. This date refers to the duration of Popery.

If we take its rise in 538 it reaches to 1,793, when Popery began to fall; if we take its fuller establishment, (Rev. 11 : 2; 13 : 8,) in 608 to its final fall, it reaches 1,868. The interval is 75 years.

666.—Rev. 13 : 18

This, by the Lutheran expositors, has been considered as a name of date, as well as of person and character.

Three words seem specially intended to be set before us, as having Greek letters that make 666.

Latinos.—The king who gave name to the Latin empire.

Apostatas.—The character of the power ruling it.

E latin basileia.—The only Greek name of an empire, among two or three thousand, that has the number 666.

If taken as a date. We have before 1,260 days, a date veiled under a mystery, and afterwards an explicit 1,000. In 666, the mystery begins to break: the number of a man counted by human reckoning.

If taken as a period both of rise and fall. In its rise from 538—666 brings us to 1,198–9, the time of Innocent III. Popery was then at its height, the Inquisition was established, there was a crusade against the Albigenses, and the number was applied by that Pope to Mohammedanism, as expected to be then near its end from the time of its rise.

From 1,198–9, 666 brings us to 1864, just before Daniel's time of blessedness, leaving us only a period of half a week, mentioned in Daniel 9 : 27, for the infidel persecution, from which the Philadelphian church was saved; (Rev. 3 : 10; 18 : 20;) but the Laodicean part in it to be purified, and to be the last gathering of the church to the marriage supper.

2,300.—Daniel 8 : 13.

There are two things in this number, the restoration of the daily sacrifice, and the time of desolation. The first, the restoration of the daily sacrifice, was to be determined, or rather cut off, Dan. 9 : 24, from the 2,300 years to the completing of the perfect sacrifice of Christ.

If this 2,300 years be taken from Ezra's decree, 457 years before Christ, it will bring us to 1843, the beginning of the cleansing of the sanctuary, and of the restoration of the Jews, and of the approach of the great tribulation. If taken from Nehemiah's completed cleansing in 433—4, it will bring us to 1867–8, the completed Jewish restoration.

390.—Ezek. 4 : 5; Rev. 9 : 15.

This might be rendered, (Rev. 9 : 15,) The four angels prepared against (is) the hour and day (the hour of judgment and the day of wrath) were loosed for a month and a year (eniauton), that is, 390 years.

If this 390 years commence in 1063, the beginning of the Turkish power, it will bring us to 1453, the height of their power in the fall of Constantinople. And if taken onward, it will bring us to 1843, the time of the fall of the Turkish empire.

1,290 and 1,335.—Dan. 12 : 11, 12.

These years date from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up. This is connected also with the time, times, and a half, verse 7. It is the spiritual aspect of, and the counterpart to, the interruption of the temple service and the daily worship; or the rise of Popery in the Christian church, A. D. 533.

From 533, the period of 1,290 would bring us to 1822, which is remarkable for [illegible]

From 533, the period of 1,335 years would bring us to 1868, at the commencement of the full blessedness of the earth.

A time no longer, or not 360 years. (Chronos ouk esti eti.)—Rev. 10 : 6.

The oath in Revelation is in many respects similar to that in Daniel 12. The speaker the same; shown to be the Redeemer by the rainbow round his head and his face as the sun. It does not mean time should end,—events occur after; and delay no longer, seems too vague: but, it may be taken, there should be a time no longer, in the same sense as time, times, and a half. Formerly the angel had said, there were three times and half, (Dan. 12 : 7,) now not a single time. Rev. 10 : 6. This is quite in accordance with the spirit of prophecy, seeking to produce an impression of the nearness of the time. As soon as the times of the Gentiles are within the verge of one time, lest men should think the end was indefinitely prolonged, the angel swears there shall be a time no longer.

The era of this chapter (Rev. 10,) is supposed to be that of the Reformation. It follows the two woe trumpets of the Saracens and the Turks, and is the next great event of history. It was then that the little book, or the Bible, in contrast with the larger sealed book of all God's Providence, was first fully opened to the church, and light dawned upon Europe (his countenance as the sun).

If the date of the Reformation be 1517, a time, or 360 years, carries us to 1877, a period within which the mystery of God should be finished. This mystery is described in other parts of Scripture. The mystery of the blindness of Israel, and the consequent reception of the Gentiles.—Rom. 11 : 25 The resurrection of the dead saints, and the change of the living saints, and their being caught up to Christ. 1 Cor. 15 : 51; 1 Thess. 4 : 17. The union of Jew and Gentile as fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of the promises in Christ. Eph. 3 : 4—9. The marriage union of the church to Christ.—Eph. 5 : 31, 32; Rev. 19 : 7.

These events, the appearance of our Lord, and the first resurrection of the saints, would in this view take place within 360 years from the Reformation 1517, that is before 1877.

Mr. Clinton, one of the ablest chronologers of the present times, gives an additional period of 132 years to the interval in the time of the Judges, on the ground of St. Paul's statement, (Acts 13 : 20.) If this be correct, it would bring the year 1864 to the close of the 6000th year of the world, or the 6th Millennium: 1864 is the date when the 666 years close above, and assigned by Mr. Faber for the time of the end.

If these periods, (except the last, the close of which is less definite,) be correctly commenced, without fixing precise dates for each event, they point out that, within the next thirty years, Popery shall fall, the Jews shall be restored, the Turkish empire shall perish, the time of great tribulation will take place, our Lord Jesus Christ will return to our earth, the saints shall be raised, and the time of their full blessedness, and the kingdoms of this world becoming Christ's kingdom shall have arrived.

Jesus, or an Angel.

Rev. 22: 9.—"Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."

Many think this passage refers to one of the old prophets, who sleep in the dust of the earth: but it is evident to my own mind that it is our great Prophet who is speaking; and to prove this, I should like to have the reader turn with me to the 6th verse of the 22d chap. of Rev., where the angel commences addressing John in the following words: "These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. Behold, I come quickly." Now I suppose it is Jesus who is coming quickly, not an angel; not one of the old prophets.

He proceeds to pronounce a blessing upon those who keep the sayings of the prophecy of this book. John then falls down to worship the angel, but is told not to do so; "for," said he, "I am thy fellow-servant," and (as I understand him to say,) I am fellow-servant of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Jesus showed to his disciples before his crucifixion, by his humiliating acts, that he was not only fellow-servant, but servant of all. We read also that he is not ashamed to call them brethren.

In verse 12 he repeats what he had said before; "Behold, I come quickly," and adds, "my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Now I suppose it is Jesus that is coming to give rewards, not the prophets, nor an angel. He continues, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Can an angel or one of the prophets use this language in truth?

(16th verse). "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." The reader will observe it is to the churches in the plural, that the [illegible] and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star." Surely this can be no other than Jesus.

In 20th verse we read, "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly;" and John was so sure it was our Savior, that he responds in a rapture, "Even so come, Lord Jesus." In the 1st chapter, the description given of the angel corresponds with this; his personal appearance is also given.

I should like to have some of the brethren write their views on this subject for truth's sake. E. A. BARTLETT.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

"The Union cannot be dissolved without bloodshed, and the first drop of blood that falls in the contest will be like a flash of powder. The Lord only knows where it will end."
—A man of the world.

Watchman, on the tower of Zion,
Tell us what these clouds portend:
Ye who hold the chart and compass,
Tell us, where will these things end?
Darkness gathers o'er our nation,
Ghastly shadows flit around,
Peace no longer waves her sceptre
O'er our broad, united land!
Hearts are quaking, strong men tremble,
Lips grow pallid while we hear,
Sounding over hill and valley,
Rumors of impending war.

Watchman, whither are we tending?
To those dark and troublous times,
Such as never have been numbered
In the annals of past time?
While with war the Eastern nations
Surge and swell in one vast flood,
Will our "happy," "free America"
Beat her ploughshares into swords?
Must our nation's pride and glory
Sink in an reby and strife,
Neighbor against neighbor rising,
Brother taking brother's life?

Watchman, seest thou 'mid the tumult
Michael, the anointed Prince,
Traveling in his power and greatness,
Coming for the saints' defense?
Do you hear his loved voice calling
To the trembling, scattered ones,—
"Come, my people, to thy chamber,
Hide thee while my anger burns.
I will tread them in my fury!
From the wine-press of God's wrath
Blood shall flow and mingle freely
With the slain upon the earth!"

Seest thou the dead arising,
Hearest thou a mighty swell
Of voluptuous music, floating
O'er the ruins of our world?
From the wreck and wild disorder
Seest thou a new earth spring,
Wherein dwelleth truth and beauty,
Free from each unholy thing?
Tell us, watchman, give us warning,
Sound the trumpet loud and long,
Cease not while the voice of Mercy
Pleadeth at the Father's throne!

Sonship of Christ.

DEAR EDITOR:—In the Essays of Andrew Fuller on various scriptural subjects, there is one on the "Sonship of Christ." The following extracts appear to me so scriptural and logical, that I beg leave to offer them for the consideration of your readers. Yours for the truth,

HENRY GREW.

"It has been frequently suggested, that the ground of Christ's Sonship is given us in Luke 1 : 35, and is no other than his miraculous conception: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

"It is true that our Lord was miraculously conceived of the Holy Spirit, and that such a conception was peculiar to him; but it does not follow that by this he became the Son or "only begotten Son of God." Nor does the passage in question prove any such thing. It may be a reason given why Christ is called the Son of God; but not why he is so. Christ is called the Son of God as raised from the dead, and as exalted at the right hand of God. Acts 13 : 33; Rom. 1 : 4. Did he then become the Son of God by these events? This is impossible; for sonship is not a progressive matter. If it arose from his miraculous conception, it could not for that reason arise from his resurrection or exaltation: and so, on the other hand, if it arose from his resurrection or exaltation, it could not proceed feom his miraculous conception. But if each be understood of his being hereby proved, acknowledged, or, as the Scriptures express it, declared to be the Son of God with power, all is easy and consistent. Whether the terms, Son of God, and only begotten Son of God, be not expressive of his divine personality, antecedent to all consideration of his being conceived of the Holy Spirit, in the womb of the virgin, let the following things determine.

"First: the glory of the "only begotten of the Father," and the glory of the "Word," are used as convertible terms as being the same; but the latter is allowed to denote the divine person of Christ, antecedent to his being made flesh; the same therefore must be true of the former. "The Word was made flesh, and we beheld his glory," that is, the glory of the Word, "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." John 1 : 14.

"God is frequently said to have sent his Son into the world. John 3 : 17; 10 : 36; 1 John 4 : 9, 10; but this implies that he was his Son antecedent to his being sent. [illegible] not disciples, but in consequence of his sending them, or of some preparation pertaining to their mission.

"Christ is called the Son of God antecedently to his miraculous conception, and consequently he did not become such by it—"In the fullness of time God sent forth his Son, made of a woman; made under the law, that he might redeem them that were under the law."—"God sent his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh."—The terms "made of a woman, made under the law," are a parenthesis. The position affirmed is that God sent forth his Son to redeem the transgressors of the law. There is equal proof that Christ was "the Son of God" before he was "made of a woman," as that he was "the Word" before he was "made flesh." The phraseology is the same in the one case as in the other. If it be alleged that Christ is here called the Son of God on account of his being made of a woman; I answer, if so, it is also on account of his being made under the law, which is too absurd to admit of a question. Moreover, to say that "God sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh," is equal to saying—that the Son of God assumed human nature: he must therefore have been the Son of God before his incarnation.

"Christ is called the Son of God antecedent to his being "manifested to destroy the works of the devil:" but he was manifested to destroy the works of the devil by taking upon him human nature; consequently he was the Son of God antecedent to the human nature being assumed."

Mr. Fuller was a trinitarian, and believed the contradictory dogma of eternal Sonship, and of his supreme Deity eternally begotten. An absurdity which he himself implicity repudiated in his concession that "in the order of nature, the Father must have existed before the Son;" which harmonizes with our Savior's own testimony, "I live by the Father," and can neither be reconciled with strict eternity or independence. His scriptural arguments, to prove his pre-existence as the Son of God, appear to me to be conclusive. H. G.

Questions for J. S. White.

1. Did "Christ that existed prior to his advent, as a separate person from the Father," suffer in the garden, expire on the cross, and lie three days and three nights in the heart of the earth?

2. We read in Gen. 1 : 1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Also, in Isa. 44 : 6, 'Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God." Also, 8th verse; "Is there a God beside me? Yea, there is no God; I know not any." Does the God spoken of in these Scriptures refer to God the Father, or to Christ the Son?

3. If Christ is "from everlasting," is there any being older than the Son, or before him?

Please answer these few questions, and oblige one seeking after truth.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 3.

Many passages in the sacred Book I found to strengthen and encourage me in seeking the Lord, such as the following: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, "etc. Thus, by searching the Word and earnest, constant prayer, I at length obtained a hope that I might possibly some day obtain a pardon of my sins and that peace and rest I so much desired. I was a stranger to faith, to its power and utility. Could I have had right instruction with regard to this most important of the christian graces and especially in the work of regeneration, I might have avoided days, weeks, yea, months of almost hopeless sorrow and suffering. Hope, fear, and unbelief, only wait for the promised blessing, while faith claims, receives, and enjoys it.

Sept. 3d, 1827, a Methodist camp-meeting was commenced in the vicinity of my residence. I went with a strong desire to obtain mercy and find salvation, yet I did not expect or believe that I should, such were the doubts, fears and darkness of my youthful mind. In the evening, while prayer was being offered, some one observed my tender feelings which I was no longer careful to conceal, and inquired if I loved the Savior? To which I replied that I did not. They then inquired if I was willing to seek him?

"Yes," said I, "with all my heart."

"Will you kneel while I pray for you?"

I quickly fell upon my knees without waiting to be afraid or ashamed. Tears now flowed afresh and such a view of my lost condition, together with a view of the blessed Savior, his tender affection, love and mercy, manifested towards me, his willingness to save, now melted my heart and laid me at his feet. I tried to pray, to submit and give all to God as I had been told to do, but hardly knew how or what, and still found no comfort. I arose, they [illegible] ing relief. Still singing they come to the second verse—

"I've given all for Christ, he's my all, he's my all,"—

"Yes" said I, clear down in the very depths of my heart, "I will give all for Christ, if I can only find him. Here am I, Lord, all that I have, soul and body, time and talents, thine forever! I will be thine and thou art mine!" In an instant my burden of sin and guilt was removed, and it seemed not only a stream, but a flood of light and glory from heaven came flowing into my soul, filling me to overflowing while I refrained not to join in that glad song which once floated o'er Judah's hallowed plain, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to men." Glory to God for what he has done for my soul! O! the happiness I then enjoyed. The flowing stream from which I drank was love, pure love, and such were the ecstasies of heavenly joy which filled my soul, that for a long time I could not refrain from praising God aloud while many of the saints joined in the song. I could now sing from the heart—

"How précious is the name.
Of Christ our Paschal Lamb," etc.

who has borne my sin and shame, appeared my deliverer, and redeemed me from its bondage and power. O precious Redeemer, I could truly say—

"All over-glorious is my Lord,
Must be beloved and yet adored,
His worth, if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love him too."

"I don't like it."

Talent must be buried, the Spirit grieved, God disobeyed, a soul lost,—all because you don't like a woman to "prophesy," thereby fulfilling Scripture. And yet a man can preach, through thick and thin, fire and water; no matter if he is not very gifted; perhaps his wife is three times as able as he is,—can exhort, teach, and influence others to come to Jesus,—but she happens to be a woman. Keep her down; she might eclipse you, husband. No matter about the strivings of the Spirit—force her to obey you; no matter how it stands with her Lord. Tell her it is immodest, etc., etc., and then pull good old Paul's harp-strings and make them tell lies to save you the trouble of being called inventor. Turn and twist, jump over, any way to get over the plain rights of women. Let their hearts break, and their light be extinguished, their peace in God die out, any thing to keep them starching for you, and make them pass respectfully in community.

Well, when Jesus comes, the question will be, "Where is the talent committed?" Sisters will say, "My husband tempted me." Serves you right. The blame falls where it belongs. We learned it from Adam, who laid the blame on Eve. But this is no trifling affair. Brethren, don't ask us to sing,

"His adorable will let us gladly fulfill,
Our talent improve,"

unless you consent for us to practice. Don't call on us to sing, for half of our hymns are prayers; we must not pray in public. Don't ask us to lead in singing at our social meetings. Just put us into the bonds of your will, make us slaves and done with it. For my part, if it is wicked to pray, it is wicked to sing; if this is right, it is right to preach. I want the sisters to see their privilege, and act as circumstances and abilities require. Remember to let man be foremost, . . . but don't you keep back out of sight. You, too, have a God to serve, a salvation to secure. Then stand up for Jesus. Never mind the cross. The crown will be weighed in the same scales. God is God.

Selections.

"The Hour is Coming."

"I believe in the resurrection of the dead!"

Philosophy, falsely so called, may scoff at this item of my faith, and ask me how it can be so, and I cannot tell; but my confidence staggers not, for it is founded upon the Omnipotence of God. I know that his word spoke the earth into existence, and the life that makes it beautiful; I know not that it will be harder for him to resurrect the dead. I grasp the promise, and expect its literal fulfillment.

"The hour is coming." See you that bright array of immortal ones upsprung from the dust of death? Hear you the music of their shout of victory? List you the first sweep of those golden harps? Behold you the whiteness of those priestly robes, the flashing of those kingly crowns? Note you the meeting of the parted—the child upon the bosom of the mother, and the wife clasped to the husband's heart?

Let the hour be welcome! Earth hath not known so glad a time!—Independent.

Hebrew Women.

The Hebrew woman in her love for her kindred soars above her christian sisters. The tender devotion which the daughters of Israel bestow upon their parents, especially upon their father, is full of beauty and pathos. In the dark alleys of the World's Ghetti, when the old Hebrew man toddles home from his daily strife with prejudice and lucre, a wondrous change transforms his face as he crosses the threshold of his weather-beaten house. The furtive glance expands, the crooked gait is made straight, the many wrinkles of his [illegible] things; the smile loses its sinister grin, and is clothed with genial beauty. Rebecca has kissed away the ugliness of the money changer, and to see him sit down at his table after having sent up to Jehovah a prayer for good luck and plenty of gain for the coming day, and chat with his daughter, who delights in humoring his jokes, is a treat for an artist in search of the picturesque, or for a poet in quest of the romantic. Rebeccas abound not only in the regions of the Ghetti, but in the middle and highest order of Hebrew abodes. Here we find the daughters, as a class, watching with Argus eyes fathers' and mothers' happiness and comfort. Here on the domestic shrine, all the fires of love and affection are burning so vigorously that unwittingly even the sympathies are consumed, which are wanted to kindle the great flames round the sacred altar of common humanity. Unless this drawback is constantly kept in view, our description of the Hebrew daughter's love for her parents would be calculated to surround the feelings with a too angelic atmosphere. —Crayon.

How am I to know whether I have the Holy Spirit?

If you have the Holy Spirit, you have seen the evil of sin; you have repented of sin; you have forsaken sin; you hate sin; you watch and pray against sin; you have received the spirit of love. If you have the Spirit of God, you love God supremely. You love the Father, who gave his Son to suffer and die. You love the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, for what he hath done and suffered on your account. You love all the sincere followers of Jesus Christ, and confine not your regards to a party. You love the human race at large, as children of the same family, and you wish them to know the things that belong to their peace. You are of a forbearing and forgiving temper; you pity, and pray for sinners, who, through blindness and ignorance, oppose at present their own eternal interest; you are of a thankful spirit; you thank God for making you to differ, by his grace, from many others, and you praise him for every favor, both of a temporal and spiritual nature; you are zealous for the honor of God in the world; you desire to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and in all the duties of christianity; you esteem the applause, the pleasure and the wealth of the whole world as nothing, in comparison of the love and blessing of God, through Christ Jesus.

An Apostolic Preacher.

I venerate the man whose heart is warm,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof
That he is honest in the sacred cause.
To such I render more than mere respect,
Whose actions say that they respect themselves.
Would I describe a preacher such as Paul,
Were he on earth, would hear, approve and own,
Paul should himself direct me. I would trace
His master-strokes, and draw from his design.
I would express him simple, grave, sincere;
In doctrine uncorrupt; in language plain;
And plain in manner. Decent, solemn, chaste,
And natural in gesture. Much impressed
Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
And anxious mainly that the flock he feeds
May feel it too. Affectionate in look,
And tender in address, as well becomes
A messenger of grace to guilty men.

A Swearer alone with God.

A carrier in a large town in Yorkshire heard his carter one day in the yard swearing dreadfully at his horses. The carrier was a man who feared God, spent his Sabbaths as a teacher in a Sunday school, and endeavored to promote the spiritual good of his fellow creatures. He was shocked to hear the terrible oaths that resounded through the yard. He went up to the young man, who was just setting off with his cart for Manchester, and kindly expostulated with him on the enormity of his sin, and then added: "But if thou wilt swear, stop till thou get through the turnpike on S—— Moor, where none but God and thyself can hear." He then put "The Swearer's Prayer" into his hand, and left him.

The poor fellow cracked his whip and pursued his journey; but he could not get over his master's words. Some time after, his master observed him in the yard, and was very much surprised to see him so altered. There was a seriousness and quietness about him which he had never seen before: and he often seemed as if he had something to say which he could not get out. At length his master was so much struck with his manner, that he asked him if he wanted anything. "Ah! master," said he, "do you remember what you said to me about swearing, and the tract you gave me?" I was thunderstruck. "I went on the road, and I got through the turnpike, and reached S—— Moor; and there I thought that though I was alone, yet God was with me; and I trembled to think how he had been with me, and had known all my sins and follies all my life long. My sins came to my remembrance; I was afraid that he would strike me dead; and I thank God that I have been aroused to seek after the salvation of my poor soul."

The master, as may be supposed, was overjoyed to hear the young man's confession; and it is gratifying to know that his subsequent conduct gave proof of his having ceased to be a slave to sin. "A word spoken in due season, how good is it!"

KINDNESS.—How much misery may be abated, how much suffering removed, by the simple tone and expression of the human voice! Upon the heart that is lone and desolate, how sweetly falls the voice of sympathy and consolation! Why is it, then, that each should be so sparing of that which costs nothing, but which might raise the drooping spirits of his neighbor, and cheer him on his journey—a few kind words and kindly looks?

The Goose that laid the Golden Eggs.

A FABLE FOR THE CHILDREN.

Once, a long time ago, I cannot tell when, While men acted like geese more than geese did like men, There lived a man who, his taste to please, Kept, sheltered and fed, one of those wise geese. And day by day as his goose he fed, For him in return, an egg she laid. The days went on and the man was content, Till as things fell out great riches were sent; For one day as he looked in the nest, behold! His goose had laid a great egg of gold. "What! a golden egg? Uncle L——, is it true?" Well, really, I don't know much better than you; It may be false, though it sounds quite fair, But when it happened I wasn't there. That's the way I heard it, you know, but you see, If it's true, geese are not as they used to be.

Well, this goose having got in a wealthy way, Laid eggs of gold almost every day, If at night she swallowed the golden corn, You might look for a golden egg in the morn. For a while the man was in perfect bliss,—Who would n't be with a goose like this? But at length his passion for gold so grew, That instead of one egg he must needs have two. (Thus passion when fed will ne'er abate, But rushes on till we strive too late To save ourselves from its rolling tide, Ere over the cataract's brow we glide.) Once a common egg was enough for a day, But now one of gold was so small 'twould n't pay. So he reasoned thus—"This goose I know, Must have lived in Ophir a long time ago; And there while she had to herself her time, She swallowed gold that she ever could find; And now she thinks for her board to pay By laying one paltry egg a day. But no, "I'm entirely too old," said he, "For her to play a goose game on me; I've bought the goose and she's all my own, All her quills and feathers and pads and down; All the gold within and the flesh without Is mine—and I know what I'm about." So at it he went with a furious will, His poor old goose for her gold to kill. He caught her first and he wrung her neck, Then he went her carcass to dissect; And he turned it over and twisted it round, But not a jot of gold in the goose he found. So the goose was dead and the work was done, And the fool of golden eggs had none. Then too late he did bitterly lament, And his foolish cruelty repent; But of no avail, for the goose was dead, And with her his hopes of wealth had fled.

Now learn from this, since my tale is done, This lesson—"Let well enough alone," Nor strive with covetous vain desire, To satisfy lust that burns like fire. Learn to be content with your present lot, Nor cast away what you now have got, That you may feed your love of gain, And something better far obtain. But if to heed me you do not choose, Why, just go ahead and kill your goose; And then you will learn in a sorrowful way, Not to kill the goose that such eggs does lay.

UNCLE LORENZO.

"We'll all meet again in the Morning."

Such was the exclamation of a dying child, as the red rays of the sunset streamed on him through the casement. "Good by, papa, good by! Mamma has come for me to-night; don't cry, papa! we'll all meet again in the morning!" It was as if an angel had spoken to that father, and his heart grew lighter under his burden; for something assured him that his little one was safe with Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." There is something cheerful to all who are in trouble in this, "We'll all meet again in the morning!" It rouses up the fainting soul like a trumpet blast, and frightens away forever the dark shapes thronging the avenues of the outer life. Clouds may gather upon our paths—disappointments gather around us like an army with banners, but all this cannot destroy the hope within us, if we have this motto upon our lips: "All will be right in the morning!" If you were to die to-night would it be well in the morning?

The Silent Lyre.

In Memory of our Sister, Fannie Parry.

We've listened to its music,
And it was sweet to hear;
Like gentle breath of evening
Its notes fell on the ear;
So heavenly too, we thought celestial fire
The heart must fill whose fingers swept that lyre.

She sang of themes most sacred—
Of Him who doth uphold
All things in earth and heaven,
Whose righteous acts unfold
The love and wisdom blended in each plan
To bless, redeem, ennoble fallen man.

Of Jesus our Messiah,
His wondrous, boundless love,
His death and resurrection,
And how He waits above
The time to be fulfilled, when once again
He will appear, even on earth to reign.

She sang of that blest promise,
And of the city bright,
With pearls and gems most precious,
All radiant with the light
Of Him upon the throne—He who once died,
But lives again, forever glorified.

Alas! that lyre is silent,
For she who gave it tone
In the cold grave is sleeping,
And we must now bemoan
The loss of those sweet notes, so pure and true,
For sacredness and worth surpassed by few.

Thanks to the God of heaven,
She will not slumber long,
But waken soon, immortal,
To pour forth sweeter song
Than any that delight the mortal ear,
Notes the angelic host will love to hear.

Grace for the stricken household
We fervently implore,
From whence has gone our sister,
Gone, to return no more;—
May this blest truth their sorrowing spirits cheer,
Christ is our Life, and He will soon appear.

Faith.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God."—Paul.

The chief end of man in this life and the next is, to please God, his Maker. If any man please God, he does that which conduces most to his own temporal welfare. Man cannot please God without bringing to himself a great amount of happiness; for if any man please God, it is because he is doing as God has commanded him: therefore He accepts of him as his son, gives him the blessings of adoption, pours upon him the bounties of his grace, makes him a blessed man in this life, and insures him a crown of everlasting life in the world to come, which he shall wear, and which shall shine with unfading lustre when the wreaths of earth's glory have all been melted away; while, on the other hand, if a man does not please God, he inevitably brings upon himself sorrow and suffering in this life; he puts a worm and a rottenness in the core of all his joys; he fills his death-pillow with thorns, and he supplies the eternal fire with fagots of flame which shall consume him that he be no more forever! He that pleases God, is through divine grace journeying onward to the ultimate reward of all those that love and fear God: but he who is not pleasing to Him must, for he has declared it in his Word, "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power"; consequently they must be as though they had not been!

If we are right in taking the position that the chief end of man should be to please God; then the important question follows, how can I please him? And there is something very solemn in the utterance of the text, which stands at the head of this article, "Without faith it is impossible to please God"; that is to say, do what you may, strive as earnestly as you can, live as excellently as you please, make what sacrifices you choose, be as eminent as you can for everything that is lowly and of good repute, yet none of these things can be pleasing to God unless they be mixed with faith. Faith in the record which God hath given of his Son, our elder brother and Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, as being the life-giver, the rightful heir to the throne and kingdom of David, etc., etc. And faith, is taking God at his word, and only as we do this, can we do anything that will be pleasing unto Him!

Faith is an old law; it is as old as the first man. As soon as Cain and Abel were born into the world, and had attained to manhood, God gave a practical proclamation of this law, that "without faith it is impossible to please Him." Cain and Abel, one bright day, erected an altar side by side. Cain brought of the fruits of the trees, and of the abundance of the soil, and placed them upon his altar: Abel brought of the firstlings of the flock, and laid it upon his altar. It was to be decided which God would accept. Cain had brought his best, but he had brought it without faith: Abel brought his sacrifice, but he brought it with faith in what God had revealed. Now, then, which shall best succeed? The offerings are equal in value, for aught we know, and, so far as they themselves are concerned, they are alike good. Upon which will the fire descend? Which will the Lord God consume with the fire of his pleasure? O! I see Abel's offering burning, and Cain's countenance has fallen; for unto Abel and his offering the Lord has respect. And it will be the same until the great work of redemption is completed.

There will never be an acceptable offering which has not been seasoned with faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus! Good, though it may be, as apparently good in itself as that which has faith, yet unless faith be with it, or it be offered in faith, God never can, and never will accept it, for he here declares, "Without faith it is impossible to please God"! Amen. R. V. Lyon.

For the Crisis.

The Lord is Coming!

All believe that the Lord is coming sometime, but the sometime is generally estimated to be somewhere beyond the power of human reason to calculate, it being so infinitely distant that it is useless for us to trouble ourselves about it. Thus the great mass of mankind are wont to look at this all important event, and in a like way will they be disappointed.

To say that all believe in the second advent of Christ, in one sense of the word, may be true, but that all believe it scripturally is equally untrue. There is a wide difference between believing that the Lord is coming in the sense that he always will be coming, yet never come, and believing that he will actually come. The difference is this virtually: 1. That Jesus never will come the second time according to the Scriptures. 2. That according to the Scriptures he will make his second advent, and that the time also will come when it shall no more be said that the Lord is coming.

The Lord will come, for thus it is written, and thus it must be. Prophets in ages past have predicted it, apostles have preached it, and angels have been summoned to bear witness to the same great and glorious truth, that the faith of true believers might be strong in God, who had purposed it ere time began or worlds were made. It is no idle dream or empty vision, no cunning fable, but the word of God.

That the Lord is coming, need not trouble you. They who believe it most earnestly are the least troubled about it. If their hearts are stirred they but vibrate with joy,—the emotions are those of gladness and rejoicing. If you are troubled because Jesus is coming, who is your very best friend, who died for you, it is because your heart is not right, because there is a wicked feeling of unbelief and sin that ought to be removed, and the sooner the better. Then your trouble will no longer be the fruit of fear and shame, but rather of satisfaction and peace. Let us be at peace with God, and in the fullness of his love and favor, and the tidings of Jesus' coming will cease to trouble us forever.

The Lord is coming. Do not let unbelief get the advantage of you. Say not, thousands of years hence he is coming, which is about the same as to say he never will come. Do not let this vain world deceive you in trying to satisfy your conscience in making you believe that it is far in the future, thereby persuading you that the pleasures of sin may be indulged and enjoyed yet a little longer. Beware! for the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. Take heed! for as a snare shall it come upon all the wicked. The Lord is coming. The glorious news may greet your ear before you retire again to the pillow of repose, or ere you rise to witness the morning sun as its brilliant rays are seen shooting above the eastern horizon. But this need give you no terror, no more than the rising of the great luminary of light, for far more warm and congenial will be the light of the Sun of righteousness, and far more blessed will be his rising to the people of God. Nay, you need not be terrified, only let the conscience be purged from sin by the blood of him who was and is the sinner's Friend, and fear, shame and terror will be banished forever and all will be peace. Oh! begone, thou sin of unbelief, thou love of the world, thou pride of life, thou lust of the flesh, for the day is coming when the world, its follies, its pleasures, vanities, fashions, and all its wickedness, shall pass away.

The Lord is coming. The hearts of christendom bear witness to the truth. If there ever was a time when men's hearts were failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth, it is now. The boldest heart is now often made to quail, and the bravest man to shudder with fear. So many various systems have been invented by wicked selfishness, of so complicated a nature, the wisest, purest and bravest are at a loss to know what to do, or how to do it. Nations are distressed with perplexity, and the time of trouble has surely come. The spirit of war, one can observe and feel, is rising up in every breast, seeking to vent itself in the shedding of blood. One may ask what means all this confusion and perplexity, this fear and trembling, this heart-felt distress that pervades all nations? (for none can fail to realize that such a state of things has begun, but why is it?) Flesh and blood can no longer rule the world. Their trial has proved a failure. The more they experiment the deeper they get into trouble; so that, as says the prophet, the foundations of the earth are out of course, and the Lord must arise to judge the earth and settle the difficulty.

The Lord is coming. Soon the parting heavens will reveal him in all his glory coming to reap the harvest of the world. Soon the cry shall go forth, "Thrust in the sickle, for their wickedness is great and the harvest is ripe." Ere long shall the King be seen in his beauty, traveling in the greatness of his strength and in the majesty of his power. But the child of God has nothing to fear. The furnace of trouble, though heated seven-fold, will not even singe the garment of him who is clothed in the robe of righteousness. Those only are troubled who realize danger. Fear only enters the heart of him who is out of the ark of safety. While the world displays the signal of distress, the heart of the christian is made glad. While the world is in trouble and despair, the child of God rejoices in hope. While the one is convulsed with fear and trembling for fear of the things coming on the earth, the other is enjoying the greatest peace and quiet, knowing that redemption draweth nigh. While the one is groping in the darkness of night, the other is beholding the rising star, the morning dawn, the brilliant promise of eternal day.

The Lord is coming. Thou lukewarm christian, arouse from thy sleep of indifference, and draw near with a true heart and drink once more from the fountain of favor and love, lest you faint by the way. Let us all be watchful, lest He come and find us sleeping. Geo. Moyer.

For the Crisis.

Gathering of the Church.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalms 50: 5.

The apostle Peter declares that the times of restitution have been the subject of prophecy by all God's holy prophets since the world began; and although many prophecies would seem to have no such distant allusion, yet they are quoted by the writers of the New Testament, and connected with events concerning the second advent of our Lord; for example, Isa. 8: 18,—"Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and wonders in Israel," etc. Who would have supposed, if the apostle had not called our attention to it, that the children of Isaiah had any significance further than the sign they were unto Ahaz, as explained by the prophet? Again, Hab. 2: 3,—"If the vision tarry"? etc. Who would suppose that the prophetic judgments on the Chaldeans or Babylonians, 2500 years ago, had anything to do with the restitution, if the apostle had not, in Heb. 10: 37, identified the tarrying of the vision with the tarrying of our Lord? Many more cases we might name, going to show that however often some prophecies may seem to have been fulfilled, they remain still for a more full and final accomplishment.

And it would thus seem with our text. While it may appear to have many, at least partial, fulfillments, such as the gathering at the dedication of the temple by Solomon, or the gathering after the captivity, to rear again the prostrate temple of God, or again at the Pentecostal gathering at Jerusalem, when God's elect of that age assembled together and formed a perfect church government, typical of a still future gathering,—viz., that of the first-fruits or church of the first-born, the 144,000 living, waiting ones redeemed from among men. That this gathering also precedes another still more important is plain from Rev. 14: 1. John sees them even before the fall of Mystical Babylon, which shows they are gathered first, if there is any order in point of time in his prophecy; the gathering of the righteous dead (which we think we have some reason to believe is seven years subsequent to the sealing of the first fruits) is the next gathering in order; and the last and final gathering is the general assembly of all God's people, after the times of restitution, in the New Jerusalem, on the new earth.

By examining the context, we think we may learn at what period our text more directly points. 1st verse: "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun (he hath called first the Jews of the east) unto the going down thereof," (and lastly the Gentiles of the west.) 2d verse: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." (We think also, in point of locality, this is in the west.) 3d verse: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence! a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." 4th verse: "He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people." Then come the words of our text, from which it is plain that no gathering short of one connected with the restitution having perfected beauty in Zion, (which agrees with Rev. 14: 1) could possibly fulfill this beautiful Psalm.* That there will be at least a partial preparatory gathering before the coming of the Lord, is plain from other passages.

Moses, in alluding to the birthright of Joseph, speaks prophetically of him as pushing (figurative of the power of the firstling of his bullock) the people together to the ends of the earth, (or the land afar off,) and calls them the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh (Deut. 33: 17), and at the second verse he connects the blessings he enumerates with the coming of the Lord. God has declared (Jer. 31: 9) that Ephraim is his first-born; he has also declared (Ps. 89: 27) he will make Christ his first-born; and as the title to the territory is vested in the first-born (see Gen. 49: 26) how are we to reconcile these passages? As we have shown heretofore, the promise of the earth was confirmed to Joseph, and to prove it referred to rulership, it is reserved to the line of Ephraim; but there is no way this promise can be fulfilled in its ultimate sense, except by a resurrection from the dead, and a change to immortal life; but although God has given to Ephraim and his constituents an unreserved title to territory, he has given him only a conditional one to immortality; and the only way God can consistently bestow this immortal life, is by giving it through his Son; he must be manifested in the flesh, and fulfill the spirit of the law in obedience, and die the just for the unjust to satisfy the law. He rises again the first-born from the dead, and becomes the author of eternal life to all who come to him as such. He stands to his people in the position of father, husband and brother. As the second Adam, he is at once the husband and father. As Eve was the flesh and bone of the first Adam, so the apostle declares the same mystical union exists between Christ and his church; and as he is the great head and fountain of life, he is the father of all the children of faith in the new covenant of unity and love. He is also the elder brother of Ephraim, inasmuch as he (the Son of the living God) assumed the brotherhood of Israel of the tribe of Judah. He became surety for the birthright of Joseph, who represents the seed of faith, the glorious Bride of the Son of God, and the Father gives her, with her glorious inheritance as her marriage portion, to his glorified, incarnate Son; while the last representative of this birthright assembles the first fruits of this favored multitude, and is granted by the fore-ordained favor of the Father to sit at the right hand of his Son; thereby fulfilling his ancient promise in its most literal sense. See Matt. 20: 21; Luke 12: 44; Rev. 3: 21; Ps. 60: 7.

Again we would remark, and we think the sense of the text rather favors the idea, that the gathering of the first-fruits is a distinctive and prior gathering to those of the resurrection; and from Rev. it would even seem prior to the fall of Babylon; and we know of no passage to conflict with the idea that Christ will appear to those of the first-fruits waiting in the holy place (Ps. 91) seven years prior to the general gathering and resurrection; unless it can be proved that the term, the Lord himself, in 1 Thess. 4: 16, is not the Father, but the Son; then we admit there is but little ground to look for the coming of the Son before the last event; but it would make it hard to reconcile Rev. 14: 1, with Matt. 24: 31, 40.

That there is a gathering of first-fruits, is evident from the Levitical types and Rev., and our only business is to harmonize God's word with the order of it, and to encourage the meek children of faith to assemble in unity and love, and hasten our coming Bridegroom to crown us with immortal life. We deem it a glorious privilege to live to see the King in his beauty, without passing through the dark portals of the grave. We may truly exclaim when we see the vail removing, and our King approaching, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him; he will save us, and we will rejoice in his salvation." Who cannot love Jesus? Who would not be willing to forego the fleeting, illusory pleasures of this short life for the glorious immortality our heavenly Father offers through Jesus to a perishing world, and now so soon to be revealed? Our blessed Lord is not only the resurrection and life of his sleeping dead, but he declares that those that live and believe on him shall never die. What a blessed assurance! truly "the lines are fallen unto (us) in pleasant places; yea, (we) have a goodly heritage."

Lastly, we will inquire, what is the covenant of sacrifice the Lord asks of us to fit us for gathering unto him? The context declares God will take from us no bulls or goats, for every beast of the forest is his, and the cattle on a thousand hills; but that we shall offer to him our thanksgiving and pay our vows to the Most High. Saith the Lord," "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him who ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God." And Paul adds in view of our inheritance, "Let us offer the sacrifice of Jesus, in praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name." And further, "to do good, and communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifice God is well pleased." The covenant of sacrifice of the first church at Jerusalem was a common equality to fit them for gathering; they looked to God in faith that their wants would be supplied, and their covetous, selfish feelings vanished and prepared them for unity and love. This is the easy covenant of sacrifice, dearly beloved, our God requires us to subscribe to, to fit us for his gathering, and we deem it incumbent on those who desire to be gathered with the first-fruits, to cut themselves loose from every alliance with the world in its present order of things, and gather together as a unit, trusting in an all-sufficient God, and wait by faith and prayer for the revelation of his Son from heaven. P. E. Armstrong.

* Some have attributed this Psalm, as well as the 80th, which I have heretofore ascribed to David, to a certain Asaph of the Babylonish captivity, because the books of the Scriptures were not compiled till after that time by Ezra, while some events had transpired in the time which would seem to have given occasion for the penning of these and other Psalms, and further, because they do not bear the name of David in their title; but to these views I dissent. First, I find no Asaph named other than the one spoken of as one of the chief singers of David, and the composition is not necessarily in the text a psalm of Asaph, but, as the margin renders it, a psalm for Asaph. We frequently afterwards read of the son or sons of Asaph, but no individual as a writer of Psalms.

Again, I think if they had not been written by David, they would not have been mixed so indiscriminately with others bearing his name; and as to their speaking of the captivity which occurred so long after David, I consider, as no argument at all, for the 14th and 53d Psalms which bear David's name speak of a captivity, which shows he was a prophet, and could as easily speak of hanging harps on willows by the rivers of Babylon, as of parting the Savior's garments and casting lots on his vesture; and if the Old Testament books had not been compiled till the days of Christ, some of our great men would no doubt argue that the 22d Psalm must have been written by a certain David who witnessed the events named therein.

For the Crisis.

A Sixty Dollar Dress.

"Who for?" For a woman. "What kind of a woman? A gay worldling?" O no, a professor of religion—a minister's wife. "Where? In a city where men count their wealth by millions?" No, in the country where many are poor, and where some have hardly clothes to go to meeting, and where, as I was told, a colporteur labored and visited two days in one neighborhood and only sold twenty-six cents' worth of books; while such was the destitution of reading matter that he distributed freely a number of dollars' worth. "But a minister's wife?" Yes, an example to the flock. "Does she buy such a dress as that?" O no, it is given to her. "Who gives it, some rich lady?" No, they all contribute, and all get together once a week in a "ladies' social circle," to drink tea, do sewing, tell the news! (I presume), and work, to earn a sixty dollar dress for the minister's wife!

"A minister's wife? What kind? She must be a Universalist and believe all will be saved, or some one who had no faith in Him who wore the seamless robe and the thorny crown, and who said in his agony, 'They parted my garments, and for my vesture did they cast lots'! O no, my friend, the minister is orthodox after the straitest sect of New England orthodoxy, and believes that Christ was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich.

"But do all the women who get together in that 'social circle' have sixty dollar dresses?" I presume not,—at least if they do I doubt if their husbands have paid for them. "What will be the tendencies and results of wearing such kind of dresses?" I should not think them good. "Will not every foolish girl want a sixty dollar dress?" I presume so. "Will they not covet the minister's wife's and envy her the use of it?" Possibly. "Will it not foster extravagance and that ungodliness that always attends it?" Perhaps so.

"But are the folks there so very benevolent as all that would indicate?" I judge not. Very benevolent people do not usually plan such enterprises. They see too many ways for money where it can do much more good, than it would there. They think of tract distribution, Bible circulation, missionary work and all local needs, and so use up their money in a far better way than that.

"I suppose sixty dollars must do a great deal of good if rightly applied?" Certainly. Let me see. It would buy one thousand NEW TESTAMENTS at six cents each, and these would supply a thousand families, or a thousand little boys and girls, with the words of everlasting life. SIXTY DOLLARS would, I think, hire a colporteur FOUR OR FIVE months, to visit from house to house to distribute books and tracts furnished by the Tract Society. SIXTY DOLLARS would purchase about two hundred and forty Bibles at 25 cents each, and so supply as many persons with the lively oracles. SIXTY DOLLARS would purchase ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY THOUSAND PAGES of good christian tracts at 20 pages for a cent, (and they can be got in such quantities for that price,) and these would be enough to place a four page tract in the hands of every person in a city or community of THIRTY THOUSAND SOULS.

"Do ministers' wives generally wear sixty dollar dresses?" I cannot say, certainly, I hope not. I can testify of a truth concerning one minister's wife that she never had a sixty dollar dress, nor a fifty dollar dress, nor a twenty-five dollar dress, nor a ten dollar dress, nor, I think, a five dollar dress, with perhaps a single exception. SHE thinks that a shilling calico does very well for her to wear to meeting, and she wears such and cheaper ones so that her husband can go among the poor, and the NEEDY, and the RICH, and the 'STINGY, and preach salvation FREE, while they trust in the Lord for a support in doing it.

"What do you think ministers' wives should do in such cases?" I think they ought to say, "costly array is forbidden in the Bible and therefore I will not wear a sixty dollar dress. Give me something different from that or give me nothing;" and if she would circulate sixty copies of Judson's Letter on dress among her people at an expense of sixty cents it would probably cure them of all such notions. "Where can that minister's wife wear such a dress?" I don't know, I am sure. It would not do to wear at home or to work in. If she wears it at church all hands will be looking at the dress instead of hearing the sermon. And if her husband should be preaching from Isa. 3: 16—24, or 1 Tim. 2: 8—10, or 1 Pet. 3: 3—5, what would he say when he came to make the application of his text about costly array? Besides, a sixty dollar dress ought to be covered with a forty dollar shawl, a fifty dollar cloak, a thirty dollar bonnet, and other rigging enough to make up $200 worth at least. She could not wear such a dress to visit the poor and distressed, or standing beside the sick and sorrowing. It would'nt look well at a missionary meeting or a benevolent anniversary. It might do for a ball or wedding dress on some great occasion, but could it be worn at "THE MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB?" Pitt.

NOTE.—"Judson's Letter on Dress," referred to in the above article, can be had at this office, or of H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I., at $1 per one hundred copies, pre-paid. Let it be widely circulated.

To G. W. Gillespie:

The difficulty in the way of a correct scriptural view respecting the Jewish or Mosaic Sabbath, I apprehend to be in erroneously regarding that Sabbath as a type of a thousand years, or millennium rest in the future.

Without attempting at this time, to present the argument that the thousand years of Rev. 20th, and which are connected with the dragon of chap. 12, are in the past, permit me to offer for your consideration the following from the pen of another, which was published some years ago, and which, I think, gives light on the question of what the Jewish Sabbath was typical, and of what the Sabbath or Rest of God is typical: for you will see that the author shows that the antitype of the Mosaic Sabbath is rest to believers in the gospel dispensation, and the Rest of Gen. 2: 2, is the future everlasting rest of the redeemed in the new creation. W. S. G.

"THE TYPE OF THE SABBATH UNDER THE LAW."

"The Sabbath ordained on Sinai was never designed as a type of a Millennium, or a thousand years' rest; nor was it a type of anything beyond the gospel dispensation.

"There are two rests typified in the plan revealed, as clearly as there are two ceremonies announced, or two tabernacles given. The first type is announced as follows, Gen. 2: 2;—'And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.' Mark, this text does not read, nor does it teach that God rested just a day, but he rested on the seventh day, from all his work of creation, and from those works he has rested ever since, and will continue to rest until he shall create all things new; after which will come his final, his eternal rest from his work of creation so far as this world is concerned; the new creation shall abide forever.

"This rest of God, which commences on the seventh day of the creation, was and is a type of his endless rest and of the endless rest of his people in the new creation. But the Sabbath given on Sinai is not a type of the same rest, for God does not give two types to point to the same thing, under widely different circumstances. This Sabbath, however, was a type of rest, it was like all that pertained to the Sinai covenant, a shadow of good to come. The two cherubims, on each side of the mercy-seat shadowed forth in the holy place the two covenants of mercy; one represents the Sinai, the other the gospel covenant, while the mercy-seat represents the atonement made by Christ. The Sinai Sabbath was a type of the rest of every believer in Christ under the gospel covenant.

"To keep the Sabbath under the law every person must refrain from doing all manner of work; hence it was a rest from all manual labor, and a breach of it was punished with death. The law was a system of outward ceremonies, and this rest from manual labor was a type of a more important rest, and the penalty following a breach of it was a type of a more terrible punishment.

"In the gospel, believers are not required to refrain from lawful labor, but they are required to refrain from all the service of sin, to cease to serve self and sin, and to become the servants of righteousness. All persons when connected with God and the truth, from that point cease from their own works as God did from his works of creation and they begin to work the works of God: i. e., they obey the gospel, and the words of Christ are true in every case. Matt. 11: 28—30,—'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.' The labor here is not manual labor, but is the service of sin and of self, and the rest is that which is experienced by every person who takes the yoke of Christ. His yoke is taken and the rest entered upon when we believe.

"Heb. 4: 3.—'For we which believe do enter into rest.' This rest is compared to a certain day pointed out by David in the 25th Psalm, and is quoted by the apostle, Heb. 4th, which day is the gospel day, as proved by chapter 3d where this quotation is pinned down to the gospel dispensation. This, however, is not the final rest, but it is the antitype of the Jewish Sabbath, and a failure to keep this rest or enter into it will be followed by a severer penalty than was a breach of the Sabbath. The fact that a desecration of the Jewish Sabbath was punished proves that it was a type of rest in probationary time, and that a desecration of the antitype would be followed by a greater punishment. A desecration of the type was punished with temporal, Adamic death; from this death they will have a resurrection; but such as decline to enter into and keep the gospel rest, that obey not the gospel, shall be punished with everlasting destruction (everlasting death) from the presence of the Lord,' etc. shall never have a resurrection from that death.

"But when God rested the seventh day from all his works, his rest was commenced where all was sinless and free, and no provision is made for a breach, for there were no element to desecrate it, there was no enactment in reference to it, [illegible] as a whole it looks like a natural result of closing up the works of creation. A creation in which there was not one element to disturb that rest. Not [illegible] there was no devil in all the universe of God. [illegible]

The Silent Lyre.

IN MEMORY OF OUR SISTER, FANNIE PARRY.

We've listened to its music,
And it was sweet to hear;
Like gentle breath of evening
Its notes fell on the ear;
So heavenly too, we thought celestial fire
The heart must fill whose fingers swept that lyre.

She sang of themes most sacred—
Of Him who doth uphold
All things in earth and heaven,
Whose righteous acts unfold
The love and wisdom blended in each plan
To bless, redeem, ennoble fallen man.

Of Jesus our Messiah,
His wondrous, boundless love,
His death and resurrection,
And how He waits above
The time to be fulfilled, when once again
He will appear, even on earth to reign.

She sang of that blest promise,
And of the city bright,
With pearls and gems most precious,
All radiant with the light
Of Him upon the throne—He who once died,
But lives again, forever glorified.

Alas! that lyre is silent,
For she who gave it tone
In the cold grave is sleeping,
And we must now bemoan
The loss of those sweet notes, so pure and true,
For sacredness and worth surpassed by few.

Thanks to the God of heaven,
She will not slumber long,
But waken soon, immortal,
To pour forth sweeter song
Than any that delight the mortal ear,
Notes the angelic host will love to hear.

Grace for the stricken household
We fervently implore,
From whence has gone our sister,
Gone, to return no more;—
May this blest truth their sorrowing spirits cheer,
Christ is our Life, and He will soon appear.

Faith.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God."—PAUL.

The chief end of man in this life and the next is, to please God, his Maker. If any man please God, he does that which conduces most to his own temporal welfare. Man cannot please God without bringing to himself a great amount of happiness; for if any man please God, it is because he is doing as God has commanded him: therefore He accepts of him as his son, gives him the blessings of adoption, pours upon him the bounties of his grace, makes him a blessed man in this life, and insures him a crown of everlasting life in the world to come, which he shall wear, and which shall shine with unfading lustre when the wreaths of earth's glory have all been melted away; while, on the other hand, if a man does not please God, he inevitably brings upon himself sorrow and suffering in this life; he puts a worm and a rottenness in the core of all his joys; he fills his death-pillow with thorns, and he supplies the eternal fire with fagots of flame which shall consume him that he be no more forever! He that pleases God, is through divine grace journeying onward to the ultimate reward of all those that love and fear God: but he who is not pleasing to Him must, for he has declared it in his Word, "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power"; consequently they must be as though they had not been!

If we are right in taking the position that the chief end of man should be to please God; then the important question follows, how can I please him? And there is something very solemn in the utterance of the text, which stands at the head of this article, "Without faith it is impossible to please God"; that is to say, do what you may, strive as earnestly as you can, live as excellently as you please, make what sacrifices you choose, be as eminent as you can for everything that is lowly and of good repute, yet none of these things can be pleasing to God unless they be mixed with faith. Faith in the record which God hath given of his Son, our elder brother and Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, as being the life-giver, the rightful heir to the throne and kingdom of David, etc., etc. And faith, is taking God at his word, and only as we do this, can we do anything that will be pleasing unto Him!

Faith is an old law; it is as old as the first man. As soon as Cain and Abel were born into the world, and had attained to manhood, God gave a practical proclamation of this law, that "without faith it is impossible to please Him." Cain and Abel, one bright day, erected an altar side by side. Cain brought of the fruits of the trees, and of the abundance of the soil, and placed them upon his altar: Abel brought of the firstlings of the flock, and laid it upon his altar. It was to be decided which God would accept. Cain had brought his best, but he had brought it without faith: Abel brought his sacrifice, but he brought it with faith in what God had revealed. Now, then, which shall best succeed? The offerings are equal in value, for aught we know, and, so far as they themselves are concerned, they are alike good. Upon which will the fire descend? Which will the Lord God consume with the fire of his pleasure? O! I see Abel's offering burning, and Cain's countenance has fallen; for unto Abel and his offering the Lord has respect. And it will be the same until the great work of redemption is completed.

There will never be an acceptable offering which has not been seasoned with faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus! Good, though it may be, as apparently good in itself as that which has faith, yet unless faith be with it, or it be offered in faith, God never can, and never will accept it, for he here declares, "Without faith it is impossible to please God"! Amen. R. V. LYON.

The Lord is Coming!

All believe that the Lord is coming sometime, but the sometime is generally estimated to be somewhere beyond the power of human reason to calculate, it being so infinitely distant that it is useless for us to trouble ourselves about it. Thus the great mass of mankind are wont to look at this all important event, and in a like way will they be disappointed.

To say that all believe in the second advent of Christ, in one sense of the word, may be true, but that all believe it scripturally is equally untrue. There is a wide difference between believing that the Lord is coming in the sense that he always will be coming, yet never come, and believing that he will actually come. The difference is this virtually: 1. That Jesus never will come the second time according to the Scriptures. 2. That according to the Scriptures he will make his second advent, and that the time also will come when it shall no more be said that the Lord is coming.

The Lord will come, for thus it is written, and thus it must be. Prophets in ages past have predicted it, apostles have preached it, and angels have been summoned to bear witness to the same great and glorious truth, that the faith of true believers might be strong in God, who had purposed it ere time began or worlds were made. It is no idle dream or empty vision, no cunning fable, but the word of God.

That the Lord is coming, need not trouble you. They who believe it most earnestly are the least troubled about it. If their hearts are stirred they but vibrate with joy,—the emotions are those of gladness and rejoicing. If you are troubled because Jesus is coming, who is your very best friend, who died for you, it is because your heart is not right, because there is a wicked feeling of unbelief and sin that ought to be removed, and the sooner the better. Then your trouble will no longer be the fruit of fear and shame, but rather of satisfaction and peace. Let us be at peace with God, and in the fullness of his love and favor, and the tidings of Jesus' coming will cease to trouble us forever.

The Lord is coming. Do not let unbelief get the advantage of you. Say not, thousands of years hence he is coming, which is about the same as to say he never will come. Do not let this vain world deceive you in trying to satisfy your conscience in making you believe that it is far in the future, thereby persuading you that the pleasures of sin may be indulged and enjoyed yet a little longer. Beware! for the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. Take heed! for as a snare shall it come upon all the wicked. The Lord is coming. The glorious news may greet your ear before you retire again to the pillow of repose, or ere you rise to witness the morning sun as its brilliant rays are seen shooting above the eastern horizon. But this need give you no terror, no more than the rising of the great luminary of light, for far more warm and congenial will be the light of the Sun of righteousness, and far more blessed will be his rising to the people of God. Nay, you need not be terrified, only let the conscience be purged from sin by the blood of him who was and is the sinner's Friend, and fear, shame and terror will be banished forever and all will be peace. Oh! begone, thou sin of unbelief, thou love of the world, thou pride of life, thou lust of the flesh, for the day is coming when the world, its follies, its pleasures, vanities, fashions, and all its wickedness, shall pass away.

The Lord is coming. The hearts of christendom bear witness to the truth. If there ever was a time when men's hearts were failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth, it is now. The boldest heart is now often made to quail, and the bravest man to shudder with fear. So many various systems have been invented by wicked selfishness, of so complicated a nature, the wisest, purest and bravest are at a loss to know what to do, or how to do it. Nations are distressed with perplexity, and the time of trouble has surely come. The spirit of war, one can observe and feel, is rising up in every breast, seeking to vent itself in the shedding of blood. One may ask what means all this confusion and perplexity, this fear and trembling, this heart-felt distress that pervades all nations? (for none can fail to realize that such a state of things has begun, but why is it?) Flesh and blood can no longer rule the world. Their trial has proved a failure. The more they experiment the deeper they get into trouble; so that, as says the prophet, the foundations of the earth are out of course, and the Lord must arise to judge the earth and settle the difficulty.

The Lord is coming. Soon the parting heavens will reveal him in all his glory coming to reap the harvest of the world. Soon the cry shall go forth, "Thrust in the sickle, for their wickedness is great and the harvest is ripe." Ere long shall the King be seen in his beauty, traveling in the greatness of his strength and in the majesty of his power. But the child of God has nothing to fear. The furnace of trouble, though heated seven-fold, will not even singe the garment of him who is clothed in the robe of righteousness. Those only are troubled who realize danger. Fear only enters the heart of him who is out of the ark of safety. While the world displays the signal of distress, the heart of the christian is made glad. While the world is in trouble and despair, the child of God rejoices in hope. While the one is convulsed with fear and trembling for fear of the things coming on the earth, the other is enjoying the greatest peace and quiet, knowing that redemption draweth nigh. While the one is groping in the darkness of night, the other is beholding the rising star, the morning dawn, the brilliant promise of eternal day.

The Lord is coming. Thou lukewarm christian, arouse from thy sleep of indifference, and draw near with a true heart and drink once more from the fountain of favor and love, lest you faint by the way. Let us all be watchful, lest He come and find us sleeping. GEO. MOYER.

For the Crisis.

Gathering of the Church.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—PSALMS 50: 5.

The apostle Peter declares that the times of restitution have been the subject of prophecy by all God's holy prophets since the world began; and although many prophecies would seem to have no such distant allusion, yet they are quoted by the writers of the New Testament, and connected with events concerning the second advent of our Lord; for example, Isa. 8: 18,—"Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and wonders in Israel," etc. Who would have supposed, if the apostle had not called our attention to it, that the children of Isaiah had any significance further than the sign they were unto Ahaz, as explained by the prophet? Again, Hab. 2: 3.—"If the vision tarry"? etc. Who would suppose that the prophetic judgments on the Chaldeans or Babylonians, 2500 years ago, had anything to do with the restitution, if the apostle had not, in Heb. 10: 37, identified the tarrying of the vision with the tarrying of our Lord? Many more cases we might name, going to show that however often some prophecies may seem to have been fulfilled, they remain still for a more full and final accomplishment.

And it would thus seem with our text. While it may appear to have many, at least partial, fulfillments, such as the gathering at the dedication of the temple by Solomon, or the gathering after the captivity, to rear again the prostrate temple of God, or again at the Pentecostal gathering at Jerusalem, when God's elect of that age assembled together and formed a perfect church government, typical of a still future gathering,—viz., that of the first-fruits or church of the first-born, the 144,000 living, waiting ones redeemed from among men. That this gathering also precedes another still more important is plain from Rev. 14: 1. John sees them even before the fall of Mystical Babylon, which shows they are gathered first, if there is any order in point of time in his prophecy; the gathering of the righteous dead (which we think we have some reason to believe is seven years subsequent to the sealing of the first fruits) is the next gathering in order; and the last and final gathering is the general assembly of all God's people, after the times of restitution, in the New Jerusalem, on the new earth.

By examining the context, we think we may learn at what period our text more directly points. 1st verse: "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun (he hath called first the Jews of the east) unto the going down thereof," (and lastly the Gentiles of the west.) 2d verse: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." (We think also, in point of locality, this is in the west.) 3d verse: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence! a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." 4th verse: "He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people." Then come the words of our text, from which it is plain that no gathering short of one connected with the restitution having perfected beauty in Zion, (which agrees with Rev. 14: 1) could possibly fulfill this beautiful Psalm.* That there will be at least a partial preparatory gathering before the coming of the Lord, is plain from other passages.

Moses, in alluding to the birthright of Joseph, speaks prophetically of him as pushing (figurative of the power of the firstling of his bullock) the people together to the ends of the earth, (or the land afar off,) and calls them the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh (Deut. 33: 17), and at the second verse he connects the blessings he enumerates with the coming of the Lord. God has declared (Jer. 31: 9) that Ephraim is his first-born; he has also declared (Ps. 89: 27) he will make Christ his first-born; and as the title to the territory is vested in the first-born (see Gen. 49: 26) how are we to reconcile these passages? As we have shown heretofore, the promise of the earth was confirmed to Joseph, and to prove it referred to rulership, it is reserved to the line of Ephraim; but there is no way this promise can be fulfilled in its ultimate sense, except by a resurrection from the dead, and a change to immortal life; but although God has given to Ephraim and his constituents an unreserved title to territory, he has given him only a conditional one to immortality; and the only way God can consistently bestow this immortal life, is by giving it through his Son; he must be manifested in the flesh, and fulfill the spirit of the law in obedience, and die the just for the unjust to satisfy the law. He rises again the first-born from the dead, and becomes the author of eternal life to all who come to him as such. He stands to his people in the position of father, husband and brother. As the second Adam, he is at once the husband and father. As Eve was the flesh and bone of the first Adam, so the apostle declares the same mystical union exists between Christ and his church; and as he is the great head and fountain of life, he is the father of all the children of faith in the new covenant of unity and love. He is also the elder brother of Ephraim, inasmuch as he (the Son of the living God) assumed the brotherhood of Israel of the tribe of Judah. He became surety for the birthright of Joseph, who represents the seed of faith, the glorious Bride of the Son of God, and the Father gives her, with her glorious inheritance as her marriage portion, to his glorified, incarnate Son; while the last representative of this birthright assembles the first fruits of this favored multitude, and is granted by the fore-ordained favor of the Father to sit at the right hand of his Son; thereby fulfilling his ancient promise in its most literal sense. See Matt. 20: 21; Luke 12: 44; Rev. 3: 21; Ps. 60: 7.

Again we would remark, and we think the sense of the text rather favors the idea, that the gathering of the first-fruits is a distinctive and prior gathering to those of the resurrection; and from Rev. it would even seem prior to the fall of Babylon; and we know of no passage to conflict with the idea that Christ will appear to those of the first-fruits waiting in the holy place (Ps. 91) seven years prior to the general gathering and resurrection; unless it can be proved that the term, the Lord himself, in 1 Thess. 4: 16, is not the Father, but the Son; then we admit there is but little ground to look for the coming of the Son before the last event; but it would make it hard to reconcile Rev. 14: 1, with Matt. 24: 31, 40.

That there is a gathering of first-fruits, is evident from the Levitical types and Rev., and our only business is to harmonize God's word with the order of it, and to encourage the meek children of faith to assemble in unity and love, and hasten our coming Bridegroom to crown us with immortal life. We deem it a glorious privilege to live to see the King in his beauty, without passing through the dark portals of the grave. We may truly exclaim when we see the vail removing, and our King approaching, 'Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him; he will save us, and we will rejoice in his salvation." Who cannot love Jesus? Who would not be willing to forego the fleeting, illusory pleasures of this short life for the glorious immortality our heavenly Father offers through Jesus to a perishing world, and now so soon to be revealed? Our blessed Lord is not only the resurrection and life of his sleeping dead, but he declares that those that live and believe on him shall never die. What a blessed assurance! truly "the lines are fallen unto (us) in pleasant places; yea, (we) have a goodly heritage."

Lastly, we will inquire, what is the covenant of sacrifice the Lord asks of us to fit us for gathering unto him? The context declares God will take from us no bulls or goats, for every beast of the forest is his, and the cattle on a thousand hills; but that we shall offer to him our thanksgiving and pay our vows to the Most High. Saith the Lord," "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him who ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God." And Paul adds in view of our inheritance, "Let us offer the sacrifice of Jesus, in praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name." And further, "to do good, and communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifice God is well pleased." The covenant of sacrifice of the first church at Jerusalem was a common equality to fit them for gathering; they looked to God in faith that their wants would be supplied, and their covetous, selfish feelings vanished and prepared them for unity and love. This is the easy covenant of sacrifice, dearly beloved, our God requires us to subscribe to, to fit us for his gathering, and we deem it incumbent on those who desire to be gathered with the first-fruits, to cut themselves loose from every alliance with the world in its present order of things, and gather together as a unit, trusting in an all-sufficient God, and wait by faith and prayer for the revelation of his Son from heaven. P. E. ARMSTRONG.

* Some have attributed this Psalm, as well as the 80th, which I have heretofore ascribed to David, to a certain Asaph of the Babylonish captivity, because the books of the Scriptures were not compiled till after that time by Ezra, while some events had transpired in the time which would seem to have given occasion for the penning of these and other Psalms, and further, because they do not bear the name of David in their title; but to these views I dissent. First, I find no Asaph named other than the one spoken of as one of the chief singers of David, and the composition is not necessarily in the text a psalm of Asaph, but, as the margin renders it, a psalm for Asaph. We frequently afterwards read of the son or sons of Asaph, but no individual as a writer of Psalms.

Again, I think if they had not been written by David, they would not have been mixed so indiscriminately with others bearing his name; and as to their speaking of the captivity which occurred so long after David, I consider as no argument at all, for the 14th and 53d Psalms which bear David's name speak of a captivity, which shows he was a prophet, and could as easily speak of hanging harps on willows by the rivers of Babylon, as of parting the Savior's garments and casting lots on his vesture; and if the Old Testament books had not been compiled till the days of Christ, some of our great men would no doubt argue that the 22d Psalm must have been written by a certain David, who witnessed the events named therein.

A Sixty Dollar Dress.

"Who for?" For a woman. "What kind of a woman? A gay worldling?" O no, a professor of religion—a minister's wife. "Where? In a city where men count their wealth by millions?" No, in the country where many are poor, and where some have hardly clothes to go to meeting, and where, as I was told, a colporteur labored and visited two days in one neighborhood and only sold twenty-six cents' worth of books; while such was the destitution of reading matter that he distributed freely a number of dollars' worth. "But a minister's wife?" Yes, an example to the flock. "Does she buy such a dress as that?" O no, it is given to her. "Who gives it, some rich lady?" No, they all contribute, and all get together once a week in a "ladies' social circle," to drink tea, do sewing, tell the news! (I presume), and work, to earn a sixty dollar dress for the minister's wife!

"A minister's wife? What kind? She must be a Universalist and believe all will be saved, or some one who had no faith in Him who wore the seamless robe and the thorny crown, and who said in his agony, 'They parted my garments, and for my vesture did they cast lots'"! O no, my friend, the minister is orthodox after the straitest sect of New England orthodoxy, and believes that Christ was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich.

"But do all the women who get together in that 'social circle' have sixty dollar dresses?" I presume not,—at least if they do I doubt if their husbands have paid for them. "What will be the tendencies and results of wearing such kind of dresses?" I should not think them good. "Will not every foolish girl want a sixty dollar dress?" I presume so. "Will they not covet the minister's wife's and envy her the use of it?" Possibly. "Will it not foster extravagance and that ungodliness that always attends it?" Perhaps so.

"But are the folks there so very benevolent as all that would indicate?" I judge not. Very benevolent people do not usually plan such enterprises. They see too many ways for money where it can do much more good, than it would there. They think of tract distribution, Bible circulation, missionary work and all local needs, and so use up their money in a far better way than that.

"I suppose sixty dollars must do a great deal of good if rightly applied?" Certainly. Let me see. It would buy one thousand NEW TESTAMENTS at six cents each, and these would supply a thousand families, or a thousand little boys and girls, with the words of everlasting life. SIXTY DOLLARS would, I think, hire a colporteur FOUR OR FIVE months, to visit from house to house to distribute books and tracts furnished by the Tract Society. SIXTY DOLLARS would purchase about two hundred and forty Bibles at 25 cents each, and so supply as many persons with the lively oracles. SIXTY DOLLARS would purchase ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY THOUSAND PAGES of good christian tracts at 20 pages for a cent, (and they can be got in such quantities for that price,) and these would be enough to place a four page tract in the hands of every person in a city or community of THIRTY THOUSAND SOULS.

"Do ministers' wives generally wear sixty dollar dresses?" I cannot say, certainly, I hope not. I can testify of a truth concerning one minister's wife that she never had a sixty dollar dress, nor a fifty dollar dress, nor a twenty-five dollar dress, nor a ten dollar dress, nor, I think, a five dollar dress, with perhaps a single exception. SHE thinks that a shilling calico does very well for her to wear to meeting, and she wears such and cheaper ones so that her husband can go among the poor, and the NEEDY, and the RICH, and the 'STINGY', and preach salvation FREE, while they trust in the Lord for a support in doing it.

"What do you think ministers' wives should do in such cases?" I think they ought to say, "costly array is forbidden in the Bible and therefore I will not wear a sixty dollar dress. Give me something different from that or give me nothing;" and if she would circulate sixty copies of Judson's Letter on dress among her people at an expense of sixty cents it would probably cure them of all such notions. "Where can that minister's wife wear such a dress?" I don't know, I am sure. It would not do to wear at home or to work in. If she wears it at church all hands will be looking at the dress instead of hearing the sermon. And if her husband should be preaching from Isa. 3: 16—24, or 1 Tim. 2: 8—10, or 1 Pet. 3: 3—5, what would he say when he came to make the application of his text about costly array? Besides, a sixty dollar dress ought to be covered with a forty dollar shawl, a fifty dollar cloak, a thirty dollar bonnet, and other rigging enough to make up $200 worth at least. She could not wear such a dress to visit the poor and distressed, or standing beside the sick and sorrowing. It would'nt look well at a missionary meeting or a benevolent anniversary. It might do for a ball or wedding dress on some great occasion, but could it be worn at "THE MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB?" PITH.

NOTE.—"Judson's Letter on Dress," referred to in the above article, can be had at this office, or of H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I., at $1 per one hundred copies, pre-paid. Let it be widely circulated.

To G. W. Gillespie:

The difficulty in the way of a correct scriptural view respecting the Jewish or Mosaic Sabbath, I apprehend to be in erroneously regarding that Sabbath as a type of a thousand years, or millennium rest in the future.

Without attempting at this time, to present the argument that the thousand years of Rev. 20th, and which are connected with the dragon of chap. 12, are in the past, permit me to offer for your consideration the following from the pen of another, which was published some years ago, and which, I think, gives light on the question of what the Jewish Sabbath was typical, and of what the Sabbath or Rest of God, is typical: for you will see that the author shows that the antitype of the Mosaic Sabbath is rest to believers in the gospel dispensation, and the Rest of Gen. 2: 2, is the future everlasting rest of the redeemed in the new creation. W. S. G.

"THE TYPE OF THE SABBATH UNDER THE LAW."

"The Sabbath ordained on Sinai was never designed as a type of a Millennium, or a thousand years' rest; nor was it a type of anything beyond the gospel dispensation.

"There are two rests typified in the plan revealed, as clearly as there are two ceremonies announced, or two tabernacles given. The first type is announced as follows, Gen. 2: 2;—'And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.' Mark, this text does not read, nor does it teach that God rested just a day, but he rested on the seventh day, from all his work of creation, and from those works he has rested ever since, and will continue to rest until he shall create all things new; after which will come his final, his eternal rest from his work of creation so far as this world is concerned; the new creation shall abide forever.

"This rest of God, which commences on the seventh day of the creation, was and is a type of his endless rest and of the endless rest of his people in the new creation. But the Sabbath given on Sinai is not a type of the same rest, for God does not give two types to point to the same thing, under widely different circumstances. This Sabbath, however, was a type of rest, it was like all that pertained to the Sinai covenant, a shadow of good to come. The two cherubims, on each side of the mercy-seat shadowed forth in the holy place the two covenants of mercy; one represents the Sinai, the other the gospel covenant, while the mercy-seat represents the atonement made by Christ. The Sinai Sabbath was a type of the rest of every believer in Christ under the gospel covenant.

"To keep the Sabbath under the law every person must refrain from doing all manner of work; hence it was a rest from all manual labor, and a breach of it was punished with death. The law was a system of outward ceremonies, and this rest from manual labor was a type of a more important rest, and the penalty following a breach of it was a type of a more terrible punishment.

"In the gospel, believers are not required to refrain from lawful labor, but they are required to refrain from all the service of sin, to cease to serve self and sin, and to become the servants of righteousness. All persons when connected with God and the truth, from that point cease from their own works as God did from his works of creation and they begin to work the works of God: i. e., they obey the gospel, and the words of Christ are true in every case. Matt. 11: 28—30.—'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.' The labor here is not manual labor, but is the service of sin and of self, and the rest is that which is experienced by every person who takes the yoke of Christ. His yoke is taken and the rest entered upon when we believe.

"Heb. 4: 3.—'For we which believe do enter into rest.' This rest is compared to a certain day pointed out by David in the 25th Psalm, and is quoted by the apostle, Heb. 4th, which day is the gospel day, as proved by chapter 3d where this quotation is pinned down to the gospel dispensation. This, however, is not the final rest, but it is the antitype of the Jewish Sabbath, and a failure to keep this rest or enter into it will be followed by a severer penalty than was a breach of the Sabbath. The fact that a desecration of the Jewish Sabbath was punished proves that it was a type of rest in probationary time, and that a desecration of the antitype would be followed by a greater punishment. A desecration of the type was punished with temporal, Adamic death; from this death they will have a resurrection; but such as decline to enter into and keep the gospel rest, that obey not the gospel, shall be punished with everlasting destruction (everlasting death) from the presence of the Lord,' etc., shall never have a resurrection from that death.

"But when God rested the seventh day from all his works, his rest was commenced where all was sinless and free, and no provision is made for a breach, for there were no sinners to desecrate it, there was no enactment in reference to it, hence no penalty connected; as a whole it looks like a natural result of closing up the works of creation. A creation in which there was not one sinner to disturb the rest. Not even the old devil; there was no devil in all the universe of God. The gospel [illegible]

The Silent Lyre.

IN MEMORY OF OUR SISTER, FANNIE PARRY.

We've listened to its music,
And it was sweet to hear;
Like gentle breath of evening
Its notes fell on the ear;
So heavenly too, we thought celestial fire
The heart must fill whose fingers swept that lyre.

She sang of themes most sacred—
Of Him who doth uphold
All things in earth and heaven,
Whose righteous acts unfold
The love and wisdom blended in each plan
To bless, redeem, ennoble fallen man.

Of Jesus our Messiah,
His wondrous, boundless love,
His death and resurrection,
And how He waits above
The time to be fulfilled, when once again
He will appear, even on earth to reign.

She sang of that blest promise,
And of the city bright,
With pearls and gems most precious,
All radiant with the light
Of Him upon the throne—He who once died,
But lives again, forever glorified.

Alas! that lyre is silent,
For she who gave it tone
In the cold grave is sleeping,
And we must now bemoan
The loss of those sweet notes, so pure and true,
For sacredness and worth surpassed by few.

Thanks to the God of heaven,
She will not slumber long,
But waken soon, immortal,
To pour forth sweeter song
Than any that delight the mortal ear,
Notes the angelic host will love to hear.

Grace for the stricken household
We fervently implore,
From whence has gone our sister,
Gone, to return no more;—
May this blest truth their sorrowing spirits cheer,
Christ is our Life, and He will soon appear.

Faith.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God."—PAUL.

The chief end of man in this life and the next is, to please God, his Maker. If any man please God, he does that which conduces most to his own temporal welfare. Man cannot please God without bringing to himself a great amount of happiness; for if any man please God, it is because he is doing as God has commanded him: therefore He accepts of him as his son, gives him the blessings of adoption, pours upon him the bounties of his grace, makes him a blessed man in this life, and insures him a crown of everlasting life in the world to come, which he shall wear, and which shall shine with unfading lustre when the wreaths of earth's glory have all been melted away; while, on the other hand, if a man does not please God, he inevitably brings upon himself sorrow and suffering in this life; he puts a worm and a rottenness in the core of all his joys; he fills his death-pillow with thorns, and he supplies the eternal fire with fagots of flame which shall consume him that he be no more forever! He that pleases God, is through divine grace journeying onward to the ultimate reward of all those that love and fear God: but he who is not pleasing to Him must, for he has declared it in his Word, "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power"; consequently they must be as though they had not been!

If we are right in taking the position that the chief end of man should be to please God; then the important question follows, how can I please him? And there is something very solemn in the utterance of the text, which stands at the head of this article, "Without faith it is impossible to please God"; that is to say, do what you may, strive as earnestly as you can, live as excellently as you please, make what sacrifices you choose, be as eminent as you can for everything that is lovely and of good repute, yet none of these things can be pleasing to God unless they be mixed with faith. Faith in the record which God hath given of his Son, our elder brother and Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, as being the life-giver, the rightful heir to the throne and kingdom of David, etc., etc. And faith, is taking God at his word, and only as we do this, can we do anything that will be pleasing unto Him!

Faith is an old law; it is as old as the first man. As soon as Cain and Abel were born into the world, and had attained to manhood, God gave a practical proclamation of this law, that "without faith it is impossible to please Him." Cain and Abel, one bright day, erected an altar side by side. Cain brought of the fruits of the trees, and of the abundance of the soil, and placed them upon his altar: Abel brought of the firstlings of the flock, and laid it upon his altar. It was to be decided which God would accept. Cain had brought his best, but he had brought it without faith: Abel brought his sacrifice, but he brought it with faith in what God had revealed. Now, then, which shall best succeed? The offerings are equal in value, for aught we know, and, so far as they themselves are concerned, they are alike good. Upon which will the fire descend? Which will the Lord God consume with the fire of his pleasure? O! I see Abel's offering burning, and Cain's countenance has fallen; for unto Abel and his offering the Lord has respect. And it will be the same until the great work of redemption is completed.

There will never be an acceptable offering which has not been seasoned with faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus! Good, though it may be, as apparently good in itself as that which has faith, yet unless faith be with it, or it be offered in faith, God never can, and never will accept it, for he here declares, "Without faith it is impossible to please God"! Amen. R. V. LYON.

The Lord is Coming!

All believe that the Lord is coming sometime, but the sometime is generally estimated to be somewhere beyond the power of human reason to calculate, it being so infinitely distant that it is useless for us to trouble ourselves about it. Thus the great mass of mankind are wont to look at this all important event, and in a like way will they be disappointed.

To say that all believe in the second advent of Christ, in one sense of the word, may be true, but that all believe it scripturally is equally untrue. There is a wide difference between believing that the Lord is coming in the sense that he always will be coming, yet never come, and believing that he will actually come. The difference is this virtually: 1. That Jesus never will come the second time according to the Scriptures. 2. That according to the Scriptures he will make his second advent, and that the time also will come when it shall no more be said that the Lord is coming.

The Lord will come, for thus it is written, and thus it must be. Prophets in ages past have predicted it, apostles have preached it, and angels have been summoned to bear witness to the same great and glorious truth, that the faith of true believers might be strong in God, who had purposed it ere time began or worlds were made. It is no idle dream or empty vision, no cunning fable, but the word of God.

That the Lord is coming, need not trouble you. They who believe it most earnestly are the least troubled about it. If their hearts are stirred they but vibrate with joy,—the emotions are those of gladness and rejoicing. If you are troubled because Jesus is coming, who is your very best friend, who died for you, it is because your heart is not right, because there is a wicked feeling of unbelief and sin that ought to be removed, and the sooner the better. Then your trouble will no longer be the fruit of fear and shame, but rather of satisfaction and peace. Let us be at peace with God, and in the fullness of his love and favor, and the tidings of Jesus' coming will cease to trouble us forever.

The Lord is coming. Do not let unbelief get the advantage of you. Say not, thousands of years hence he is coming, which is about the same as to say he never will come. Do not let this vain world deceive you in trying to satisfy your conscience in making you believe that it is far in the future, thereby persuading you that the pleasures of sin may be indulged and enjoyed yet a little longer. Beware! for the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. Take heed! for as a snare shall it come upon all the wicked. The Lord is coming. The glorious news may greet your ear before you retire again to the pillow of repose, or ere you rise to witness the morning sun as his brilliant rays are seen shooting above the eastern horizon. But this need give you no terror, no more than the rising of the great luminary of light, for far more warm and congenial will be the light of the Sun of righteousness, and far more blessed will be his rising to the people of God. Nay, you need not be terrified, only let the conscience be purged from sin by the blood of him who was and is the sinner's Friend, and fear, shame and terror will be banished forever and all will be peace. Oh! begone, thou sin of unbelief, thou love of the world, thou pride of life, thou lust of the flesh, for the day is coming when the world, its follies, its pleasures, vanities, fashions, and all its wickedness, shall pass away.

The Lord is coming. The hearts of christendom bear witness to the truth. If there ever was a time when men's hearts were failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth, it is now. The boldest heart is now often made to quail, and the bravest man to shudder with fear. So many various systems have been invented by wicked selfishness, of so complicated a nature, the wisest, purest and bravest are at a loss to know what to do, or how to do it. Nations are distressed with perplexity, and the time of trouble has surely come. The spirit of war, one can observe and feel, is rising up in every breast, seeking to vent itself in the shedding of blood. One may ask what means all this confusion and perplexity, this fear and trembling, this heartfelt distress that pervades all nations? (for none can fail to realize that such a state of things has begun, but why is it?) Flesh and blood can no longer rule the world. Their trial has proved a failure. The more they experiment the deeper they get into trouble; so that, as says the prophet, the foundations of the earth are out of course, and the Lord must arise to judge the earth and settle the difficulty.

The Lord is coming. Soon the parting heavens will reveal him in all his glory coming to reap the harvest of the world. Soon the cry shall go forth, "Thrust in the sickle, for their wickedness is great and the harvest is ripe." Ere long shall the King be seen in his beauty, traveling in the greatness of his strength and in the majesty of his power. But the child of God has nothing to fear. The furnace of trouble, though heated seven-fold, will not even singe the garment of him who is clothed in the robe of righteousness. Those only are troubled who realize danger. Fear only enters the heart of him who is out of the ark of safety. While the world displays the signal of distress, the heart of the christian is made glad. While the world is in trouble and despair, the child of God rejoices in hope. While the one is convulsed with fear and trembling for fear of the things coming on the earth, the other is enjoying the greatest peace and quiet, knowing that redemption draweth nigh. While the one is groping in the darkness of night, the other is beholding the rising star, the morning dawn, the brilliant promise of eternal day.

The Lord is coming. Thou lukewarm christian, arouse from thy sleep of indifference, and draw near with a true heart and drink once more from the fountain of favor and love, lest you faint by the way. Let us all be watchful, lest He come and find us sleeping. GEO. MOYER.

Gathering of the Church.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—PSALMS 50: 5.

The apostle Peter declares that the times of restitution have been the subject of prophecy by all God's holy prophets since the world began; and although many prophecies would seem to have no such distant allusion, yet they are quoted by the writers of the New Testament, and connected with events concerning the second advent of our Lord; for example, Isa. 8: 18,—"Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and wonders in Israel," etc. Who would have supposed, if the apostle had not called our attention to it, that the children of Isaiah had any significance further than the sign they were unto Ahaz, as explained by the prophet? Again, Hab. 2: 3,—"If the vision tarry"? etc. Who would suppose that the prophetic judgments on the Chaldeans or Babylonians, 2500 years ago, had anything to do with the restitution, if the apostle had not, in Heb. 10: 37, identified the tarrying of the vision with the tarrying of our Lord? Many more cases we might name, going to show that however often some prophecies may seem to have been fulfilled, they remain still for a more full and final accomplishment.

And it would thus seem with our text. While it may appear to have many, at least partial, fulfillments, such as the gathering at the dedication of the temple by Solomon, or the gathering after the captivity, to rear again the prostrate temple of God, or again at the Pentecostal gathering at Jerusalem, when God's elect of that age assembled together and formed a perfect church government, typical of a still future gathering,—viz., that of the first-fruits or church of the first-born, the 144,000 living, waiting ones redeemed from among men. That this gathering also precedes another still more important is plain from Rev. 14: 1. John sees them even before the fall of Mystical Babylon, which shows they are gathered first, if there is any order in point of time in his prophecy; the gathering of the righteous dead (which we think we have some reason to believe is seven years subsequent to the sealing of the first fruits) is the next gathering in order; and the last and final gathering is the general assembly of all God's people, after the times of restitution, in the New Jerusalem, on the new earth.

By examining the context, we think we may learn at what period our text more directly points. 1st verse: "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun (he hath called first the Jews of the east) unto the going down thereof," (and lastly the Gentiles of the west.) 2d verse: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." (We think also, in point of locality, this is in the west.) 3d verse: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence! a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." 4th verse: "He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people." Then come the words of our text, from which it is plain that no gathering short of one connected with the restitution having perfected beauty in Zion, (which agrees with Rev. 14: 1) could possibly fulfill this beautiful Psalm.* That there will be at least a partial preparatory gathering before the coming of the Lord, is plain from other passages.

Moses, in alluding to the birthright of Joseph, speaks prophetically of him as pushing (figurative of the power of the firstling of his bullock) the people together to the ends of the earth, (or the land afar off,) and calls them the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh (Deut. 33: 17), and at the second verse he connects the blessings he enumerates with the coming of the Lord. God has declared (Jer. 31: 9) that Ephraim is his first-born; he has also declared (Ps. 89: 27) he will make Christ his first-born; and as the title to the territory is vested in the first-born (see Gen. 49: 26) how are we to reconcile these passages? As we have shown heretofore, the promise of the earth was confirmed to Joseph, and to prove it referred to rulership, it is reserved to the line of Ephraim; but there is no way this promise can be fulfilled in its ultimate sense, except by a resurrection from the dead, and a change to immortal life; but although God has given to Ephraim and his constituents an unreserved title to territory, he has given him only a conditional one to immortality; and the only way God can consistently bestow this immortal life, is by giving it through his Son; he must be manifested in the flesh, and fulfill the spirit of the law in obedience, and die the just for the unjust to satisfy the law. He rises again the first-born from the dead, and becomes the author of eternal life to all who come to him as such. He stands to his people in the position of father, husband and brother. As the second Adam, he is at once the husband and father. As Eve was the flesh and bone of the first Adam, so the apostle declares the same mystical union exists between Christ and his church; and as he is the great head and fountain of life, he is the father of all the children of faith in the new covenant of unity and love. He is also the elder brother of Ephraim, inasmuch as he (the Son of the living God) assumed the brotherhood of Israel of the tribe of Judah. He became surety for the birthright of Joseph, who represents the seed of faith, the glorious Bride of the Son of God, and the Father gives her, with her glorious inheritance as her marriage portion, to his glorified, incarnate Son; while the last representative of this birthright assembles the first fruits of this favored multitude, and is granted by the fore-ordained favor of the Father to sit at the right hand of his Son; thereby fulfilling his ancient promise in its most literal sense. See Matt. 20: 21; Luke 12: 44; Rev. 3: 21; Ps. 60: 7.

Again we would remark, and we think the sense of the text rather favors the idea, that the gathering of the first-fruits is a distinctive and prior gathering to those of the resurrection; and from Rev. it would even seem prior to the fall of Babylon; and we know of no passage to conflict with the idea that Christ will appear to those of the first-fruits waiting in the holy place (Ps. 91) seven years prior to the general gathering and resurrection; unless it can be proved that the term, the Lord himself, in 1 Thess. 4: 16, is not the Father, but the Son; then we admit there is but little ground to look for the coming of the Son before the last event; but it would make it hard to reconcile Rev. 14: 1, with Matt. 24: 31, 40.

That there is a gathering of first-fruits, is evident from the Levitical types and Rev., and our only business is to harmonize God's word with the order of it, and to encourage the meek children of faith to assemble in unity and love, and hasten our coming Bridegroom to crown us with immortal life. We deem it a glorious privilege to live to see the King in his beauty, without passing through the dark portals of the grave. We may truly exclaim when we see the vail removing, and our King approaching, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him; he will save us, and we will rejoice in his salvation." Who cannot love Jesus? Who would not be willing to forego the fleeting, illusory pleasures of this short life for the glorious immortality our heavenly Father offers through Jesus to a perishing world, and now so soon to be revealed? Our blessed Lord is not only the resurrection and life of his sleeping dead, but he declares that those that live and believe on him shall never die. What a blessed assurance! truly "the lines are fallen unto (us) in pleasant places; yea, (we) have a goodly heritage."

Lastly, we will inquire, what is the covenant of sacrifice the Lord asks of us to fit us for gathering unto him? The context declares God will take from us no bulls or goats, for every beast of the forest is his, and the cattle on a thousand hills; but that we shall offer to him our thanksgiving and pay our vows to the Most High. Saith the Lord," "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him who ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God." And Paul adds in view of our inheritance, "Let us offer the sacrifice of Jesus, in praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name." And further, "to do good, and communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifice God is well pleased." The covenant of sacrifice of the first church at Jerusalem was a common equality to fit them for gathering; they looked to God in faith that their wants would be supplied, and their covetous, selfish feelings vanished and prepared them for unity and love. This is the easy covenant of sacrifice, dearly beloved, our God requires us to subscribe to, to fit us for his gathering, and we deem it incumbent on those who desire to be gathered with the first-fruits, to cut themselves loose from every alliance with the world in its present order of things, and gather together as a unit, trusting in an all-sufficient God, and wait by faith and prayer for the revelation of his Son from heaven. P. E. ARMSTRONG.

* Some have attributed this Psalm, as well as the 80th, which I have heretofore ascribed to David, to a certain Asaph of the Babylonish captivity, because the books of the Scriptures were not compiled till after that time by Ezra, while some events had transpired in the time which would seem to have given occasion for the penning of these and other Psalms, and further, because they do not bear the name of David in their title; but to these views I dissent. First, I find no Asaph named other than the one spoken of as one of the chief singers of David, and the composition is not necessarily in the text a psalm of Asaph, but, as the margin renders it, a psalm for Asaph. We frequently afterwards read of the son or sons of Asaph, but no individual as a writer of Psalms.

Again, I think if they had not been written by David, they would not have been mixed so indiscriminately with others bearing his name; and as to their speaking of the captivity which occurred so long after David, I consider, as no argument at all, for the 18th and 22d Psalms which bear David's name speak of a captivity, which shows he was a prophet, and could as easily speak of hanging harps on willows by the rivers of Babylon, as of parting the Savior's garments and casting lots on his vesture; and if the Old Testament books had not been compiled till the days of Christ, some of our great men would no doubt argue that the 22d Psalm must have been written by a certain David who witnessed the events named therein.

A Sixty Dollar Dress.

"Who for?" For a woman. "What kind of a woman? A gay worldling?" O no, a professor of religion—a minister's wife. "Where? In a city where men count their wealth by millions?" No, in the country where many are poor, and where some have hardly clothes to go to meeting, and where, as I was told, a colporteur labored and visited two days in one neighborhood and only sold twenty-six cents' worth of books; while such was the destitution of reading matter that he distributed freely a number of dollars' worth. "But a minister's wife?" Yes, an example to the flock. "Does she buy such a dress as that?" O no, it is given to her. "Who gives it, some rich lady?" No, they all contribute, and all get together once a week in a "ladies' social circle," to drink tea, do sewing, tell the news! (I presume), and work, to earn a sixty dollar dress for the minister's wife!

"A minister's wife? What kind? She must be a Universalist and believe all will be saved, or some one who had no faith in Him who wore the seamless robe and the thorny crown, and who said in his agony, 'They parted my garments, and for my vesture did they cast lots'"! O no, my friend, the minister is orthodox after the straitest sect of New England orthodoxy, and believes that Christ was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich.

"But do all the women who get together in that 'social circle' have sixty dollar dresses?" I presume not,—at least if they do I doubt if their husbands have paid for them. "What will be the tendencies and results of wearing such kind of dresses?" I should not think them good. "Will not every foolish girl want a sixty dollar dress?" I presume so. "Will they not covet the minister's wife's and envy her the use of it?" Possibly. "Will it not foster extravagance and that ungodliness that always attends it?" Perhaps so.

"But are the folks there so very benevolent as all that would indicate?" I judge not. Very benevolent people do not usually plan such enterprises. They see too many ways for money where it can do much more good, than it would there. They think of tract distribution, Bible circulation, missionary work and all local needs, and so use up their money in a far better way than that.

"I suppose sixty dollars must do a great deal of good if rightly applied?" Certainly. Let me see. It would buy one thousand NEW TESTAMENTS at six cents each, and these would supply a thousand families, or a thousand little boys and girls, with the words of everlasting life. SIXTY DOLLARS would, I think, hire a colporteur FOUR OR FIVE months, to visit from house to house to distribute books and tracts furnished by the Tract Society. SIXTY DOLLARS would purchase about two hundred and forty Bibles at 25 cents each, and so supply as many persons with the lively oracles. SIXTY DOLLARS would purchase ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY THOUSAND PAGES of good christian tracts at 20 pages for a cent, (and they can be got in such quantities for that price,) and these would be enough to place a four page tract in the hands of every person in a city or community of THIRTY THOUSAND SOULS.

"Do ministers' wives generally wear sixty dollar dresses?" I cannot say, certainly, I hope not. I can testify of a truth concerning one minister's wife that she never had a sixty dollar dress, nor a fifty dollar dress, nor a twenty-five dollar dress, nor a ten dollar dress, nor, I think, a five dollar dress, with perhaps a single exception. SHE thinks that a shilling calico does very well for her to wear to meeting, and she wears such and cheaper ones so that her husband can go among the poor, and the NEEDY, and the RICH, and the 'STINGY, and preach salvation FREE, while they trust in the Lord for a support in doing it.

"What do you think ministers' wives should do in such cases?" I think they ought to say, "costly array is forbidden in the Bible and therefore I will not wear a sixty dollar dress. Give me something different from that or give me nothing;" and if she would circulate sixty copies of Judson's Letter on dress among her people at an expense of sixty cents it would probably cure them of all such notions. "Where can that minister's wife wear such a dress?" I don't know, I am sure. It would not do to wear at home or to work in. If she wears it at church all hands will be looking at the dress instead of hearing the sermon. And if her husband should be preaching from Isa. 3: 16—24, or 1 Tim. 2: 8—10, or 1 Pet. 3: 3—5, what would he say when he came to make the application of his text about costly array? Besides, a sixty dollar dress ought to be covered with a forty dollar shawl, a fifty dollar cloak, a thirty dollar bonnet, and other rigging enough to make up $200 worth at least. She could not wear such a dress to visit the poor and distressed, or standing beside the sick and sorrowing. It would'nt look well at a missionary meeting or a benevolent anniversary. It might do for a ball or wedding dress on some great occasion, but could it be worn at "THE MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB?" PHIL.

NOTE.—"Judson's Letter on Dress," referred to in the above article, can be had at this office, or of H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I., at $1 per one hundred copies, pre-paid. Let it be widely circulated.

To G. W. Gillespie:

The difficulty in the way of a correct scriptural view respecting the Jewish or Mosaic Sabbath, I apprehend to be in erroneously regarding that Sabbath as a type of a thousand years, or millennium rest in the future.

Without attempting at this time, to present the argument that the thousand years of Rev. 20th, and which are connected with the dragon of chap. 12, are in the past, permit me to offer for your consideration the following from the pen of another, which was published some years ago, and which, I think, gives light on the question of what the Jewish Sabbath was typical, and of what the Sabbath or Rest of God, is typical: for you will see that the author shows that the antitype of the Mosaic Sabbath is rest to believers in the gospel dispensation, and the Rest of Gen. 2: 2, is the future everlasting rest of the redeemed in the new creation. [illegible]

"THE TYPE OF THE SABBATH UNDER THE LAW."

"The Sabbath ordained on Sinai was never designed as a type of a Millennium, or a thousand years' rest; nor was it a type of anything beyond the gospel dispensation.

"There are two rests typified in the plan revealed, as clearly as there are two ceremonies announced, or two tabernacles given. The first type is announced as follows, Gen. 2: 2;—'And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.' Mark, this text does not read, nor does it teach that God rested just a day, but he rested on the seventh day, from all his work of creation, and from those works he has rested ever since, and will continue to rest until he shall create all things new; after which will come his final, his eternal rest from his work of creation so far as this world is concerned; the new creation shall abide forever.

"This rest of God, which commences on the seventh day of the creation, was and is a type of his endless rest and of the endless rest of his people in the new creation. But the Sabbath given on Sinai is not a type of the same rest, for God does not give two types to point to the same thing, under widely different circumstances. This Sabbath, however, was a type of rest, it was like all that pertained to the Sinai covenant, a shadow of good to come. The two cherubims, on each side of the mercy-seat shadowed forth in the holy place the two covenants of mercy; one represents the Sinai, the other the gospel covenant, while the mercy-seat represents the atonement made by Christ. The Sinai Sabbath was a type of the rest of every believer in Christ under the gospel covenant.

"To keep the Sabbath under the law every person must refrain from doing all manner of work; hence it was a rest from all manual labor, and a breach of it was punished with death. The law was a system of outward ceremonies, and this rest from manual labor was a type of a more important rest, and the penalty following a breach of it was a type of a more terrible punishment.

"In the gospel, believers are not required to refrain from lawful labor, but they are required to refrain from all the service of sin, to cease to serve self and sin, and to become the servants of righteousness. All persons when connected with God and the truth, from that point cease from their own works as God did from his works of creation and they begin to work the works of God: i. e., they obey the gospel, and the words of Christ are true in every case. Matt. 11: 28—30,—'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.' The labor here is not manual labor, but is the service of sin and of self, and the rest is that which is experienced by every person who takes the yoke of Christ. His yoke is taken and the rest entered upon when we believe.

"Heb. 4: 3.—'For we which believe do enter into rest.' This rest is compared to a certain day pointed out by David in the 25th Psalm, and is quoted by the apostle, Heb. 4th, which day is the gospel day, as proved by chapter 3d where this quotation is pinned down to the gospel dispensation. This, however, is not the final rest, but it is the antitype of the Jewish Sabbath, and a failure to keep this rest or enter into it will be followed by a severer penalty than was a breach of the Sabbath. The fact that a desecration of the Jewish Sabbath was punished proves that it was a type of rest in probationary time, and that a desecration of the antitype would be followed by a greater punishment. A desecration of the type was punished with temporal, Adamic death; from this death they will have a resurrection; but such as decline to enter into and keep the gospel rest, that obey not the gospel, shall be punished with everlasting destruction (everlasting death) from the presence of the Lord,' etc., shall never have a resurrection from that death.

"But when God rested the seventh day from all his works, his rest was commenced where all was sinless and free, and no provision is made for a breach, for there were no sinners to desecrate it, there was no enactment in reference to it; hence, no penalty connected; as a whole it looks like a natural result of closing up the works of creation. A creation in which there was not one to disturb the rest. Not even the old devil; there was no devil in all the universe of God. The gospel himself a devil by lying to the first pair. When God sabbatized, there was nothing to hurt or destroy in all the 'holy mountain,' in all the earth. As was the type in this respect, so will be the antitype; hence the apostle says, 'there remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.'

"It is therefore proved that Christ came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it; and that when he had established the gospel, and given the seal of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, the assurance that he had come out of the holy place, every shadow of the law had met its substance, every type had found its antitype, and hence the apostle says truly, Rom. 10 : 4,—'For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.' Christ in the gospel has become the end of every type, the substance of every shadow."

The Mission Sabbath School.

Here, in Providence, R. I., we find it established. It was my privilege to see quite a host of bright-eyed rosy-cheeked girls and boys seated in New Market Hall, yesterday, some repeating whole chapters from the Bible, others learning their A, B, C's. Eld. H. L. Hastings preached part of the day,—P. C. Rodman spoke in the afternoon. In the evening the Hall was filled, the devil's agents occupying the front seats and receiving their portion in "due season."

But the school. The children look happy. They are mannerly. They seem to appreciate their opportunity for learning. They love their teacher. They are as pretty a group of children as one need ask for. Some of them are very poor. I never thought a city in UNCLE SAM'S dominions was inhabited by such extremely poor people. I thought they all belonged to Canada

Came here the 7th inst. Found Sr. Hastings' hands and heart full of cares and wants of other mortals. She has labored too much for present good, and is "weary" in "well-doing," but not of it. Up stairs I find a dark, dark room, where we place all the clothing friends forward. There are some very good articles, which we can convert into coats and pants, dresses and capes, to great advantage. Here are shoes, a few, which will warm little feet and gladden youthful hearts. Again, I find garments too much worn, so that they cannot be made over. We duly appreciate the kindness of the donor, but it may be hoped no one will pay freight on worthless baggage. I've judged for myself, and speak for myself. Charge it to me.

Sister ——, of Hitchcocksville, Conn., is hereby notified that her blessed bundle arrived to-day, and was stored away in the sacred depository by myself, with tears of joy and thanksgiving. It caused rejoicing clear through the house, for our stock had begun to look scarce. Those skirts, etc., came just in time. It was altogether a welcome little package. Many sincere thanks to those "Congregational sisters" for their gifts. God bless them. As for your "Dorcas," tell her that we need outer garments and shoes more particularly. She can have work enough to do in the vineyard of the Lord, and there are lips and hearts ready to bless her. My love to her.

I noticed in the "Crisis," one sister who has "agreed with three others" to send us one half day's earnings occasionally. That's a noble plan; we hope it will be executed. Let us hear from you, dear sisters. Another sister inquires about that "poor African family." They have all been sick with the measles, and are not well yet. So let us work as for the Lord.

To those who may wish to write me, let me say, letters are welcome,—are a true comfort. Address me to Box 131 at any time. Will answer prompt as possible. May the Lord bless us all, and give us a right to the tree of life. M. MATHEWS.

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

Although Bro. White says he is "very sure" that he "did not overlook the point" in my inquiries, but "did directly reply to it"; I think I shall be able to show that he surely did overlook the point.

It appears that Bro. W. does understand my questions so as to state them plainly, but the reply does not appear to me to meet the case. He says the substance of my inquiries is this:—"Did Jesus exist before he was born of Mary, and is Jesus the Son of God more than eighteen hundred and sixty-five years old?" Then in his reply says: "The name Jesus, is about as old as Bro. Preble thinks. . . . And also, 'He shall be called the Son of God.'" Then my Bro. says: "These two names were applied to that child, born of Mary, about the time our brother supposes." Note this admission. These two names—Jesus and Son of God were applied to that child about the time I suppose, i. e., about eighteen hundred and sixty-five years ago.

Again, Bro. W. says:—"The age of a name, and the age of a person may be wide apart," etc. This statement in a general sense may be true, but here I, think, my brother "overlooks the point," for he labors to show that the name Jesus, and the person bearing it, are "wide apart." But, in [illegible] "the child" when circumcised was only "eight days old, when the name Jesus given to it. So we see that the name, and the person bearing it are not wide apart, only eight days! My brother appears to have overlooked this point, he taking the position that it was the name that was eight days old, when in fact it was "the child!" We see, therefore, that the name, when really given, was eight days younger than the child to whom it was given.

When my brother admits that the name Jesus, and Son of God, were two names "applied to that child born of Mary about the time" I suppose, I think he admits just what I take to be true, viz: that Jesus, the Son of God did not pre-exist before the world was, only in the Father's "purpose." (See 2 Tim, 1 : 9; Eph. 1 : 4, and 3 : 11; Tit. 1 : 2, and 1 Pet. 1 : 20.) Mark the term used at the head of my inquiries: Pre-existence of JESUS.

I know Bro. W. says, "Before the world was, he was not called by these names, but other names, such as God, the Word of God." But will our brother tell us where we can find the proof of this statement? I do not mean where such terms may be found which apply to our Savior, but where shall we find the proof that "Jesus,"—"that child,"—that "holy thing,"—was called by these names "before the world was"? True, we read that, "In the beginning was the Word," etc.; but the original, here rendered Word, is not Theos, but Logos. Will Bro. White please tell us the difference between the two words? T. M. PREBLE.

The Church in Dansville, N. Y.

[From the Dansville Advertiser.]

TO THE PUBLIC.—At a meeting of the believers in the speedy and personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, held in Dansville, Dec. 23d, 1860, it was resolved, First, that we consider it both expedient and in accordance with the Scriptures, that we who are looking for the immediate advent of our Lord come into the New Testament order of his people and complete our organization. Second, that we adopt a church covenant, an article of association, make an enrollment of memberships, and appoint our church officers. Third, that hereafter we be known and recognized as "The church of Advent Christians" in Dansville, and as such, attend to all the ordinances of the Lord's house,

The following church covenant and article of association being drawn up, was then presented by Elder Daniel T. Taylor to the church for their consideration, which after an amicable and full discussion was unanimously adopted:

Church Covenant and Article of Association of the Advent Christian Church in Dansville, N. Y.

We, the undersigned, whose names are hereto appended, do hereby and henceforth agree to associate ourselves together in the order and form of a Christian church, to the end that we may mutually assist each other, in the cause of our coming Lord and Master, sustain the preaching of the gospel in our midst, and maintain all the ordinances of the church of Christ. We also agree to kindly and faithfully aid each other to watch over one another in christian love, admonish each other as brethren, and unitedly labor to promote the best interests and welfare of our common cause, that we may grow in grace and be ourselves the instruments in the salvation of sinners. And we do hereby solemnly agree to take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as our divine rule and guide in all matters of discipline, doctrine, faith and practice, and to abide by our enlightened and conscientious understanding of their teachings, interpreted in their literal construction, in reason and sober judgment.

Our Book.

The sixth edition of the "Voice of the Church" has just been issued by H. L. Hastings. This important work has never been answered, can never be answered, is unanswerable. It is still making its way in the community and doing immense good. I have one hundred copies now in Bro. Hastings' hands at Providence, R. I., and much desire to effect the sale of them in this the time of our need. Who will buy the book? It is well worth a dollar, to you, reader, to you, neighbor, or friend, or to the minister of your place. Write to the publisher and send orders to H. L. [illegible] Providence, R. I.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 6, 1861.

My Pilgrimage.

The last chat we had with our readers was at Castleton, Vt., Tuesday, Jan. 1st, at the close of a most interesting meeting, when several resolved to serve the Lord, and others who had been serving him took advanced ground. It was truly a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. The Lord sent showers of blessing upon us, that caused our cup of joy to overflow.

Wednesday, Jan. 2nd. Bro. Howell, pastor of Poultney church, called on us today. His health and hope good. In the afternoon, in company with Dr. Smith, one of the Elders of the Castleton church, we visited fifteen families, and urged them to be christians. We found them free to converse on the subject of religion. The work of the Lord is onward in this place.

Just before our evening meeting, we called to see a very sick man, who had attended our meetings during the summer, but neglected to give his heart to the Lord, though he felt it to be his duty. We found him very anxious in relation to his future interests, and free to talk on the subject of religion. We tried to point him to the Lamb of God, who loves to pardon the repentant sinner, and entreated the Lord to forgive him, and adopt him as his child. Friday morning he fell asleep in death, to await the resurrection at the last day. We learn that he indulged a hope in Christ before he died.

Our evening meeting was excellent. Nine requested prayers; most of whom seemed fully decided to follow Jesus. The prospects of this church are very encouraging.

Thursday evening, Jan. 3d. This evening closed our present series of meetings. Eight requested prayers, and took a bold stand for the truth. The hearts of christians were much cheered in this meeting by the comfort of the Holy Spirit, and the earnest testimonies of the Lord's children. We think we have never seen this church stand so well at any other time as now. Many are fast growing up into Christ. Just before we closed, one of the early converts at C. came in front of the audience and presented us with the largest tobacco box we ever saw, saying he had been in the habit of using it twice full in a week; but remarking. "I am now determined by the help of the Lord to quit it." Soon after his conversion, we said to him, "You will be a backslider in less than a year if you do not leave off your tobacco;" for he had admitted that he knew it was hurting him. He thought he should prove the remark a false prediction. But during the last series of meetings he sent a request for prayers as a backslider; but he could not get relief till he decided to give up his monstrous tobacco box, and quit the filthy habit. Others have followed his noble example, and feel a rich reward in physical and spiritual health.

Friday, Jan. 4th. This morning we took a reluctant leave of Bro. Sherman's kind family and pleasant home, where we ever find a hearty welcome, and hastened away on the early train for Sandy Hill, distance of about forty miles, and took breakfast with our dear Bro. and Sr. Mathewson, the pastor of the Sandy Hill church. We found this church in a very prosperous state under his faithful labors. We feel confident he will not be found sleeping at his post when Jesus comes, but among those who are giving "meat in due season."

In the evening we commenced our series of meetings in a large hall at Glens Falls, which is three miles from Sandy Hill. We found a very low state of religion in the place, and a great indifference to the truth of the Bible. We did not find one who appeared to sympathise with us. The church at Sandy Hill hired the hall, paying twenty-five dollars for its use one week, hoping to see an interest awakened in the minds of some, and were not disappointed. We trust that some of the seed sown will yet spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. The sentiments of Spiritualists and Swedenborgians have poisoned the minds of many in this place; for backsliders are well prepared to embrace and follow the ignes fatui of these demon lights; and when once deluded by them, "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle" than to reach one of them with the truth of God. They came out to hear and oppose, but we hope, as a consequence of our meetings, some will be saved from being engulphed in these awful whirlpools of destruction.

MARTIN LUTHER'S BELIEF.—In an old work printed in 1772, entitled, "Historical View of the Intermediate State," on page 348, when speaking of Luther's belief in relation to the state of the dead between death and the resurrection, it is said, he held "That they lay in a profound sleep, in which opinion he followed many fathers of the ancient church."

The Sabbath.

BRO. GRANT:—Is the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath enjoined upon christians by the teachings of the New Testament? If not, why should they keep the seventh day, as mentioned in the Old Testament?—T. M. PREBLE.

The foregoing are two important questions, but we think they admit of plain and positive answers, which remove all room for doubt. In answer to the first question we would say, we have not yet found ourselves, neither have we conversed with any one who has been able to show us the passage in the New Testament that enjoins the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath; hence, the answer to the second question is at hand,—we know not any reason why we should "keep the seventh day as mentioned in the Old."

Lest these brief answers should not be satisfactory, we will proceed to examine the subject more critically. Says Paul, "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second."—Heb. 8: 7. What does Paul mean, when he refers to "that first covenant," which was improved in "the second"? We assume that he is speaking of the ten commandments, or the covenant made with the children of Israel upon Mount Sinai, as contrasted with the New Testament or covenant in Christ, which he calls "the second."

When writing to the Galatians, Paul says:—"For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a free woman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants: the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar."—Gal. 4: 22–24. That is, Agar, the bondwoman's son, represents the covenant "from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage," thus clearly intimating that this covenant is the one to be improved.

We will now pass to show that the ten commandments constitute the first covenant to which Paul refers. In 1 Kings 8: 9, 21, we read:—"There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt. And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt." In Deuteronomy, we have the place specified where the covenant was made which was put into the ark, showing beyond all controversy that it consisted alone of the ten commandments. "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. The Lord talked with you face to face in the mount out of the midst of the fire. (I stood between the Lord and you at that time, to show you the word of the Lord; for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount,) saying, I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt have none other gods before me."—Deut. 5 : 2–7. The next fourteen verses of this chapter give the remaining nine commandments; then Moses says in the next verse, "These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more. And he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me."—Deut. 5 : 22. This passage shows that the covenant made in Mount Horeb, to which Paul refers, consisted of the ten commandments, and is the one "which gendereth to bondage," and was superseded by the second, or new covenant, confirmed by Christ. Moses said to the children of Israel: "The Lord . . . declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."—Deut. 4: 13. Again Moses says:—"When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; I neither did eat bread nor drink water; and the Lord delivered unto me two tables of stone written with the finger of God; and on them was written according to all the words which the Lord spake with you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly. And it came to pass at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the Lord gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant."—Deut. 9 : 9–11. No language can make the point plainer that the ten commandments delivered on Mount Sinai constituted the "first covenant" which was afterwards changed for a better one.

We will now introduce further and positive evidence that this first covenant is done away. In Exodus we read:—"And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; [illegible] . . . And it came to pass, when Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him. And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh unto him. And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them. And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the Lord had spoken with him in Mount Sinai. And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a vail on his face."—Ex. 34 : 27–33. Let us now turn to Paul's comment on this last portion of Scripture. He says:—"But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious? for if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech: and not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished."—2 Cor. 3 : 7–13. It should be observed that the time when Moses' "face shone" was when he came down from the mount after he had received the "first covenant;" and that Paul is referring to the same event in what we have just quoted. But Paul calls that "the ministration of death," which was "written and engraven in stones." And yet says that "was glorious;" but remarks, "if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious;" implying, some part of what was "engraven in stones" "is done away," and a portion "remaineth." But there was nothing but the ten commandments, or "the first covenant" "engraven in stones;" hence, what "is done away" must be some portion of what was on the stones received from the Lord on Mt. Sinai. When we come to examine the new covenant, we shall see what part is "done away," or "abolished."

If it be said that by "the ministration of death," "which is done away," Paul means the death penalty imposed on Sabbath breakers, that would be positive proof that the law itself is abolished; for the enactment of the law always precedes the penalty, and is abolished before the penalty ceases. If it can be proved that the penalty attached to a law "is done away," then it follows as a sequence that the law itself is no longer in force. But Paul says, "that which is done away" was "written and engraven in stones." The penalty was not written upon the stones, but only the law; therefore he does not refer to the penalty, when he says "the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones," "is done away;" but to the law upon the stones.

It now appears evident that "the first covenant" "is abolished." As Paul says, we "are not under the law, but under grace. What then? Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid." We shall find the new covenant still more strict than the old. Many things condemned in the new covenant are not mentioned in the old. Things were allowed under the law that are not in the gospel. The Savior contrasts the two covenants, when he says:—"Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart."—Matt. 5 : 27–28. The old covenant, or the law, only condemned the outward act; but the new covenant, the intention, or desire.

Paul says, "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster," or the law.—Gal. 3 : 24–25. This is plain, and shows that christians are not under the law. Christ is now our teacher and law-giver; hence nothing is binding on us but what he has enjoined. Christ has nowhere enjoined the seventh-day Sabbath upon his disciples; therefore it is not their duty to keep it.

In our next we will answer our brother's question more fully.

European War.

It is becoming more and more apparent that war will open again in the spring upon a scale more alarming and bloody than ever. The preparations are being made upon the most extensive plan, and are being executed as fast as possible. The language of the prophet Joel seems to be fulfilling where he says, "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks (margin, scythes) into [illegible] . . . is ripe," when "the wickedness is great." Jesus tells us, "The harvest is the end of the world." The work of beating up implements of husbandry into weapons of war has been carried on quite extensively in different parts of the world. In Russia a large number of scythes have been made into war instruments. Even in our own country the same work is going on. At Cabot, Mass., Mr. Ames has worked up many of Sweed's iron plowshares into swords. All the movements of the nations most clearly indicate that the end of the present dispensation is at hand.

A correspondent at Hamburg, Germany, writes, Dec. 31, 1860:—

"All the different governments of the North of Europe appear to be fully convinced that war between France and the German Confederation will be altogether unavoidable in the spring of next year. Under this moral certitude, the armaments are going on in Germany to a most formidable extent, and it is expected that in two months time all the ten corps, forming the Federal army, will be provided with rifled artillery according to the newest system.

Prussia, which, of all the German States, has most occasion to fear an invasion of her Rhenish Provinces, is employing a most prodigious activity in her military armaments and new organization of her troops, which will soon be raised to 700,000—infantry, cavalry and artillery. Such a number of soldiers at the command of a single state may appear extraordinary, but it must be remembered that in Prussia every man is liable to military services. . . .

It has also been decided that in the event, which appears very probable, of a second war between Austria and Sardinia next spring, for the possession of the Venetian territory, that the armies of Bavaria and Wurtemburg, at present completely organized, are to occupy the Grand Duchy of Tyrol, as far as the Italian borders. By this means the Austrian army, in case of defeat, will be safe from pursuit on its own territory—or at any rate, a serious obstacle will have to be encountered by the enemy in attempting to enter German dominions. It is feared that the conflict will assume tremendous dimensions, as it appears that the Emperor Napoleon meditates giving active assistance to the King of Sardinia.

Russia, fearing a revolution in Poland, is also making great military preparations, to the great prejudice of her finances, which were already very much crippled by the war with France and England in the Crimea. The fifth corps of the Russian army has been placed on a war footing, and numerous troops are marching into Poland, to the Prussian frontiers, as well as to the borders of Gallicia, where insurrectionary movements, which might easily spread to the Russian possessions in Poland, are expected—and for the suppression of which these military forces are being concentrated as above stated.

Altogether, very serious troubles are looked forward to in Europe, and a general uneasiness prevails, particularly in commercial circles."

The European Struggle.

The prospect of a general war in Europe is continually increasing, and is now so strong, that there is but little chance to avoid its immediate commencement. Their preparations for war are on a very extensive scale and are nearly completed. Says a close observer of the signs of the times:

"It is impossible to mistake the formidable character of the movements which are in preparation throughout Europe for the approaching spring. The silent energy with which they are being carried out shows the conviction that prevails, that diplomacy is powerless to forestall the events that call them into activity. . . . . It is evident that the ball of revolution cannot be again set in motion in Europe, and the integrity of a great empire menaced, without there being a general and long continued disturbance of those interests which depend upon the maintenance of peace for their prosperity. Between the prospect of anarchy and internecine strife in this country, and the probability of a general and perhaps protracted war in Europe, the trade and industry of the world will receive a shock from which it will take them a long time to recover."

Drying Up.

Before Cyrus took Babylon, the waters of the river Euphrates, passing into that great city, were dried up, or rather diverted from their channel, so that the bed of the river became a road into which he marched his army under the walls, and took the city the night of Belshazzar's feast.—In the Revelation given to John, we read of another Babylon, situated on "seven mountains" or hills, which has reigned "over the kings of the earth." She also, like old Babylon, "sitteth upon many waters." In verse fifteen we are informed that the "waters" of mystical Babylon, "are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

When describing the work of "the seven angels," John says, "The sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."—Rev. 16 : 12. As the literal river Euphrates was connected with literal Babylon, by the law of analogy we may expect the mystical Euphrates to be associated with the mystical Babylon. As the waters of the literal river Euphrates were dried up just before the taking of the city, so we may expect that the drying up of the mystical river will be immediately followed by the overthrow of the Babylon of the Apocalypse. As the waters which sustain mystical Babylon represent peoples, multitudes, nations and tongues, when they are dried up in relation to Babylon, [illegible] of the harlot city—Rome, that those who have sustained her financially and politically will withhold their aid, and then the modern Cyrus and Darius will take possession of the city which was symbolized by a harlot, richly dressed, and drunken "with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

At present, nearly all that once sustained her have withdrawn their support; or, in the language of the prophet, her "waters" are "dried up;" consequently her end is at hand. A [illegible] correspondent of Jan. 1st, 1861, says:—

"All accounts represent affairs in Rome as in a state little better than dissolution. What the finances can be, with no revenue coming in from the lost provinces, and an army of idle employes to be supported, can be imagined. With no means of recruiting the life-blood issuing from every vein, but an occasional contribution from the faithful in the shape of Peter's pence, the surviving of the august patient cannot be an affair of more than months."

Correspondence.

From P. Tandy.

BRO. GRANT, AND ALL THE TRULY FAITHFUL:—Thinking that it may be interesting to some of the readers of the "Crisis" to know the whereabouts of this unworthy pilgrim, who has for a number of years been journeying for the "highlands of glory," through sunshine and storm, prosperity and adversity, sickness and health, with friends or foes, my watch-word is, "Stand up for Jesus," in the way of truth and righteousness. I calculate to make no compromises with error, sin, or the devil. I think it is high "time to awake to righteousness and sin not," that we as the professed and humble followers of Christ should "come out from the world, and touch not the unclean thing;" that is (as I understand it), we must come out from the ungodly spirit and practice of the world. Christ said to his disciples, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," and it is as true now as it was then. I begin to feel the great importance of every christian being "steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." May God help us to be such. There is no danger of our being too faithful in our Lord's blessed service, or of our doing too much for him. Now, "do not err, my beloved brethren."

The question is often asked, what can I do? The good Lord has truly said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." He also says, "Let thy prayers and alms come up as a sweet memorial before God." Those who have money let them give money; and those that have no silver or gold, let them do as Peter did, who said, "such as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk." We can all give our earnest prayers; we can remember our dear brethren and sisters in tribulation; and we can remember those who know not God. Perhaps we can give books, or lend them, and do good in this way. We can give smiles to cheer the little children—we can speak kindly to each other. We can give kind words to those who err; we should be careful and condemn not,—we are sinners all. God help us to be kind even to the evil and to the unthankful, and thus imitate our heavenly Master.

I wish to be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of the hope that is in me with meekness and fear. I do not hope for worldly riches. This hope is not well founded. I do not cherish the hope of worldly honors. Such honors often prove sources of real sorrow. Laurels soon wither and fade. I do not wish or hope for worldly ease, or worldly enjoyment. The pleasures of sin are but for a season. Earthly joys are very transitory.

My hope is not a hope of a long life in this world of deception and sin; nor of a "good time coming" in this present generation. My hope is no such hope as these. But, I do hope for eternal life when Jesus comes the second time without sin unto salvation. I hope for full, and final, and eternal salvation. But let us have on the whole armor of God; that we may fight manfully the battles of the Lord. I hope to come forth in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power. I hope to sing the high praises of God eternally in glory. Yes, I hope for the glory of God. I hope to be like Christ, my dear Savior; I shall be pure then; I want to be pure now. I hope to see Jesus Christ soon coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. I am looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ; may I be zealous of good works. Pray for me.

From Eld. Sam. Chapman.

BRO. GRANT:—I have for some time thought when I had a leisure hour I would say a word through the columns of the "Crisis"; for I have many dear friends and some children in the gospel who read that paper but do not take the "Advent Herald," through which I am accustomed to speak, and have thus done, once in two or three months for the past eighteen years. During that time I have enjoyed almost perfect health; and being confirmed in the faith of the soon coming of the Lord, and having "a mind to work," have traveled through, and labored more or less in fifteen [illegible]

Canada. Think I have preached, and conducted meetings of religious worship about as often as once a day on an average, taking the whole time together; and by the grace of God have witnessed many interesting revivals of religion and the conversion of some thousands of precious souls; hundreds of whom have received baptism at my hands.

And although to the present time, we have failed to realize the consummation of "that blessed hope," Titus 2: 13, yet the signs are thickening, and the prophetic periods still remain in full force and will so remain (should time continue) for a few years to come, provided we leave Archbishop Usher and take other chronologists for our guide. But let us keep in mind that this great and solemn event is now liable to occur at any moment, and the only safety for us is, to be continually on our watch-tower; "waiting," "looking," and "watching" for the coming of the Lord. See Isa. 25: 9; Heb. 9: 28; Rev. 16: 15, etc.; and fail not to remember that none will be crowned in that day but those who "love his appearing."—2 Tim. 4: 8.

I have recently returned from a brief northern tour. Spent two weeks with the infant church in Haydenville, Mass. Had respectable gatherings at Bro Sheldon's Hall. Some mocked, but the more intelligent part received the word understandingly; two young ladies were hopefully converted and the church was truly revived. Bro. B., an intelligent young man, writes me that they have continued their meetings with thrilling interest since I left; and that he has now decided to give himself wholly to the work of striving to save souls. God speed him in the work, is my earnest prayer. From "H. Ville," I went to Vernon, Vt., (forty miles north,) where I spent two weeks to good advantage. Our brethren there have erected them a commodious chapel, 24 by 34 feet on the ground; but by being somewhat divided in their faith on certain points of doctrine, did not prosper as they would otherwise have done. Some Sabbatarians, some "perfectionists," some contending that the wicked will be utterly destroyed, and others, with equal zeal, that they will be everlastingly punished; and as each class were zealous in contending for their faith, when they came together for social worship, I found them in a confused and unhappy state; and, for the time being, regretted that I accepted their call. But being there, concluded to to enter upon our work. Had a good gathering at their chapel the first evening. (Christmas day eve.) Understanding the state of things there, I determined to know nothing among them save Jesus Christ once crucified, but soon coming again to bless and reward his "waiting people."

Used for a text on that occasion, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." —1 Thess. 5: 18. Then repeated and considered the "words" contained in the preceding five verses. Some were "comforted" and responded aloud. Then spoke on Heb. 9: 28; Matt. 24th, and so on; confining myself chiefly to the coming of the Lord, the resurrection of the dead, and the final inheritance of the saints, urging vehemently a preparation of heart to meet the event, and scarcely alluded to the points on which they differed in faith, only as I entreated them to abandon strife on all such questions, and strive for peace among themselves; this they almost unanimously agreed to do. Before leaving, we celebrated the Lord's Supper, in which some forty to fifty participated. It was indeed a refreshing season. We had fifteen sermons and several meetings for social worship. The church was signally revived, and greatly strengthened in her faith; and we became so much attached to each other, it was really hard parting; and it is by their special request that I scribble these hasty lines for the paper which they, or most of them, patronize. The Lord bless and keep them, with us, steadfast in the faith (present truth,) unto the day of his coming, is my humble and sincere prayer.

Ardent love to the entire "household." Amen. Your brother in hope, expecting redemption soon.

Jan. 25th, 1861.

P.S. For the information of those who may be interested, I will say, my post office address for some weeks to come will be Hartford, Ct., care of Wm. R. Chapman, who is faithful to forward as I direct him. Shall ever be glad to hear from the friends.

From B. R. York.

Bro. Grant:—As our protracted meeting has closed, I suppose you and others are expecting some account of the same. We labored under many disadvantages, but the meeting went through well. The frequent and heavy falls of snow just before the meeting, prevented many from attending who wished to be there; yet the attendance was good. Some ministers were expected who did not come, but the few who came labored well and faithfully to awaken an increased interest and to cheer up the "waiting ones." Bro. O. R. Fassett was with us the most of the time, and we were also favored with discourses from Brethren J. A. Libby, Jas. Hemenway, B. S. Emery and I. C. Wellcome.

Our little company here have been quickened and comforted, some wanderers reclaimed and a few impenitent ones led to manifest some interest in their own salvation. Some of our meetings were blessed ones indeed, especially our communion season. On Sunday afternoon a goodly number sat down to the table of the Lord, some of them members of other churches. After partaking of the emblems of our Savior's love, we had about fifty warm-hearted exhortations in about thirty minutes. This was truly a "love-feast." May all that were there be prepared to partake of that "feast of fat things" so soon to be given to all the faithful on Mount Zion. We are still praying and laboring for greater success, and hereby affectionately request the prayers of all "Father's children" in our behalf.

There are so many things presented in these last times to prevent the people from receiving the truth that the prospect is truly dark. But we must toil on if by any means we may save some. O how many are thronging the broad road to destruction! but they will be without excuse. The light is shining, the gospel trumpet sounding, mercy is calling, and "signs there is no mistaking" now appearing. All, ALL proclaim that the year of God's redeemed is at hand, and the day of vengeance about to burst upon a doomed world. Let us then "awake to righteousness and sin not," gird up the loins of our mind, and wait for the "Coming One." Soon the faithful will hear the Master say, "well done." Your brother in love and tribulation.

Yarmouth, Me., Jan. 30th.

From Mary A. Seymour.

Bro. Grant:—I flatter myself that there are at least some among my old acquaintances among whom I tarried and preached the word during those fourteen years that were most exclusively devoted to so good a cause, who sometimes ask, What has become of M. A. Seymour? To such I reply, I have lost neither faith nor interest in Bible truth, and have at times a great desire to proclaim it still, so much so that I am robbed of nearly all enjoyment of mind in spiritual things; for it was indeed a pleasure to do what I knew (if I knew anything of the joys of pardoned sin,) God both bid and helped me do; but loss of teeth and increasing infirmities, have compelled me to be silent in the congregation of the saints. If my organs of speech were restored to their former healthful condition, I should not occupy my present position long, be assured; but almost every effort made in public now costs much suffering, and being compelled to toil incessantly through continual pain for my daily bread, I drag out a miserable existence, and life for my own sake has not been for several years a creature to be desired. If being a thorough dress reformer, and having good dietetic habits and frequent ablutions in pure water, and total abstinence from all medications, could have healed me, I should long since have been restored. Now if any good brother or sister desires a subject of prayer, or has any surplus of faith, I should be very grateful to be remembered at the throne of the all-healing fountain. I am a firm believer in prevailing prayer, but my prayers are not answered for my own recovery.

This will suffice to inform those who would know of my situation, and if you hear that after so long a struggle with disease I have succumbed to the grim, unfeeling conqueror, you may be assured that one weary of suffering and toil has found rest till the morning break which has no night, on whose breeze no sighs will be wafted, nor tears bedew the cheek of care. But lest I weary you, I would close by saying to all the church, "Let no man take thy crown." "Peace be with you all."

Bro. Grant:—Allow me to say through the Crisis for the encouragement of God's dear children, that the Lord is doing his work here in a powerful manner. Six have been refreshed by his Spirit, backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted. We are looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearance of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Worcester, Mass., Jan. 14th, 1861, Etta Maria, youngest child of Wm. A. S. and Abbie B. Smythe, aged one year, four months and nine days.

Little Etta, the joy of her parents, the charm of the household, was indeed a bright and lovely flower, just opening its beauties to the light, while too soon, alas! in the morn of being, the mortal foliage folds over the budding life, that will wake to renewed bloom in the sphere of immortality.

"There seems a sacred presence here,
A gloom as of approaching night,
For one whose smile to us was dear,
Here bowed to death's remorseless blight.
The youngest of our household band,
Fair-browed and gay, and sunny-eyed,
Unclasped from ours her little hand,
And in her childish beauty died."

Suddenly she died. Her stricken parents weep; sadness and grief reign around their hearthstone, made desolate by the cruel, inexorable enemy of our peace and bliss on earth; but they sorrow not without alleviating hope, for they have laid that beautiful jewel—lovely even in death—away in the casket of promise, and the horrors of the tomb darken not the eye of faith in these afflicted children of God, whose bleeding hearts are solaced by the resurrection truth, and the development of being in the world to come, where parents will be united to their darling offspring, to know by the improvement and perfection of a child in heaven that life has not been in vain.

Rest, sweet babe! Thy struggle is past! Safe is thy Savior's keeping! W. S. C.

Fell quietly asleep, in Pleasant Valley, Ct., Howard Butler, son of Bro. and Sr. David Butler, aged five years.

The night previous to little Howard's death, he was apparently as well as usual. Those fond parents little thought they were bestowing their last caresses—that, ere another evening's shade had gathered, their little ambitious boy would be a lifeless corpse. Alas! thus it was. Who can tell the anguish that pierced the hearts of those parents? But the loneliness of heart will be afterwards felt, when they remember the innocent prattler's voice will no more be heard here, and the thousand little acts that made him so loveable will come afresh to the mind. How lonely, O earth! we long to bid adieu to thy changes. Welcome! thrice welcome! earth renewed, when the lost (for a season) will be forever restored. Sleep on, guileless one; thy fair little brow bears no trace of sorrow, no stain of sin upon thy garments. Thou wilt moulder to earth, yet thy precious dust will be gathered Little Howard's intellect surpassed his years. His keen susceptibilities, his quick thought, combined with sweetness of temper, won not only the admiration, but the love of those who knew him. An interesting discourse was given in the Baptist church to a very attentive congregation, by Bro. D. A. Jones, from Ps. 17: 15,—"I shall be satisfied when I wake in thy likeness." The aged pastor of the church and also a Methodist preacher were present, both of which assisted in the exercises. May this circumstance show to the remaining children the frailty of earthly hopes, and wean them from things present, that their minds may be placed upon things eternal, and with their parents share the glories of that kingdom of which without doubt little Howard will be a participator.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Per Arabia. Advices of 19th ult.]

The following warlike announcement is from Bullier's Lithographic Sheets:

"Great activity prevails at this moment in our arsenals. Although there is no indication of war breaking out, preparations are being made for every contingency. All soldiers not considered capable of enduring a campaign are about to be sent to the depots of their regiments, and their places are to be filled with efficient men who have already served for six or seven months. The army will be ready to commence a campaign in the month of March I repeat, that these are merely measures of precaution which it is to be hoped, future events will render unnecessary."

It has been usual only to call out half the number of recruits annually voted, the remaining half being only liable to serve in case of extraordinary need, but the Moniteur de l' Armee publishes a circular from the Minister of War, giving directions that by the express command of the Emperor every man of the contingent voted is to be called to arms at once, and assigned to a particular regiment.

DENMARK.

The Berlinske Tridende, of Copenhagen, announces that the Minister of War has caused the whole of the Infantry to be supplied with rifled muskets, and that steps have been taken to increase the number of horses for military purposes, and for the speedy recalling of the soldiers on furlough. The same journal also says that preparations are being made for the evacuation of the arsenal of Rendsburg. The military corps of engineers has been ordered to submit to the government plans for the extension of the fortifications of Danenwick and of the redoubts of Frederica. The artillery is to receive several rifled batteries

A royal decree has been published calling out 6700 sailors from the kingdom of Denmark and the Duchy of Schleswig.

TURKEY.

Gen. Klapka was in the Principalities preparing for a rising in Hungary. The arms conveyed in Sardinian ships were to be landed in Montenegro, whence they would be despatched to the Banat.

It is stated that the Porte was forming an army of 50,000 men, exclusive of the reserve, on the Danube, to be commanded by Omar Pasha. This demonstration is directed equally against the Principalities and against Russia.

A letter from Naples says that Garibaldi had written to some of his friends there, saying that he should probably go to Constantinople before long.

DOMESTIC.

A Voice of Lamentation from Alabama.—The Huntsville (Ala.) Advocate publishes a private letter from Hon. Jeremiah Clemens, former U. S. Senator, who was a member of the Alabama Secession Convention. The letter is dated Jan. 11, the day the secession ordinance was adopted. It is full of gloomy forebodings. We make the annexed extract:

"God knows where all this is to end. I see very plainly the storms that are gathering, but I do not see how we are to pass through them. I resisted the passage of the ordinance to the last moment in every form, and then, when no more was to be accomplished, I did what I had pledged myself to do on every stump, and openly placed myself on the side of the State.

We are out; we have bid adieu to the stars and stripes, and abandoned the high privilege of calling ourselves American citizens—I am not ashamed to confess that I could not restrain my tears when the old banner which I have followed through so many dangers was torn down, and the flag of Alabama was raised in its place—I cannot restrain them now when I am writing, but the deed is done, a new era has dawned, and all that I can promise is that no effort shall be spared on my part to prevent it from becoming an era of disgrace. If we are not already involved in a war, we soon will be. There is no hope of peace, and he is but little better than a madman who dreams of a long exemption from invasion. I shall meet it when it comes as a soldier should, and fight through it as long as a hope remains; when everything is lost, as I fear it may be, unless wiser counsels should prevail than those which have heretofore directed us, I shall drag my body to the nearest battlefield, and lay down a life which has lost its value.

Do nothing to divide the people of our own State. Our only hope is in their union. Tell them so, and urge them as they love their families, as they love their country—as they love God and hope for heaven, to come out at once in the support of the action of the State. There is no other hope for us—no other chance for peace, and that is a poor one. Jere. Clemens."

New York, 30th. Special despatches state that the President has allowed three additional artillery companies to be stationed in Washington.

Mr. Mallory telegraphs to the President that if the Brooklyn appears off Pensacola, Fort Pickens will be immediately taken.

Gov. Hicks has informed Gen. Scott of the discovery of a plot to seize the capital.

Five thousand Minie rifles were received in Washington.

The President has countermanded the order for the Brooklyn to enter the harbor of Pensacola.

Wilmington, N. C., 30th. Prominent men, heretofore anti-secessionists, addressed a secession meeting last night.

Washington, 30th. Less than three hundred troops are here, but they can be concentrated at any point at short notice.

The President replied to the despatch of Mr. Mallory of Florida, last night, and stated that the Brooklyn had gone to the relief of Fort Pickens.

The Commander has orders to land the supplies of provisions, and to lay off with the troops, so as to assist, should the Fort be attacked.

There is intense anxiety at the White House, as important intelligence is hourly expected from Pensacola. All parties apprehend that a collision will take place near Fort Pickens to-day, and the result will be anxiously expected this afternoon and evening.

The correspondent of the World says the messenger from South Carolina brings the resolutions of the Legislature demanding the surrender of Fort Sumter. Col. Hayne will present the demand to the President, and if refused, an attack will follow immediately.

Washington, Feb. 2. Mr. Hayne presented a communication to the President last evening, demanding the surrender of Fort Sumter, first, on the ground of the right of a sovereign state to condemn to public use any property necessary for its own protection and independence, by paying therefor a fair compensation.

The document assumes the complete independence of South Carolina, and this assumption carries with it the first proposition under the second head; it argues that the position of the administration is absurd, if forts be regarded as property only, and their purpose be to protect; it considers the various ways of protecting property, and shows that a collision would not afford protection. Whether the fort was taken or not, the property would be injured. The injury can be avoided, and every dollar secured, as South Carolina pledges herself to pay its full value.

The communication proceeds to consider the result and settle the question as one of property, of dollars and cents, as Government based its whole idea on the action of protecting property. Mr. Hayne contends that the question should be considered as one involving property alone, as such could be easily arranged.

He says further that he is instructed to assure the President that any reinforcement will be considered a declaration of war.

Interesting from Charleston.—The Philadelphia Press publishes several letters from a Charleston correspondent. Writing on the 19th, he says:

"I have been with some members of the Calhoun Guard, to witness the large floating battery now in course of construction on the river in the upper part of the city.

This work has been carried on quietly, but with considerable energy. Its height will be sixty feet—considerable higher than Fort Sumter, which it is intended to attack. It is formed of cotton bales, and will be bound with iron. When complete it will be very formidable, and will enable the Palmettos to make the attack with comparatively little danger to themselves. Several large guns are lying ready to be placed in it, and the enthusiasm which is displayed in preparing a position for them shows pretty conclusively that equal ardor will be manifested in using them against the enemy.

I can assure you, most positively, not from what I have gained by listening to bar-room gossip, (for this I have studiously avoided) but from information derived almost directly from the very High Priests of Treason, that, in the course of a week or two, a well-organized attack will be made upon Fort Sumter, on all sides simultaneously. The people are fully aware that, should Major Anderson resist, considerable loss of life must ensue: but so persuaded are they of the importance of obtaining entire control of the harbor before the inauguration of Mr. Lincoln, that I do not think they will hesitate for a single day, after their coup d'etat is thoroughly arranged, to make the attempt. There are a large number of citizens here who believe that when the attack is made, Major Anderson will immediately evacuate, and spare the shedding of blood; and though I place a far higher estimate on the gallant Major's devotion to his country, and the honor of her flag, he could not be very severely censured if he terminated the difficulty in that way. He has been left in a garrison which, well manned, would be almost impregnable, with scarcely a corporal's guard to support him.

I have yet another conspiracy to mention, which, though by no means a new rumor, I have not, until to-day, had any good reason to believe was well-founded or reliable. I am, however, certain that negotiations are pending with secessionists in the states of Maryland, Virginia and Kentucky, to seize the Capitol, and prevent the inauguration of Mr. Lincoln, by force. This part of the rebellion has been intrusted to those three States. The matter is kept exceedingly secret, and, were I not myself, a member of a Vigilance Committee, I should have been in the dark upon the subject. I trust to be able to give you information in a day or two, in detail, as to the extent and ramifications of this plot, which I know is intended to be carried out, unless great precautions are taken to render it impossible."

Quarterly Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be held in the Bean school-house, Mt. Vernon, about three miles east of the village, to commence Thursday, 1 o'clock, P. M., Feb. 21st, and continue over Sunday. I am instructed to say that the Christian church and friends will sustain the conference. We shall expect to see all our ministers present who belong to this conference, and hope to see those from other parts who can come. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can come to work for the Lord, that his cause may be revived and sinners converted. Behold the Judge standeth at the door; soon our work will be over and the end come. Let us work while it is day. Brethren from abroad will come into the place and find directions where to put up. We have not the names of persons to give.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 50 cents; postage 8 cts.

Eld. M. Grant in Canada East.

In compliance with the earnest solicitation of the church in Danville, C. E., Eld. Miles Grant will commence a series of meetings on Sabbath, Feb. 10th, and continue over the following Lord's day.

In behalf of the church, J. Porter.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.63; postage 15 cts.

Virtue.

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky;
The dew shall weep thy fall to-night,
For thou must die.

Sweet rose, whose hue, angry and brave,
Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye;
Thy root is ever in its grave,
And thou must die.

Sweet spring, full of sweet days and roses,
A box where sweets compacted lie,
My music shows ye have your closes,
And all must die.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like seasoned timber, never gives;
But, though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives.

Bro. Peter Noka's* Exhortation.

IN PRAYER MEETING IN NEW MARKET HALL, PROVIDENCE, JAN. 8TH, 1861.

"I think we have used the time to-night just as the Lord would have us. Just exactly. It has always been my idea that it takes the whole church to preach the gospel. When they do you will always see a good effect. It isn't in the preachers particularly, though they are reckoned in with that body of people, I suppose, identified to be the head, but we have all got to be in that body in order to see God's work effectually. There has got to be a oneness, and I see that manifested here this evening. A oneness, so as to be one person, one intention. Well, God works by just such means. When they are willing to become anything and everything for the Lord, then he is willing to pour out his Spirit upon them.

Sometimes we feel very anxious; but I have thought before now, like children, we didn't know really what we wanted so well as the Lord knew when we wanted it. I have been around in protracted meetings considerably, seeing cold churches brought up to be warm, real, sanguine, God-loving people, where he would like to abide, and I have never but once seen one that started up (I believe I did once) where God worked among the sinners before he did among the chuch-members, (and they had to shuffle out of the way and let them pass); but then there was nobody to take care of the lambs: there were no mothers, they were children born into the kingdom of God without any parents, and, of course, we had to look around for some one to take care of them. After they had received salvation and been born into the kingdom, then we had to go to work and find fathers and mothers to take care of them, guide and aid them along. But God has his all-seeing eye upon us, and knows just what we ought to be in order to be directors to them that he will bring in by his almighty power.

Now when we get just right, God will send us along something to make merry over, he will. When you get just ready, just in that place where you can take care of what God gives you, then he will begin to give. I never knew it to fail in the world. If you get ready to-night he will give it to-night. If to-morrow, then to-morrow is the time. But whenever it is, just when you are ready, glory to God! he will give you something to be glad over, give you something to take care of. That is just as sure as you live.

Now don't you falter or shrink. God is only trying your faith. How was it in ancient times? See how he tried Abraham. Why? Because he was going to make unto Abraham a great promise. And true it was. He tried Abraham faithfully. He tried him, I think, about all he could stand; anyhow, God was satisfied with that trial, for Abraham came out bright, and he owned at the last that Abraham's faith was fixed in him beyond all things. Now he will try us just so. He has tried me, and he will try you. He is not partial to any, but they that will live godly have got to go down through the fire and have all their shackles burnt off. And as the shackles come off, God will send his power and blessing, and you will be ready to take care of it, and keep it, too.

Bro. Hastings wanted me to talk, but I had nothing to say when you began. No, sir, it takes the church, and when they get into working order then God will bless them. And these are just the means that God designed to work with; and I feel that you have taken a long step to-night, and God is at the head of it. You may depend upon it. You take one step to-night, to-morrow night take another step, and so on. I have seen little boys rolling a stick in the snow, and the more they rolled the bigger it grew, and when they stopped, it didn't grow any. So if we have got hold of faith to-night, we can peek through the dark veil that is over our eyes, and keep our eye fast upon it, and not take it off or fear we shall lose a glimpse of it, until he veil grows thinner and thinner, and when we get to praying, these worldly things don't come up into our minds. The broom of faith has swept them all out. When we get into the prayer-meeting bringing our concerns there, thinking of everything, some one of a new dress she had got at the dressmaker's, another of a bonnet at the milliner's, a brother of a debt he has got out somewhere,—the want of a little money,—all of these come up, and here they are in the prayer meeting. There is something between God and our souls. This wants to be cleared out of the way!

Now suppose every one of us comes up with a clean tenement, with no occupant but Jesus Christ, its rightful owner, everything else entirely banished, what would be the transaction of business on the Lord's side here amongst us to-night, or to-morrow night? I tell you, try it. Try it, and you will see just as sure as you live!

Down on old Warwick Plains it took about one month to clear out what we used to call 'the tinker's shop, old bits of tin, and iron, old stoves, etc., and we offended some; but we kept turning out till we cleaned the old house completely, nothing in the way, no hatred, animosity, bigotry, pride, or superstition, and the thousand crooked things that lie in the way and have got to be turned out,—lying, backbiting and slandering (I don't imagine they are here, yet there might be some little, crooked thing which you might as well let go and let God have the right of the place.

After about one month, we got cleaned out, and were just about right. Then the rest came in, and as they clean out they get into the back seats, and as they begin to warm up, they move up from seat to seat, till by and by, if they could, they would move up the old front pew clear to the pulpit. They cannot get close enough, —close to the fire where the great brand is burning. Now when we got into that position, we concluded we were in working order. Just as soon as we got into that position we had something to do, something to take care of. God gave some nights, two, sometimes three, and so on up to a dozen or twenty, till His work was done in that place.

Just so here with you. Try it. Don't shrink. The Lord is going to try you a little. We have got to be tried. It don't hurt us, does it, brethren? It seems rather crucifying, but the Lord says, 'I know when to give it to you.' You are going to clean up, and by the time that everything is in preparation, the Lord will be along with his gifts, just as sure as you live. But I will not take up your time. Somebody's else heart burns, I know."

Christian Salutation.

BRO. GRANT:—As the weary, worn traveler, long exiled from his native home, feels the yearnings of his soul flow out after the beloved hearthstone, around which are gathered beneath the paternal roof the objects of his affection, where he may meet and mingle in the tones of unrestrained gladness, pouring out his full heart in regard and sympathy, sharing the tide of general joy, that clusters around the beings of his attachment: thus, after the tedious journeying of twice twenty years, sharing the cares and labors of life's devious and chequered pathway, enduring its sorrows and tribulations, engaging in many battles with the flesh, and securing some victories, do the aspirations of my longing heart go out after the "new heaven and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." O, how I love to dwell upon that holy promise, the glorious home and future abode of the saints here upon the earth after it shall be purified and made meet for the Master's use! I read with more than usual interest, the glowing description by John the Revelator, of the beautiful city, whose dazzling splendor is compared to pearly gates and golden streets, the light of which outshines our natural sun. But its greatest attraction to my present limited vision, is the "pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb," on either side of which is the tree of life, bearing twelve manner of fruits, and yielding her fruit every month, and even the leaves of this wonderful tree of Paradise are so efficacious as to be for "the healing of the nations." With what holy ardor do I look forward to the time when Jesus shall come, bringing with him the loved ones, that have so long slept in his sacred embrace, and shall unite us together within the divine enclosure of the holy city, and permit us to pluck the celestial fruit of the heavenly tree by which our spiritual life will be perpetuated.

These very pleasing, and to myself comforting, reflections have induced me to write this humble letter to the dear brethren and sisters, who are contributors from time to time to the columns of the Crisis. In reading their refreshing articles and letters, I have become acquainted with some, with whom in connection with many others of Christ's little ones my soul claims spiritual affinity. I discover around this common table of social blessings many sisters' names, as co-workers with strong-minded brethren, in the vineyard of the Lord. Among whom I trace with long and cherished regard, the name of Sister Willard, with whom I have often taken joyous counsel in the Lord, and sweetly conversed across the gulf of time for a long period of years, and through whose instrumentality and kind invitation, I was induced to add my humble name to the list of those who love to talk about the coming of their Lord. Go on, my dear sisters, one and all, in the work and labor of love, trying to win souls to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, and though you will often have to sow in tears, yet, if not weary in well doing, you will reap in joy; and soon our blessed Savior will come and gather his jewels together, where they will be his children, and he will be their Shepherd, going in and out before them, while his own soft hand shall wipe all tears from all faces, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

The Master has appointed me quite an outpost in his service, with nothing very cheering in the surroundings about me, and often as I try to press forward in the active discharge of duty, do I find myself much alone in pursuing the onward and upward steeps of Zion. Now and then I am taken into the large room of his grace by coming in contact with some dear child of God, who is thirsting for more than the vain and delusive world can give, and then oh! how sweet is the feast of spiritual joy, how rich the foretaste of the banquet which Jesus has gone to prepare; and often after it is over, in imitation of Elijah, does my pilgrim heart go many days on the strength of the spiritual and heavenly repast. O! how precious is christian fellowship and kindred association to every dear saint of the Lord, and though his usual way in dealing with his children, is by the mellow touch of affliction, in permitting them to fill up the measure of Christ's sufferings left behind for every true son and daughter to taste, yet he now and then takes them into his banqueting house of love, and with congenial spirits refreshes and prepares them for the further conflicts of their continual warfare, by the rich preludes of their future and blissful inheritance among the sanctified.

Then let us mid every trial gird up the loins of our mind and "hope unto the end;" comforted from the fact that the time is not far distant, when our journeying through an enemy's land will close, our conflicts cease, and our triumph in a Savior's love be complete. Till then with christian love I am one with every true disciple of the blessed Redeemer. MARY A. TIBBETS.

Neal's Creek, Ind.

All for Christ.

Thou, who didst stoop below
To drain the cup of woe,
Wearing the form of frail mortality;
Thy blessed labors done,
Thy crown of victory won,
Hast passed from earth, passed to thy throne on high.

Man may no longer trace
In thy celestial face
The image of the bright, the viewless one;
Nor may thy servants hear,
Save with faith's raptured ear,
Thy voice of tenderness,—God's holy Son!

Our eyes behold thee not,
Yet hast thou not forgot
Those who have placed their hope, their trust in thee;
Before thy Father's face
Thou hast prepared a place,
That where thou art, there they may also be.

It was no path of flowers,
Through this dark world of ours,
Beloved of the Father, thou didst tread;
And shall we in dismay
Shrink from the narrow way,
When clouds and darkness are around it spread?

O, Thou who art our life,
Be with us through the strife;
Was not thy head by earth's fierce tempests bowed?
Raise then our eyes above,
To see a Father's love
Beam, like a bow of promise, through the cloud.

E'en through the awful gloom
Which hovers o'er the tomb,
That light of love our guiding star shall be;
Our spirits shall not dread
The shadowy way to tread,
Friend! Guardian! Savior! which doth lead to Thee.

Selections.

Divine End of Suffering.

We make the following extracts from Beecher's sermon on John 11: 49–52, recently given in Brooklyn:—

"The second method in point of time, but first in importance, by which God inspires faith in the reality, value, and authority of invisible truths, is by the sublime manifestation of suffering. He does it first by miracles, and next by suffering. But more than by any other influence, has God pierced the opaque senses of men with the conviction of eternal, spiritual, invisible truth, by the potency of suffering. For as all men hate suffering, and flee from it, and dread it, so it is almost a spontaneous conviction, almost an instinct of the world, that suffering measures the value of anything for which it is endured. The whole world knows and feels that no man would willingly suffer for anything which he did not believe to have some value. There are some sufferings that men cannot help; but when a man goes into trying circumstances for the sake of a certain good, he manifests a willingness to bear whatever sufferings he will be subjected to by those circumstances. What a man is willing to endure, measures his estimation of the thing for which he endures. And how much a man will suffer, measures to his fellow-men how much he values the thing for which he suffers. We see this in lesser spheres. How much a man will suffer for money, measures the attraction which money has for him. How much a man will undergo and forfeit for the sake of gratifying ambition, measures the value which he sets upon the rewards of ambition. What a man will suffer for a friend, for a companion, or for a child, measures what is the hold of love upon him.

"You recollect, I presume, the case of a man who, being pursued by Indians, and endeavoring to escape with his family, found that he could not take with him all his children without running the risk of losing them all. It seemed plain to him that if he did not leave some of them behind, they would all be overtaken and killed. He tried to pick out those that he could best spare. He looked at the largest, at the smallest, and at each of the others, in succession, but there was none of them that he could make up his mind to part with. I would like to know which of your children you could spare better than the others. So he determined that he would not without a struggle spare any of them; and he put himself as a shield between them and the enemy, and driving the enemy back, escaped with the whole of them. His own life was nothing to him; he did not care for that; his willingness to sacrifice it for his children, measured what they were worth to him. What a man will do for those he loves, measures how much he loves. What a man will suffer for those he loves, measures the depth of the Divine element of love in him. What men will do and suffer, then, for moral principles, measures their estimation of the value of those principles. Now, God has, from the beginning, employed this measure to reveal to worldlings and the whole world the reality and grandeur of invisible moral truths. If there had been no man to suffer for truth, the truth to-day would have been no more esteemed than error. If there had been no man to suffer for justice, justice would have been no more revered than injustice. If there had been no man nor woman to suffer for purity, purity would have ranked upon the same level as impurity. If there is exaltation in the moral sentiments, it is because there has been a baptism of suffering upon them.

"Men who can discern great invisible realities clearly, and who value them so much that they are willing to suffer for their sake—such men are men of natural endowments so lofty and so imperial that they are ordained from their birth to be kings and priests to their fellow men. There are men that are kings all their life long, and priests all their life long, who were made so by the ordinances of birth. There are subsequent ordinations; but the great ordination is that which a man receives when he is born; and what God gives him then is a prophecy of all that he is going to receive to the end of his life. All prophets and martyrs and witnesses, then, of every age, have been great men by birth, and have been selected because they had a natural hold on faith, and a natural power upon the imaginations of men. When such men, being men upon whom the public gaze is fixed, and standing head and shoulders above those around them, take suffering for the sake of invisible truth, it produces a most profound impression upon the world.

"You look across the street into your neighbor's window—as you have no business to do—and see a spectacle of sorrow. You are not near enough to discern anything except this: that in the room, alone, is a fair woman in the extreme of suffering. She has abandoned herself to grief. Her hair is disheveled; at times she tears it with her hands; she is in convulsions; she falls to the floor; she seems to cry out with exclamations of despair; she springs to her feet again, and all her movements indicate intense anguish; and what do you know of the cause of her trouble? You look to see if she is tormented by anything outside of herself, and perceive that she is not. You instantly say, 'There is a person undergoing great suffering;' and as there is no visible cause for her suffering, you say, 'In her mind something has wounded her to the quick.' From her physical suffering you know that there is an invisible cause operating upon her; you know that there is something acting upon her heart, upon her soul. Since her body suffers, and since it does not suffer from any external cause, you know that its suffering must be caused by something internal. And that is the key of the suffering in the world.

"When a prophet suffers, and men see him bear bodily torment without complaint, they know that there must be something inside of him which sustains him, and they say, 'That man believes in something, or something is acting upon his imagination, which we do not know anything about.' They call it sometimes fanaticism, and sometimes enthusiasm. They know that there is an invisible something that enables him to calmly endure his suffering, while flames scorch him, while the axe gashes him, while lancets pierce him, and while thorns tear him, and that causes him under such circumstances to say, 'I cannot recant.' The fagot blazes and crackles about him, and he calls out to his God, and men say, 'Where is his God? What is it that he is calling out to?' They see him look up, and they look up, and see nothing, and feel mysterious, and say, 'There is something that we do not know and he does.' A profound impression is made upon their mind that he has commerce with the invisible spheres, and with an invisible power. And so human suffering well borne is the most powerful revelation to the world of a higher sphere of truth than that which ordinary men are accustomed to act by."

Muller's "Life of Trust."

Allusion was made to this devoted man last week. We now give below some extracts from his work:—

REASON FOR ESTABLISHING THE ORPHAN HOUSE.—Through my pastoral labors and my correspondence, and through brethren who visited Bristol, I had constantly cases brought before me which proved that one of the especial things which the children of God needed in our day was, to have their faith strengthened.

My spirit longed to be instrumental in strengthening their faith, by giving them not only instances from the word of God of his willingness and ability to help all those who rely upon him, but to show them by proofs that he is the same in our day. I well know that the word of God ought to be enough; but I considered that I ought to lend a helping hand to my brethren, if by any means, by this visible proof of the unchangeable faithfulness of the Lord, I might strengthen their hands in God; for I remembered what a great blessing my own soul had received through the Lord's dealings with his servant, A. H. Francke, who, in dependence upon the living God alone, established an immense orphan house, which I had seen many times with my own eyes. I therefore judged myself bound to be the servant of the church of Christ in the particular point on which I had obtained mercy; namely, in being able to take God by his word, and to rely upon it.

This, then, was the primary reason for establishing the orphan house. I certainly did from my heart desire to be used by God to benefit the bodies of poor children, bereaved of both parents, and seek in other respects, with the help of God, to do them good for this life. I also particularly longed to be used by God in getting the dear orphans trained up in the fear of God—but, still, the first and primary object of the work was and still is, that God might be magnified by the fact that the orphans under my care are provided with all they need, only by prayer and faith—without any one being asked by me or my fellow laborers, whereby it may be seen that God is faithful still, and hears prayer still. That I was not mistaken, has been abundantly proved since November, 1835, both by the conversion of many sinners who have read the accounts which have been published in connection with this work, and also by the abundance of fruit that has followed in the hearts of the saints, for which, from my inmost soul, I desire to be grateful to God, and the honor and glory of which not only is due to him alone, but which I, by his help, am enabled to ascribe to him."

Let the following increase your faith:—

"REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER.—There was given by a brother one hundred pounds, fifty pounds of which were previously promised, to insure the rent for premises. It is a remarkable fact, concerning this donation, that I had, in December of last year, repeatedly asked the Lord to incline the heart of this brother to give this hundred pounds, and I made a memorandum of this prayer in my journal of December 12th, 1835. On Jan. 25th, 1836, fifty pounds were promised by him, and on November 5th, fifty pounds besides that sum were given; but it was not till some days after that I remembered that the very sum for which I had asked the Lord had been given: when it came to my mind that this prayer had been noted down in my journal, and I showed it to the donor, we rejoiced together; he, to have been the instrument in giving, and I, to have had the request granted. * * *

"This is, perhaps, of all days, the most remarkable as yet, so far as it regards the funds. When I was in prayer this morning respecting them, I was enabled firmly to believe that the Lord would send help, though all seemed dark as to natural appearances. At twelve o'clock, I met as usual with the brethren and sisters for prayer. There had come in only one shilling, which was left last evening anonymously at the Infant Orphan House, and which, except twopence, had already been spent on account of the great need. Lower we had never been, and perhaps never so low. We gave ourselves now unitedly to prayer, laying the case in simplicity before the Lord. Whilst in prayer there was a knock at the door, and one of the sisters went out. After the two brethren who labor in the Orphan Houses and I had prayed aloud, we continued for a while silently in prayer. As to myself, I was lifting up my heart to the Lord to make a way for our escape, and in order to know if there were any other thing which I could do with a good conscience, besides waiting on him, so that we might have food for the children; at last we rose from our knees. I said—'God will surely send help.' The words had not quite passed over my lips when I perceived a letter lying on the table, which had been brought whilst we were in prayer. It was from my wife, containing another letter from a brother with ten pounds for the orphans. The evening before last I was asked by a brother whether the balance in hand for the orphans would be as great this time when the accounts would be made up, as the last time. My answer was that it would be as great as the Lord pleased. The next morning this brother was moved to remember the orphans, and to send to-day ten pounds, which arrived after I had left my house, and which, on account of our need, was forwarded immediately to me. * * *

"This morning our poverty, which now has lasted more or less for several months, had become exceedingly great. I left my house a few minutes after seven, to go to the Orphan Houses to see whether there was money enough to take in the milk, which is brought about eight o'clock. On my way, it was especially my request that the Lord would be pleased to pity us, even as a father pitieth his children, and that he would not lay more upon us than he would enable us to bear. I especially entreated him that he would now be pleased to refresh our hearts by sending us help. I likewise reminded him of the consequences that would result, both in reference to believers and unbelievers, if we should have to give up the work because of want of means, and that he, therefore, would not permit its coming to naught. I moreover again confessed before the Lord that I deserved not that he should use me in this work any longer. While I was thus in prayer, about two minutes' walk from the Orphan Houses, I met a brother who was at this early hour to his business. After having exchanged a few words with him, I went on: but he presently ran after me and gave me one pound for the orphans. Thus the Lord speedily answered my prayer. Truly, it is worth being poor and greatly tried in faith for the sake of having day by day such precious proofs of the loving interest which our kind Father takes in everything that concerns us—and how should our Father do otherwise? He that has given us the greatest possible proof of his love which he could have done, in giving us his own Son, surely he will with him also freely give us all things. It is worth also being poor and greatly tried in faith, if but thereby the hearts of the children of God may be comforted and their faith strengthened, and if but those who do not know God, and who may read or hear of his dealings with us, should be led thereby to see that faith in God is more than a mere notion, and that there is indeed reality in christianity. In the course of this day there came in still further thirteen shillings."

A COMING ETERNITY.—And Paradise, Paradise lost, is awaiting you, and stands before you with unfolded gates; and time hasteneth past, and eternity prepareth itself to roll on for ever. And the body loseth its strength for labor, and its relish for sensual things; and both haste to an end; and rest cometh, and refreshment in the presence of God; and every blessing of our first parents, with every superadded blessing which arises from the sense of dangers past, from the glorious knowledge of redeeming love, and from the certainty of salvation, and deliverance, and eternal security.—Irving.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

Baldness.

What makes baldness? Why are so many heads robbed of their covering? I will tell you.

The human hair has a bulbous root, some like the root of an onion. This root is bedded in the soft, fatty mass of flesh and integuments which cover the skull, underneath the outer skin. The orifice in the outer skin, through which the hairs protrude, is smaller than the bulb or root of the hair, and so the hair cannot be pulled out without causing pain, both in starting it from its place of growth and drawing the bulb through the narrow aperture in the outside scalp. Now when from any cause the roots of the hair become dried and diseased, they shrink and loose their hold beneath; and then the bulbs, having become smaller than they were, slip out easily, and so the hair pulls out or drops off, and the head becomes bald.

Fevers that dry and parch the skin shrink the roots of the hair, and so it comes out. General ill health frequently does the same. Great mental excitement, causing heat in the head and headache, produce similar results. Wearing heavy caps and close stove-pipe hats on the head, sweat and enfeeble it, and so cause the roots of the hair to be diseased and die. Even the skull is rendered fragile by over-dressing; and upon one ancient battle field history records that years after the battle you could distinguish the skull of a barbarian from that of a Persian, the skulls of the Persians being very soft and easily broken, in consequence of their wearing heavy felted caps upon their heads, while the skulls of the bareheaded barbarians were very hard.

In this country I presume you will find ten baldheaded men to one woman. Why? Because men wear hot and heavy caps nearly all their days, while women go bareheaded most of the time; and when they pretend to put any thing on their heads, it is a mere frame to stretch ribbon over, or to hang posies in, or to keep the sun off the back part of their heads, where they have tied, and rolled, and pulled, and twisted, and braided their hair up in a manner that must stop the circulation of blood in the back part of the head, rob the neck and spine of the protection God made for it, and so cause stiff neck, pain in the neck and back, spinal disease, and so make business for doctors, undertakers, etc., etc. But wearing the head uncovered preserves the hair to a great extent, nevertheless.

You will notice on bald heads there is a great lack of that soft, fleshy covering, that lies between the scalp and the skull. Their heads are smooth as an egg shell, and as hard as need be. No hair can grow on such a pate. It is like the stony ground, which has not much depth of earth, and so there is no growth of hair above it, so they have become bald.

Now what is the cure for baldness? One good thing for the hair is to go bareheaded. And if a man cannot do this for fear of being put in a mad-house, let him get a very light hat, and have four or five eyelets set in around it, so the air can pour in and circulate through it. Now don't start off on this advice and go bareheaded till you "catch your death cold," but use moderation and common sense, and especially don't sit around a roasting fire with a heavy cap on your head. I know a man who, winter or summer, goes to the field or the forest to work, lays his hat and his coat off together, and never puts them on till he has done his work. His head looks as if you could hardly pull a hair out.

Another good thing for the hair is to throw all your paltry perfumes and bottles of bear's grease and olive oil (made from western hogs fed on rattlesnakes and garbage,) to the bats and the moles, and lay aside your fine comb till "circumstances" demand its use, and then brush your hair well with a good stiff brush. A thorough brushing will impart a silky gloss to your hair, which no country boy ever attained by rubbing a tallow candle on his head, or by using up a bottle of Rowland's Macassar, or Mrs. Flannel's Flowery Flummery upon his unkempt locks.

If you have a humor in your scalp, abhor ointments, oils and embrocations, as Ancient Henry does holy water; and turn a deaf ear to every old lady (male or female) who offers to dose you with poisons inside, or with applications outside to drive it away. Get a band of linen long enough to go round your head, and wide enough to reach from your ear up nearly to the top of the head; make it two thicknesses, and sew an oval crown into the top; then dip it in soft water, put it on your head, and wear it day and night if your head feels bad; and if your head is covered with scabs, no matter, keep washing it out and cleaning them off, and when it has all come to the surface and is worked off, you will have a head that is a head, good for something besides to hang a hat on—a head that can do something besides ache and throb and torment you to death.

The great thing to prevent baldness is to get a healthy action in the scalp—not a mere stimulation caused by brandy, alcohol, essential oils, and such other things as form the basis of many hair medicines of the day, but a vital action which will be permanent. How shall we do it? First, if your hair falls off, cut it short—no matter if it is shingled down to an inch in length—then wash the head in warm water, or cold, or both, rub it thoroughly and wipe it dry. This, continued for a week or two daily, will often cure the hair from coming off.

If the scalp is too thin, that is, if it feels tight and hard on top of the head, no healthy growth of hair can exist. To remedy this, press the ends of the fingers firmly on the scalp, and move them from side to side. Don't rub the outside of the scalp merely, but rub the scalp round on the skull till it is loose; keep working at it often every day, and presently when the head has been worked over for some time in that way, the scalp will be found looser than before, there will seem to be more flesh and fat upon it, the head will not be so hide-bound, the arteries and blood vessels will be filled up, the roots of the hair will be nourished by the influx of blood, they will expand and fill their sockets, and so become fastened in; the outer orifice will be too small to let them easily escape, and so the hair will grow, will have color, and will stay in the head. And if a man lives like a christian, healthily and properly, he will have, even in age, not a shiny, greasy, bald pate, but that hoary head which is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness.

I wonder who will dislike this article and want to reply to it? I do as well as I know how, and then I can't please folks.

N. B. If any one finds this advice worth more than five dollars to them, they can give what they save from buying perfumery, hair dye and pomatum, to some of God's poor, or else send it on to the Tract Fund. The advice is gratis. H. L. H.

"Naked Arms and Sore Throat."

The following words are taken from "Lewis' New Gymnastics." Let every mother read the truth, and then see whether the dresses of her little ones correspond: A distinguished physician, who died some years since in Paris, declared: "I believe that during the twenty-six years I have practiced my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemeteries, a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing their arms naked."

I have often thought if a mother were anxious to show the soft white skin of her baby, and would cut out a round hole in the little thing's dress, just over the heart, and then carry it about for observation by the company, it would do very little harm. But to expose the baby's arms, members so far removed from the heart, and with such feeble circulation at best, is a most pernicious practice.

Put the bulb of a thermometer in a baby's mouth; the mercury rises to 99 degrees. Now carry the same bulb to its little hand; if the arms be bare, and the evening cool, the mercury will sink 40 degrees. Of course all the blood which flows through these arms and hands must fall from 20 to 40 degrees below the temperature of the heart. Need I say that when these cold currents of blood flow back into the chest, the child's general vitality must be more or less compromised? And need I add that we ought not to be surprised at its frequently recurring affections of the lungs, throat, and stomach?

I have seen more than one child with habitual cough and hoarseness, or choking with mucus, entirely and permanently relieved by simply keeping its hands and arms warm. Every observing and progressive physician has daily opportunities to witness the same simple cure.

HOW TO GET A GOOD FRAME CHEAP.—Live temperately, be abstemious, cultivate early hours, rise with the lark instead of going to bed after one, take plenty of exercise, avoid debt, draughts, bad company, bills, and wet feet, and you will soon get a good frame cheap, and it shall be a frame, moreover, worth more than its weight in gold, such as shall inclose the very picture of health.

FEVER SORE.—Syringe the sore every morning with the following liquid: White oak bark (inside) four ounces, boiled in a quart of water to a pint. When cold, bottle it, and add one ounce of borax, in small pieces. Use a little for each dressing of the sore.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Trust in Christ.

No more, my Lord, will I repel
The pleading of thy Spirit's voice,
O Savior! come and with me dwell,
And make my burdened heart rejoice.

No more, my Lord, no more I boast
Of works performed and duties done;
Ruined and helpless, sick and lost,
My only refuge is thy throne.

No more, my Lord, no more I strive
By eager toil thy love to seek:
Now, on thy mercy I believe,
And of thy proffered "fullness" take.

No more, my Lord, my changeful frame,
My doubts and fears, and cares and gloom
Affright my soul: in Jesus' name
I trust, till he shall bring me home.

THE COMING STRUGGLE
Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:
SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 1.

Spiritualism is now assuming an importance which demands something more than a mere passing notice, however plausible may have been the excuse for indifference in the past. Unless we would be in the condemnation of those who know not the things which belong to their peace, it becomes us to study well the character, policy and resources of the enemy which we must meet, whether we will or not. Nor does it become us to sport with its specious pretensions by such a childish opposition as "mere humbug"—"the work of tricksters"—"the wild vagaries of infatuated and deluded men," with other like harmless arguments. With all its infidel pretensions and unblushing immoralities, it has still indispensable elements of success, and we should look it full in the face. If its "glory" is really "its shame," it can boast of a success which no other professedly religious body can. (I use the term religion, here, as denoting a system of worship, not necessarily the true system, but which may be true or false.) Most other religious bodies, among the many in our country, fall below their hundreds of thousands in the course of a century or so; while but two, I think,—the E. Methodist and the Catholic—have as yet attained to a million; yet the Spiritualists, though they have been running but about fourteen years, now number, in our country alone, two millions of actual, and five millions nominal, believers, with an almost equal success in other countries, and a present rate of increase as surprising as its past achievements.

Nor is this unparalleled success to be attributed to any perfection in its religious system in the beginning, nor the advantage of having some acknowledged "great light," or lights, to introduce it to the world. On the contrary, it started with the "Mysterious Rochester Raps" for its religious system, and the obscure "Fox Family," for its first adherents. But its conquests are quite as remarkable for their permanence as their extent. The adherents of other religious bodies are frequently falling back; and there must be, according to Christ, the "stony ground" and "wayside" hearers, though the word is preached. But the instances are rare of individuals becoming freed from the influence of Spiritualism, who have once entered zealously into its defence. Though I once thought a Randolph, a Hatch and a Harris were examples of this kind, the sequel shows that they are not inclined to oppose, but regulate, the progress of Spiritualism.

Orthodoxy embraces in its theology, and guards with jealous care, the fundamental principles of Spiritualism; and though it does not yet openly acknowledge, in it the direct fruit of its own teachings, yet it has done it virtually, in that it has ceased its opposition so generally manifest a few years ago. They seemed to have learned that their neighbor's house is built on the same foundation, and is, also, closely interwoven with their own in the framework; insomuch that they cannot attempt to demolish it without equally endangering their own; hence they seem inclined to adjust the differences, and recognize them as rightful tenants; while the Spiritualists are congratulating themselves on their agreement, saying, "There are no people in the world so well prepared to receive Spiritualism as the Christian sects."—Mrs. Spence.

From what I have seen, I am well persuaded that there are more Spiritualists who do not know they are such,—men who have imbibed its essential principles, not knowing what Spiritualism is,—than there are of the avowed believers, and time will show that this is the case. Nor are its pretentions for the future behind its prospects.

The Spiritual Eclectic says:—"For ourselves we accept this new revelation as one which is utterly to revolutionize and destroy existing institutions of all kinds—political, social and religious—and that speedily." Says the Spiritual Telegraph:—"We feel that our advance will be irresistible and our conquests speedy and sure. To Spiritualists is committed the gospel of the present age." Says Mrs. A. M. Spence:—"Spiritualism has not done its work yet, it has a greater one to do. It will soon have a controlling power over government. Your government will never be elevated till your religion is revolutionized."—Discourse at the Melodeon, Boston, April 15th, 1860. Says A. J. Davis:—"The world is replete with evidences that Philosophy and Theology, Reason and Superstition, Religion and Republicanism, Liberty and Slavery, Truth and Error, are about to commence a fearful, a terrific, a sanguinary battle—a battle to be fought, first in men's souls and then in the sanctuaries and congressional halls of sects and nations. This change shall bring about the reorganization of society which will be a commencement of the kingdom of heaven on earth."—Great Har., Vol. 1, p. 211. Says Dr. B. P. Randolph:—"I believe there is a principle at work from one end of the world to the other, and the day is already dawned, when all society will be swept on by the rushing tide of truth and common sense to the ultimate belief in modern Spiritualism." Says John M. Spear:—"The hour is at hand when a revolution must come. . . . It will be a fearful crisis—an hour when the passions of men will be excited to an extent seldom if ever known before."—Educator, p. 408. Says Uriah Clark:—"Only eleven years and its journals are numbered by scores, its volumes and public evangels by hundreds, its mediums by thousands, its believers by millions. Conservative to all good, and radically revolutionary to all evil, beneath its angel (?) influences the church and state and society of to-day are rocking like stranded barks amid the ocean waves."—Spiritual Register, 1860, p. 10. Says H. B. Storer:—"Those who are now most cautious in the expression of their sentiments will soon become mouth-pieces for the utterance of sentiments the most radical and revolutionary."—Spr. Register, p. 11.

Other testimonies might be added, but the above—all from leading Spiritualists—must suffice as an expression of their hopes concerning the immediate future of Spiritualism. But this revolution and its results will be noticed in its proper place when these quotations will be noticed again, and their predictions will be more apparent. These sentiments, let it be remembered, are not the result of their observation merely, but they are the substance of communications daily received in every part of our land and throughout the world from invisible intelligences. We cannot, I think, contemplate its wonderful achievements in the past, its present character and miracles, with its arrogant yet plausible pretensions for the future, without feeling a conviction that a mightier than human power is directing this specious scheme of infidelity in its avowed design to overthrow christianity. If we consult the Scriptures in this matter, which we are assured shall be as "lamp to our feet and a light to our path," we find that we may expect to see men about this time, "depart from the faith and give heed"—as a substitute—"to" spirits—"seducing spirits" and—doctrines of like character—"doctrines of devils."—1 Tim. 4: 1. We find also that "unclean spirits"—"spirits of devils working miracles"—not spirits of the dead—shall a short time before "the battle of the great day" "go forth to gather the kings of the earth and the whole world to this battle." This shows a general spread of this religion of the spirits and an acceptance quite as general, since the kings of the earth and the whole world are persuaded to risk a battle with Christ in defence of it.—Rev. 16: 13—16; 19: 19, 20.

Seeing then that it is a scheme of Satan we cannot wonder at its success nor be too watchful of its movements, as embodying "the wiles of the devil" into a specious system of religion designed to counterfeit christianity in its promised introduction of Christ's reign upon earth, and so gain the confidence of the careless portion of the christian world and lead them to destruction.

Some brethren have been content with proving that the dead cannot communicate; others, embracing Adventists generally, have regarded it as a "sign of the times," simply, while there are but few who have given it the place which it demands as the great miracle-working and persecuting power so frequently alluded to in the Scriptures as acting a prominent part in the closing scenes of this age. By consulting the frequent allusions to miracle-working as we have them in the prophecies, as,—the false Christs, Matt. 24: 24; Luke 17; the man of sin, 2 Thess. 2 chap.; those men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, who resist the truth among the "perilous times" of the last days, as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, 2 Tim. 3: 1—9; the two-horned beast of Rev. 13th; the "unclean spirits" of Rev. 15th, and the false prophet of Rev. 13th,—we shall learn 1, That in each case these miracles are wrought by a power opposed to God, supporting a false religion, and especially opposing the truth. 2, That in each case we find the world generally are deceived by these miracles and through them are persuaded to accept of this false religion. 3, That in several instances we find this opposing power spoken of as a persecuting power; and 4, that this miracle-working power is to do its work during a short period ending with the coming of Christ. 5, That having these several coincidences in character, design, policy, success, and time of fulfillment, they must severally refer to the same power.

Immortality.

Our earth-life, though brief, is very beautiful. Sin, it is true, has cast a shadow deep and dark about us, but much of joy remains, and the ruins of the glorious speak to us of what might have been if primeval loveliness had remained undimmed. It is so sweet to live, to breathe the air, to see, to hear, to act.

When beauty and fragrance meet us everywhere, when the waters sparkle and leap joyously, and the air is filled with music, we look around on a great, living, glorious creation, and, forgetting for the moment the evil in the world, from our heart comes the utterance, "O, to live forever!"—In some quiet evening, when a holy influence pervades us, we gaze at the heavens and mark the gems that so far outshine a kingly coronet, and they almost seem to whisper to our awe-bound spirits that they are the finger-work of God. Then we remember that they are rolling worlds, and thought flies far away to where they are revolving in their course, and in seeking to follow them, we almost forget that we are upon the earth, till we are overwhelmed with incomprehensible vastness and grandeur, and we can only cry, "Great and marvellous are the works of God!" Then we long for an infinite life that will compare with the objects of thought.

In the pursuit of knowledge there is joy. We love to study the nature and properties of the little flowers that spring at our feet, as well as to watch their unfoldings; to know something of the lives and habits of the myriads of insects and birds with which earth teems. Even the soil on which we tread claims our attention and investigation, and the great curious globe which we inhabit furnishes inexhaustible material for examination and research. We long to try each path of science, to follow the windings and to delve deep in each mine of knowledge, and bring out hidden treasures. And more blessed than all this, is intercourse with friends. Like a part of ourselves they seem, and we joy in their joys, and interchange words of sympathy and love.

But the service of God is the crowning excellence of our existence. Pure and ennobling are the principles taught us by that perfect One who once walked among the people of earth. And so we find joy in obeying those precepts, and in loving Him whose life was given for us.

But ah! the truth that we must die forces itself upon us and life seems too short, too fleeting to allow us to accomplish what we would, and so we are humbled. We look into the coffin and see the forms of those we have loved—the hands we have clasped lying still and pulseless; eyes that have ever looked kindly upon us, and lighted with joy at our presence, now sightless and dull, and our tears fall fast as we remember that the worm will soon feed sweetly on its victim.

How great and wonderful and cheering is the voice that comes to us amid the gloom, telling us that though we die we may live again—where the eager desires of our hearts will be granted—our aspirations realized, and the footsteps of death will never be heard.

Will there be a bursting of the graves by and by? Will He who has the keys of death unlock the prison doors and raise the sleeping dead? Will the redeemed ones, clothed with vigor and beauty, shout with immortal voices, O, grave, where is thy victory? Dear Savior, we are thine. Thou hast bought us, not with silver or gold, but with thine own precious blood.

Can it be that a gift so precious—eternal salvation—is offered to some who reject it? They love life, but are dreaming. O, that we might awaken them. We will use loving persuasions, kind entreaties as our Master did, when he said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

For the Crisis.

Luke 23: 34.

"Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

It seems evident that the words "them" and "they" in the text refer to the principal party concerned in killing the Prince of life, who "derided him, saying, He saved others, let him save himself, if he be the Christ the chosen of God." The fact of their success in bringing him to death was that which to them thoroughly refuted his claim to the Messiahship, and here was manifest their ignorance in the matter. On a former occasion they said, "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever;" and at this they stumbled, supposing that it did not agree with his saying about being "lifted up"—John 12: 34. Thus we see the "veil was upon the heart" of the nation of Israel. God had "given them the spirit of slumber" (as a nation,) though individually they were at liberty to obey the call—and "as many as received him, to them gave he (privilege) to become sons of God." Thus "blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." (A mystery of which Paul was not willing his Roman brethren should be ignorant, lest they "should be wise in "their own conceits," and so all Israel (nationally) shall be saved. Concerning the gospel, they were enemies for the sake of the Gentiles: but as touching the election they were beloved (though now enemies) for the fathers' sakes, (to whom God made the promises.) For the gifts (or national blessings) and calling of God (the Jews, by virtue of the oath of God to Abraham,) are without repentance—(or unconditional, there being no condition in the original promise.) For as in times past the Gentiles have not obeyed God, yet now have obtained mercy through Israel's unbelief; even so have these also now not believed, that through the Gentiles' mercy, Israel also may obtain mercy. For God hath shut them all up (nationally) in unbelief, that he might have mercy on all. See Rom. 9, 10, and 11.

So we verily believe our Lord's prayer expressed in our text will be answered. "Father, forgive them, (why?) for they know not what they do." Peter afterwards tells them—Acts 3: 16—that "he knew that through ignorance they did it as did also their rulers." Paul testifies—"They have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Paul himself, who verily thought he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, was a striking example of Jewish blindness,—"concerning zeal, persecuting the church;" but doing it ignorantly in unbelief, he obtained mercy. He could not have been more ignorant or excusable than his brethren; having been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and instructed out of the law and the prophets; yet not discovering his error until Jesus personally appeared to him.

This chief of the apostles, in reply to his own question—Have they stumbled that they should fall? answers,—"By no means; but rather through their fall is salvation come unto the Gentiles for to provoke them (Israel) to jealousy." But before they can be made jealous they must see what they have lost by rejecting God's Anointed, and the consequent blessings accruing to the Gentiles: and this cannot take place "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in," and the "blindness" removed. "For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee." See Isa. 54th chap.

When "the Deliverer shall come, . . . and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob," then will they say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." "I will praise thee, O Lord; though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me." Matt. 23: 39; Isa. 12: 1. Then imagine Israel's humiliation and grief as expressed in Zech. 12: 10–14,—"Then all the tribes of the land will lament." Matt. 24: 30.—"They who pierced him and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn because of him." Rev. 1: 7,—"Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Amen.

Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.

Repent ye! repent ye! the kingdom's at hand!
Soon Jesus is coming to reign o'er the land,
To bring to his saints redemption and joy,
But the wicked, the sinful, he'll surely destroy!

Repent ye! repent ye! for soon ye shall hear
The loud trump of Gabriel resound through the air!
God's saints who are sleeping will then rise to greet him,
The living be changed, and the sinner must meet him!

Repent ye! repent ye! oh, do not delay!
Now bow at his feet and in penitence pray;
O! haste thee to profit by Christ's precious blood,
Which was shed to redeem thee, to bring thee to God.

Repent ye! repent ye! God's promise believe,
O! trust in his mercy, his blessing receive;
He kindly invites you,—then seek him by prayer,
That you in Christ's kingdom bright glory may share.

SCRIPTURAL QUESTIONS FOR BRO. PREBLE AND OTHERS.

"If David then call Him Lord, how is He his Son?"—John 22: 45. If Abraham called him "my Lord," who was "the Lord," and who said, "shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do, for I know that he will command his household after him," etc., and whom Abraham addressed thus in respect to Sodom—"Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"—how is he "the seed of Abraham"? See Gen. 17: 1, 3, 17, 25; Heb. 2: 16. If Jacob had "power with God and with men," and saw "God face to face," and "life" was "preserved," Gen. 32: 28, 30, and "took his brother by the heel in the womb (literal), and by his strength had power with God: yea, he had power over the angel and prevailed: he wept and made supplication unto him—(literal, and was not a worshiper of angels)—even the Lord God of hosts; the Lord is his memorial," Hosea 12: 3–5;—"How was the saying fulfilled, "When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt"? Hosea 11: 1. Or reconciled with the Scripture, "And Joseph took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt, that the saying might be fulfilled, Out of Egypt have I called my Son"?

If Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, "saw the God of Israel"—"saw God and did eat and drink," Exod. 24: 9–11, "and the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend"—and yet said to him, "Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live,"—"My face shall not be seen," Exod. 33: 11; 20: 23; and Jesus said, "No man hath seen God at any time," (John 1: 18; 1 John 4: 12), "Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape," John 5: 37; and "He dwelleth in light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see;" 1 Tim. 6: 16;—whom did these men see and hear if not Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is, God with us"? Or, if he be the Father, how reconcile the Scriptures? Do you say they saw God's Minister Plenipotentiary? Is God's minister God himself?

Who is the God of Israel?

Who is "the angel of the Lord" who appeared unto Moses in the burning bush, and whom Moses "turned aside to see God?" and "the Lord" who addressed him, saying, "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob . . . I have surely seen the affliction of my people"? Who is the "God" who said unto Moses, "I am that I am"—"I am"? Exod. 3d chap.

Is "the God of Israel," "the angel of the Lord," and "the God" who said "I am," the same as the one to whom the Jews said in rage, "Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham," and to whom the Lord replied, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am"? If not, were not the Jews justified in rejecting him; and there was some cause for their endeavors to stone him? John 8: 57–59.

Who was the "angel," "My presence"? Exod. 33: 2; 14: 15; "Mine angel," of whom Israel was warned, "Beware of him and obey his voice; provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him"? Exod. 23: 20–23. Who "in all their affliction he was afflicted; and the angel of His presence saved them . . redeemed them . . and carried them all the days of old"? Isa. 63: 9. Who hath power on earth to forgive sins? Who is the Lord, Savior, and Redeemer of men? To whom did God refer? Job. 19: 25.

Whose voice did Moses hear in the mount when the Lord descended and God answered him by a voice? Exod. 19: 16–19. "Whose voice then shook the earth; but now hath he promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." Heb. 12: 26. Who "was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor"? And when was he rich? 2 Cor. 8: 9. Who was in "the form of God" and "equal with God," yet "took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men"? Phil. 2: 5–11. Who is "the image of the invisible God" and by whom God "made the worlds"? Col. 1: 14–19; Heb. 1: 1–3.

What was the import of Christ's prayer? John 17: 4–5. But I forbear; question crowds upon question as I proceed upon this most important theme; the study of our divine Lord is a subject for the ages.

Finally, who constituted the Elohim who made the heavens and the earth in the beginning, and who said, "Let us make man in our image"? Gen. 1st chap.; John 1st chap. And who has been revealed since and adored as the Jehovah or Yahveh, or Lord of his people?

Is it Heresy?

Is it heresy to believe that "the first man is of the earth EARTHY"? and "that as is the earthy such are THEY also that are EARTHY"?—1 Cor. 15: 47, 48.

Is is heresy to believe that "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of LIFE; and man became a living soul"?—Gen. 2: 7.

Is it heresy to believe that when man sinned "now LEST he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and LIVE FOREVER; therefore the Lord God . . . DROVE OUT the man: and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden, cherubims, and a flaming sword that turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of LIFE"?—Gen. 3: 22—24.

Is it heresy to believe that "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only, wise God" . . . "is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who ONLY hath IMMORTALITY"?—1 Tim. 1: 17; 6: 16.

Is it heresy to believe that Christ "hath abolished death and hath brought life and IMMORTALITY to light in the GOSPEL"?—2 Tim. 1: 10.

Is is heresy to believe that God will render "to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life"?—Rom. 2: 7.

Is is heresy to believe that "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence"? "The grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth"? "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) the grave whither thou goest"?—Ps. 115: 17; Isa. 38: 18; Eccl. 9: 10.

Is is heresy to believe that "As the waters fail from the sea, and as the flood decayeth and drieth up: so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not AWAKE, nor be raised out of their SLEEP"?—Job 14: 11, 12.

Is it heresy to believe that Christ took part of flesh and blood "that through death he might DESTROY HIM that had the POWER of DEATH, that is, the DEVIL"?—Heb. 2: 14. That "the last ENEMY that shall be destroyed is DEATH"?—1 Cor. 15: 26.

Is it heresy to believe what Jesus told his disciples, "Whither I go ye cannot come"?—John 13: 33; or, that "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man"?—John 3: 13. "For David is not ascended into the heavens."—Acts 2: 34.

Is it heresy to believe that "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins; then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED"?—1 Cor. 15: 16—18.

Is it heresy to believe "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust? That "the hour is coming, in the which ALL that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall COME FORTH; they that have done GOOD to the resurrection of life; and they that have done EVIL to the resurrection of damnation"?—Acts 24: 15; John 5: 28, 29.

Is it heresy to believe that "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and THEN shall he REWARD every man according to his works"?—Matt. 16: 27.

Is it heresy to believe that "The wages of sin is DEATH, but the gift of God is ETERNAL LIFE through Jesus Christ our Lord"?—Rom. 6: 23.

Is it heresy to believe that "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them . . . are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire", so the wicked shall depart "into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"?—Jude 7; Matt. 25: 41.

Is it heresy to believe that the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment," and "shall be punished with everlasting DESTRUCTION from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, when he shall COME to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe"?—Matt. 25: 46; 2 Thess. 1: 9, 10.

Is it heresy to believe that "The soul that sinneth it shall die"? "That he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a SOUL from DEATH and shall hide a multitude of sins"?—Ezk. 18: 20; James 5: 20.

Is it heresy to believe that "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ASHES under the soles of YOUR FEET, in the day that I shall do this saith the Lord of hosts"?—Mal 4: 1—3.

Is is heresy to believe that "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life"?—1 John 5: 11, 12.

Is it heresy to believe that "the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the SECOND DEATH"?—Rev. 21: 8.

Is it heresy to believe that God's kingdom shall "come" and his "will be done in earth as it is in heaven"? That there shall be "a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness"? That "The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed"? That "the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High"? That the "wickedness of the wicked" shall "come to an end"? That "transgressors shall be rooted out of the earth; that "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever," and that "all things shall be subject to him," that God may be all in all"?—Matt. 6: 10; 2 Pet. 3: 13; Dan. 2: 44; 8: 27; Ps. 7: 9; Prov. 2: 22; Rev. 11: 15; 1 Cor. 15: 28.

Is is heresy to believe that which Jesus spake when he said "Thy word is truth"? John 17.

If THIS be heresy then "This I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a RESURRECTION of the DEAD, both of the JUST and UNJUST. And herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men."—Acts 24: 14—16.

Life and Death.

"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23.

Oh! that this truth could be heralded throughout the world and engraven on the minds of all mankind. What a field of thought it opens up to look at it in its scriptural simplicity, divested of the traditions of men and spiritual mystification. How it displays the goodness of God and his glorious plan of salvation.

Friends and brethren, we have all sinned and earned the wages of our transgression—death; we are frail, corruptible, dying mortals, with no hope beyond this life except in the precious promise of our Friend and Savior, who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. This precious gift, to live in perfect happiness and wear a crown of glory through the endless ages of eternity, [illegible] by all "them who by patient continuance in well doing [illegible] and immortality." "For he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. [illegible] well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." [illegible]

Revival Intelligence.

The following letter is from the pen of Mrs. Palmer, who has for quite a number of years been a faithful laborer in the vineyard. She is the wife of Dr. Palmer of New York, and well known by her excellent books, which have done much toward the revival of Bible christianity. She has traveled extensively the past few years, accompanied by her devoted and self-sacrificing husband, who sustains her, and co-operates with her in her public labors, and as the result of this entire devotedness to the work of God, thousands are redeemed from sin, and won to Christ. We extract the following letter from the "Guide to Holiness":

"Revival, Stroud, Gloucestshire, Eng.

DEAR BROTHER: The triumphs of the cross here are amazing. Yesterday was one of the days of the Son of Man, to a very extraordinary degree. He who is the Lord of the Sabbath drew great multitudes together from near and remote regions, and wondrous were the manifestations of convincing, healing and sanctifying power. Though the congregation was dense, and hundreds, I presume, went away for want of room, yet there was no confusion.

The solemnity of the felt presence of the High and Holy One seemed to be an outspoken realization depicted on every countenance. Would that I could with my pen give you a conception of the solemn, stupendous, penetrating influence that pervaded the congregations of yesterday afternoon and evening, but more particularly the evening. Said a christian lady about this, 'I opened my lips to sing, but I seemed so overawed with the solemnity of God's presence, that I paused.'

Others expressed themselves in a similar manner. . . . . As Dr. P. gave out the hymn commencing,

> 'Almighty Maker of my frame,
> Teach me the measure of my days,'

I presume there was not one in the house whose heart, if it had spoken out, would not have said in continuation of that solemn hymn,

> 'A little point our life appears,
> How frail at best is dying man;
> How vain are all his hopes and fears.'

. . . It is my belief that there was not an unconvicted sinner in the house; and Dr. P. desiring that not one might be permitted to leave without having an opportunity to strengthen their convictions by publicly acknowledging the work of the Holy Spirit on their hearts, asked that all in the house, who were resolved to seek the favor of God, and all who were enjoying his favor, would signify it by rising, when nearly all the people in the gallery and below, rose simultaneously to their feet.

He then asked all those who were seeking pardon, and those only who desired to go and help those seeking ones to the cross, would accompany them to the vestry. Immediately the vestry was crowded with seekers. Probably not more than three minutes had passed, before a person went to Dr. P. imploring him to ask the prayers of the congregation for the multitude of penitents in the vestry, and stating that doubtless as many as a hundred were there seeking mercy, and no more could be admitted, the crowd and heat being so great. Dr. P. then invited the seekers to the communion-rail, which was quickly filled, and many standing on the outside unable to find a place to kneel. Two seats were afterwards filled with persons seeking mercy, and others were taken to the upper vestry. Before the meeting closed, we have reason to believe that the largest portion of those who sought, obtained.

The work seemed only to be bounded by our want of room to meet the emergency, and laborers to point them to Christ, the crowd being so dense as to render it seemingly impossible to converse with all the seekers. We need scarcely tell you of the difficulty of bringing the service to a close, but many had come from miles distant, and we regarded it inexpedient, our own health also considered, to protract the services beyond half past ten. Since I have been writing, a lady who was present at the services from four miles distant, has come in. Her agony in view of her sins was so great that she was despairing of the mercy of God. She has now gone; Jesus spoke peace to her soul. The work is the more extraordinary in view of the fact that religion has been long in a low state in Stroud, and throughout the circuit. The Superintendent tells us that it seemed impossible to get the people enough aroused to say 'Amen' to any petition however fervent. These are the Lord's doings, and marvelous in our eyes. We are astounded at the magnitude of the work. I have heard no estimate of the number saved within the past eight days, but I am sure hundreds must have received pardon.

London, Oct. 27, 1860."

If we feel as we ought, we shall rejoice in the work of salvation among every denomination. At the yearly meetings of the Friends in Ohio and Indiana, in Sept. and Oct., there were unusual manifestations of the Divine Spirit. Many were led publicly to confess their sins, and give in their adherence to Christ. A remarkable outpouring of the Spirit was witnessed [at] the Sabbath evening meeting, Richmond, Ind. The day had been stormy, yet about a thousand persons crowded into the house, and about one thousand held meetings in the open air under umbrellas. "Before seven o'clock in the evening, some twenty-five hundred persons were assembled in the house at the young people's meeting; the gallery usually occupied by the ministers and elders, was almost entirely filled by the junior members, whose manner evinced the earnestness of their spirits. The meeting opened after a short season of 'silent waiting before God, by successive vocal supplications for special and large blessings, which were certainly answered that remarkable evening. It was said that more than one hundred and thirty persons either bowed the knee in prayer, or confessed themselves on the Lord's side, by far the larger portion of whom had never spoken before in public; many rejoiced that they had been made willing thus to acknowledge the Savior." The meeting continued with interest until midnight. The work went forward with interest from that time, and many were led to rejoice in Christ.

The prophecy of God respecting the outpouring of the Spirit, was not completed at the day of Pentecost. "All flesh" did not then receive the baptism. Thousands have been its recipients during the past ten years. The "latter rain" is preparing a glorious harvest for the angels to reap.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the R. I. Conference:

OFFERED BY BRO. J. P. BABCOCK.

The following amendments to the Constitution lay upon the table of the R. I. Conference to be acted upon at its next quarterly session the last Friday in March, at River Point, R. I.

"ART. 3d.—Churches are entitled to, and should send, Delegates as follows: one delegate if less than fifteen members. If fifteen members, two delegates. Thirty members, three delegates. Sixty members, four delegates. One hundred and twenty members, five delegates. Two hundred and forty members, six delegates. Churches failing to send delegates to this Conference should not fail to send letters.

"ART. 4th.—Officers of this Conference shall be a Moderator, Clerk, Treasurer and a Fund Committee of three, of which the Treasurer shall be one. All the officers shall be chosen yearly.

"ART. 7th.—The last evening of every quarterly Conference there shall be a collection taken up for the benefit of the Home Missionary Society.

"ART. ——. The business of the committee shall be, 1st, to dispose of the funds in tracts to such persons and in such quantities—to be distributed in such fields with or without money—as they together may think proper. 2d. The committee shall not pay for the transportation of tracts. 3d. Three dollars of the funds shall not be subject to draft of the committee but by the Conference. 4th. The treasurer shall keep a strict account of all business and report quarterly to the Conference.

"ART. ——. All persons receiving money for our tracts after paying for the transportation of those tracts shall send the remainder of the money to the treasurer. All persons receiving tracts from this Conference shall report of this distribution quarterly, in person or by letter.

ART. 10th.—(Amendment.) All proposed alterations or changes of this Constitution shall be offered at one of our quarterly Conferences to be acted upon and tabled until the next quarterly Conference, then to be received or rejected. No Article of this Constitution shall be altered or changed by less than a vote of two thirds of the members present at a regular meeting of this Conference."

The above amendments are not intended to impose stringent rules upon the churches to bring them under its jurisdiction. It is a matter of mutual interest between the Conference and all the churches belonging to it, because something of interest to all will be transacted at every Conference. Consolidation is success.

The Home Missionary Society has also been in a rather inactive condition. Shall it not be put in active operation, believing our time is short? Will not the churches belonging to this Conference, when they elect their delegates to the next Conference, instruct them how to vote on the above amendments, pro or con, or give their decision in letter as the case may be?

Queries.

Bro. J. M. Muhlig asks two questions on 2 Cor. 12: 2—5:

1. "Of the man Paul says he knew in Christ—does he mean himself or somebody else?"

Answer: I suppose he means himself personally, but not himself naturally.

2. "If he means himself in vers. 2 and 3, what meaning is there in verse 5, where he says, 'of such a one will I glory, yet of myself I will not glory'?"

Paul said, "By grace I am what I am." That is, by grace he was more than he was by nature. By nature he had nothing of which he would glory. But by grace he would glory to the honor of Him who had made him what he was, a servant of Jesus. He would glory of the man in what he was above nature, and who was accounted worthy to be taken up into paradise. But of himself a man without the grace of God, he would not glory. This is my view of the passage.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 13, 1861.

☞ We would request those interested, to rest their pens awhile on the subject of "Pre-existence." And we would suggest the same in reference to the "Sabbath" question. We think some other themes would be more profitable for the present.

Keeseville, N. Y.

At the close of our meetings at Glens Falls and vicinity, we started for Keeseville, stopping over night at Castleton, where we enjoyed one of their interesting prayer meetings. Here we met Bro. A. Ross, who is at present feeding the "flock of God" in that place. He is "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." May the Lord give him great success in winning sinners to Christ. We found the church in a very prosperous condition, and reluctantly said farewell to our dear friends in Christ, to hasten on our way to another new field of labor, prepared to pass again through the gauntlet of public opinion, to receive a wound from the tongue of the slanderer, a joke from the witty, a jeer from the scoffer, scorn from the proud, contempt from the fashionable, and misrepresentation from prejudiced sectarians. But we can bear it all patiently for Jesus' sake, who endured much heavier crosses for us without a murmur. It is blessed to suffer for the sake of Christ.

On our way to Keeseville, we stopped a short time at Rutland, and called upon Bro. Batchelor and others. The church here is prospering under his faithful labors. He is one of those watchmen who ever keep upon the watch-tower, looking out for the first tokens of our approaching King; ready to respond to the inquiry, "Watchmen, what of the night?"

At three o'clock, P. M., we left R. for K. expecting to arrive in the evening; but when at Burlington, we learned that lake Champlain was not frozen so that we could cross; hence we were obliged to go around by Rouse's Point, stopping all night at St. Albans, thus traveling about one hundred miles to get nine. We finally arrived at Keeseville, on Saturday evening, Jan. 19th, and met a hearty welcome in Bro Weston's kind family. Knowing the uncertainty of our arrival, he had not considered it safe to make an appointment, consequently none was published; but with a worthy zeal, Bro. Weston, in company with Bro. Lansing, who is a printer, went at once to work and printed some handbills, which at two hours past midnight were posted up to be read by the next morning's light. It was thought not best to have a meeting Sabbath forenoon. This gave us an opportunity to attend the Baptist meeting.

In the afternoon, we occupied the Wesleyan meeting house,—our entire congregation numbered ten; but we felt free in presenting the word of truth; being satisfied that there would be more interest in a few days. We felt no disposition to despise the day of small things.

Keeseville is a pleasant village, sixteen miles south of Plattsburg, four miles west from lake Champlain, containing some two thousand inhabitants, doing a large business in iron work. The Ausable river runs through its midst, forming a valley for the shops, while the dwelling houses occupy a delightful position upon the surrounding elevated plain, beyond which is a range of snow-clad mountains, whose summits are often hid among the clouds. We think the place must be delightful in the summer.

At first, we found none to sympathize with us, but Bro. Weston and family, and Bro. Lansing, an interesting young man, who has been out a few times to preach the glorious truths of the gospel. Our meetings continued to increase in interest till many were unable to get seats. We were favored with a candid hearing from a large number of the first class of citizens, who were astonished at the amount of evidence in favor of our "blessed hope." The truth, accompanied by the Spirit of God, was welcomed by many honest hearts, and caused them to rejoice in the Lord. Several were converted, and five were buried with Christ in baptism. Others were almost persuaded to be christians, who, for years, had felt no interest in knowing the way of life, because they could not believe in a God that would torment men eternally. But when they were shown that the wicked are to be destroyed, instead of "preserved in indescribable agonies," as Mr. Benson says, they at once saw the goodness of God, and their hard hearts were softened. There is now a bright hope that many more will yield to obey Christ.

Sabbath evening, we enjoyed a delightful communion season at the house of Bro. Weston. There was the same number present as at the last supper, which Jesus eat with his disciples. A church of eight members was formed, who adopted "the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice, church order and discipline; making christian character the only test of fellowship and communion." They have established a prayer meeting, and by the help of the Lord, seem to be determined to endure to the end. They have entered heartily into the work of the Lord, and their peace is like a river. They appear to have counted the cost, and are willing to suffer reproach for Christ's sake. They are satisfied that christianity requires something more than what most of its professors are now doing. May the Lord help them to "stand up for Jesus" everywhere, till he comes to be admired by all those that love him.

Our visit to Keeseville will be remembered with pleasure, especially when we think of the delightful seasons enjoyed in Bro. Weston's kind family, their labor of love, and the rich blessings they received from the Lord. In tears we parted, hoping soon to meet again where partings are o'er, and all tears are forever unknown.

The Sabbath.

BRO. GRANT:—Is the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath enjoined upon christians by the teachings of the New Testament? If not, why should they keep the seventh day, as mentioned in the Old Testament?—T. M. PREBLE.

In answering the foregoing inquiries in the last "Crisis," we endeavored to show from the Scriptures that the ten commandments given on Mt. Sinai constituted the "first covenant," which was "written and engraven in stones," but is now "done away" and "abolished," as Paul affirms, because it was not "faultless." In speaking of the work of Christ, Paul says, "He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second."—Heb. 10: 9. We cannot be living under two covenants at the same time. Only the old is abolished, but the new is better, as saith the Scripture:—"But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the Mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second."—Heb. 8: 6–7. As we are now under the second, of course nothing that was in the old is binding upon christians, unless it is incorporated into the new. If a state or nation adopts a new constitution, there is nothing in the old one that is binding, excepting what is associated with the new. When the new one is ratified and adopted, the old has no more authority. It no longer condemns or acquits. If we are "Moses' disciples," then we are under the law; but as christians are Christ's disciples, they are free from the law of Moses; and as the fourth commandment is not in the new covenant, it appears certain that it is not binding upon the followers of Christ; if it is, then the new covenant must be faulty, in that it does not require us to keep the seventh-day Sabbath. But neither Christ nor the apostles have uttered a recorded word requiring christians to observe it, or rebuked any one for breaking it. In the days of the apostles a conference was held at Jerusalem to decide whether the Gentiles, who had become the disciples of Christ, should "keep the law" of Moses. By a vote of that conference letters were sent to the Gentile churches, in which it was said, "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well."—Acts 15: 28–29.

In Paul's letter to the Romans, he shows most conclusively that the law of Moses is "dead," and that we are now under the law of Christ. He says:—"Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath a husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then, if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet."—Rom. 7: 1–7. What law does he mean, when he says, "Wherefore, my brethren, ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another?" He gives the answer in the 7th verse, when he says, "I had not known lust, except the law had said, 'Thou shalt not covet.'" The law which says, "thou shalt not covet," is not a part of the ceremonial, but of the moral. In the sixth verse he says, "Now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." We have now learned that those who are "married" to Christ, have "become dead to the law," and that the law is dead also; then it certainly follows that we are free from its claims.

As the law is "dead," are we now free to sin? Or, as Paul inquires, "Shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid." But how shall a man be condemned for covetousness, if the law is dead which says, "Thou shalt not covet"? He could not be, unless this part of the old covenant is incorporated into the new. But in the new we read, "Thou shalt not covet," hence the fault of the old was not in relation to this point. Let us now compare the two covenants in order to find what part of the old is omitted in the new.

The Old Covenant. 1st Commandment. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

New Covenant. "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment."

O. C. 2d Com. "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments."

N. C. 2d Com. "Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry."

O. C. 3d Com. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

N. C. 3d Com. "But I say unto you, swear not at all."

O. C. 4th Com. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

N. C. 4th Com. WANTING.

O. C. 5th Com. "Honor thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

N. C. 5th Com. "Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long upon the earth."

O. C. 6th Com. "Thou shalt not kill."

N. C. 6th Com. "Thou shalt not kill."

O. C. 7th Com. "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

N. C. 7th Com. "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

O. C. 8th Com. "Thou shalt not steal."

N. C. 8th Com. "Thou shalt not steal."

O. C. 9th Com. "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

N. C. 9th Com. "Thou shalt not bear false witness."

O. C. 10th Com. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbor's."

N. C. 10th Com. "Thou shalt not covet."

If the keeping of the fourth commandment is the test of fellowship and salvation, as some believe, why is it not found in the New Covenant? If it be said, where is the proof that the seventh-day Sabbath is not binding now? We answer, in the fact that it is not found in the New Covenant; and besides, it was never enjoined upon the Gentiles, unless they happened to be living in Jewish families. The learned Selden, in his extensive historical researches, found no evidence that the Gentiles ever kept the seventh-day Sabbath. Wood, in his Bible dictionary says:—"The modern Jews still cleave to the seventh-day Sabbath, and boast of it as their spouse, GIVEN TO THEM BEFORE ANY OTHER NATION."

The Bible contains no law to man requiring him to keep the Sabbath, till the time of Moses; neither does it mention an example of any one who kept it till after the children of Israel left Egypt. The Sabbath was expressly for Israel, as may be seen from the following: "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."—Deut. 5: 15. Here we have the reason specified why they were required to observe the Sabbath. This reason could never be applied to any people but Israel, because no other nation were thus delivered from Egypt. "Moreover also I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them."—Ezek. 20: 12. The Sabbath was a sign between the Lord and the children of Israel to commemorate their great deliverance. "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever."—Ex. 31: 17. For their Sabbath, or day of rest, the Lord appointed the day on which he rested at the close of the creation week. As the Gentiles were never thus delivered from bondage by the mighty hand of the Lord, no reason exists for them to keep the Sabbath to commemorate such an event; hence it is never enjoined upon them. But they look to a great Deliverer, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who is to ransom us from a worse than Egyptian bondage; i. e., from the prison-house of death. But if he is not raised, "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 18. Christians observe the first day of the week, in commemoration of the deliverance of the Savior from the power of death. Should the Jews keep the first day, they would thereby acknowledge the resurrection of Christ, which they now deny.

Says Eusebius, the oldest church historian, "They [the christians] did not therefore regard circumcision, nor observe the Sabbath, neither do we; such things as these do not belong to christians."—Euseb. pp. 26–27. Barnabus, who was a fellow-laborer with Paul, says:—"For which cause we observe the eighth day with gladness, in which Jesus rose from the dead."—Barnabus 13: 10. Mosheim, a standard church historian, says:—"The christians of this [first] century assembled for the worship of God on the first day of the week, the day on which Christ reassumed his life."—Mos. Vol. 1, p. 85. Says Ignatius, one of the Apostolical Fathers; "No longer observing Sabbaths, but keeping the Lord's day."

The foregoing are some of the reasons why it appears certain that the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath is not enjoined upon christians.

A Salutary Alarm.

Said Isaac Taylor, (in "Wesley and Methodism," pp. 289, 290,) when speaking on "the future of Methodism," "we assume" it "will feel the need of, and will acquire for itself, under pressure of the most urgent motives, an incontrovertible exposition of the Scripture doctrine of the future adminstration of justice . . . . Whatever is further ascertained on this ground will come to stand in its true relationship to much beside, which, in the course of the argument, will have started to view, as the genuine sense of the inspired books. The doctrine of future punishment, as a belief drawn from Scripture, and so drawn as to dissipate prevalent illusions, and to spread on all sides a salutary and effective alarm."—Debt and Grace, p. 158.

We are satisfied that the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked has the very effect specified by Mr. Taylor; which is to produce "a salutary and effective alarm." We find such to be the uniform effect of a belief in this doctrine. Let every believer stand firm in its defence, and present the truth in a kind manner to his neighbor, waiting patiently for the result.

Light Advancing.

In an editorial of the New York Independent, of Jan. 24th, 1861, we find an interesting article headed, "The better country." After speaking of the earth as it is, with its sorrows and tears, its perplexing cares and disappointments, recurring with an increased frequency, he goes on to say:—

"It would be well for us, as a growing habit,—and the wonder is, we are not all irresistibly tempted, if not for our relief,—to overleap all these limits, and think and speak often, not of this or that eligible region on the earth, but of 'a better country, that is, an heavenly.'

The word country, in this familiar Scripture, is borrowed, as being understood, from a foregoing use, where the Greek properly signifies fatherland, native country, or home. The writer says that the patriarchs whom he commemorates, in leaving their own land, and seeking that which God had promised, in faith, as 'strangers and pilgrims on the earth,' sought indeed a fatherland or home, but a better than that which they had known; and then, to show that this was not the land of Canaan, the literal subject of the Divine promise to Abraham, he adds, 'That is, an heavenly.' By so much, therefore, it was better, more desirable than any country on the earth.

The description is universally understood of the future condition of God's children. More particularly it is their final abode, after the resurrection, upon Christ's second coming, the 'place' which he told his disciples he went 'to prepare' for them, and which evidently they were to enjoy when he should 'come again' and 'receive them to himself;' for the sacred writer seems to have in view a condition to which not only the living apostles but the deceased patriarchs also still look forward, those ancient worthies, as he afterwards says, having 'received not the promise,' or all that was promised, 'God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.' And further, if we adopt the view always extensively held, which Dr. Chalmers among others has eloquently set forth, that this earth, purified and renovated at Christ's second coming, will then be made the abode of his people, we understand by the better country the 'new earth' of which other Scriptures tell us, and which, thus transformed in its condition and use, will become heavenly. Under any interpretation, the phrase denotes the future home, or what an ancient writer calls 'the blessed fatherland of the Just.'

And what theme is better fitted to cheer believing hearts amidst private anxieties and ills, or public agitations and calamities, even in 'perilous times'? Let us be at home in such thoughts."

For the Crisis.

Pre-Existence of Jesus.

Bro. Preble still thinks that I overlook the point. I am sorry to differ from Bro. P., not only on the being of our Savior, but in our understanding each other in this discussion. I do and have understood Bro. P., if he means what he says, and I suppose he does. If I have not directly replied to the point, it has been for the want of ability. I will try once more. Bro. P. says:

"Again, Bro. W. says:—'The age of a name, and the age of a person may be wide apart,' etc. This statement in a general sense may be true, but here I think my brother 'overlooks the point,' for he labors to show that the name Jesus, and the person bearing it, are "wide apart." But in this case they cannot be very wide apart, for 'the child' when circumcised was only 'eight days old,' when the name Jesus was given to it. So we see that the name, and the person bearing it are not wide apart, only eight days! My brother appears to have overlooked this point, he taking the position that it was the name that was eight days old, when in fact it was 'the child!' We see, therefore, that the name, when really given, was eight days younger than the child to whom it was given.

When my brother admits that the name Jesus, and Son of God, were two names 'applied to that child born of Mary about the time' I suppose, I think he admits just what I take to be true, viz: that Jesus, the Son of God did not pre-exist before the world was, only in the Father's 'purpose.' (See 2 Tim. 1: 9; Eph. 1: 4, and 3: 11; Tit. 1: 2, and 1 Pet. 1: 20.) Mark the term used at the head of my inquiries: Pre-existence of JESUS."

I see that there may be some chance to play on the expression eight days. I will ask the reader to look at Luke 1: 31; 2: 11th and 21st verses. By the 21st verse we see that the name Jesus is at least nine months and eight days older than Bro. P. thinks.

In a former article our Bro. asked the question, "Is Jesus the Son of God more than eighteen hundred and sixty-five years old? In my reply I supposed that the name was about as old as Bro. P. supposes. I intended that the word about should include the difference of opinion about a few days or months, and so obviate any occasion for being taken up on this point.

Bro. P. thinks I have overlooked this point, viz: That it was the name that was eight days old, when it fact it was the child. Let me say again, I did not overlook this point. Now I say, that that child born of Mary, the seed of the woman, who was named Jesus several months before he was born, is about as old as our Bro. thinks; that this child was eight days old when he was circumcised. I think this is plainly stated; at least, I know not how to express it more plainly.

By saying what I have on this point our Bro. thinks I have admitted all he claims, viz: "that Jesus the Son of God did not exist before the world was, only in the Father's purpose." Now if he means by the name Jesus, only that child born of Mary—the seed of David, then, of course, I admit that he did not exist in this sense before he took on him the seed of Abraham. This I have admitted all through. On this I did not suppose we differed. He says, "Mark the term used at the head of my inquiries: Pre-existence of Jesus." If Bro. P. means by this term only what I have here stated, and does not mean by the term to include all the being embodied in the person of Jesus, then the argument is at an end, for we are agreed. He says:

"I know Bro. W. says, 'Before the world was, he was not called by 'these names, but other names, such as God, the Word of God.' But will our brother tell us where we can find the proof of this statement? I do not mean where such terms may be found which apply to our Savior, but where shall we find the proof that 'Jesus,'—'that child,'—that 'holy thing,'—was called by these names 'before the world was'? True, we read that, 'In the beginning was the Word,' etc.' but the original, here rendered Word, is not Theos, but Logos. Will Bro. White please tell us the difference between the two words? T. M. PREBLE"

I have supposed that Bro. P. thinks that Jesus as a being had no existence before he came in the flesh. If I am wrong, then I have overlooked the point; but if I am right, then I have not overlooked it. This is the point in the argument, I think. It may be thus stated: Did Jesus who was so called, have a being as an intelligent person before he was manifested in the flesh? If this is not the question in substance, then we have no question before us that requires any words.

Bro. P. says, the "Word in John 1: 1, is not Theos, but Logos." He asks "Will Bro. White please tell us the difference between the two words?" The passage in which these words occur reads, "In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with Theos and the Logos was Theos." Bro. P. wishes me to tell the difference between these two words. I suppose he means as they are used here. I would say that I think there is the same difference there is between Simon and Peter, where these words are applied to one of the apostles. The Logos was Theos, and Theos was Logos. As they are both applied to the same being they mean the same; hence I know of no difference between the two words. "The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." He (the Logos) was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." And the Word (he, the Logos,) was made flesh," etc. He, the Logos, became flesh about eighteen hundred and sixty years ago. But this person, he, did exist before he became flesh. This is the point, Bro. Preble. See article in Crisis of the 7th inst. J. S. WHITE.

Maine Advent Mission.

I now wish to call the attention of those in Maine who are interested in this Mission, and inform them that we have now succeeded in obtaining the services of Eld. E. M. Haggett, of Livermore, who has entered upon the work of an evangelist. He is a faithful, devoted laborer, and will by God's blessing do good to those who are favored with his labors. Brethren and friends living isolated from the society of believers, who see prospect of good being accomplished in their places by preaching the word, will call on Bro. Haggett to come among them. Those who wish the word preached for the salvation of souls wherever doors may be opened for it, will make an effort to sustain the Mission, by devoting some of their substance to support the evangelist, and seek to awaken others to the same duty. Many have forgotten that it is a part of their duty to support those who preach the gospel. Let such be admonished and exhorted to duty. The committee of the "Maine Advent Mission" is composed of the following brethren: I. C. Wellcome, (Chairman and Treasurer,) Geo. Humphrey, Yarmouth, Ralph Herley, Sheepscott, I. Wight, Augusta, and E. M. Haggett, Livermore, all of whom will receive the free offerings of those who will contribute to the treasury for the support of an evangelist. A small amount has been paid in, and more pledged. We hope there will yet be a more general interest on this subject, which will call out the means for the support of not only one, but several evangelists, to be constantly occupying the vast field of labor in Maine. All our ministers will interest themselves in awakening brethren on this subject, and will receive whatever friends in their vicinities wish to give, and send it to some one of the committee.

Those wishing to send in their mites by mail, can send to I. C. Wellcome, the treasurer, or to either of the committee, who will give an account of the same. Come, brethren, let us do what we can in the cause of Christ while it is a day of mercy. Soon the Judge will come and reckon with us for the exercise of our stewardship. Come, you who "have buried your talent in" the interests of "earth," put it into the Lord's bank, and it will increase to your good. Come, you who used to pay much to aid the churches you have left, can you not do as much for Christ's soon coming? You who are doing all you can other ways, and you who have nothing to do with, can pray the Lord to bless our effort and bring good out of it. Yes, you can pray and God will bless. Christ told his disciples to "pray the Lord of the vineyard to send forth more laborers." And certainly it will be right to ask the Lord to show his stewards the duty of supporting them.—In behalf of the Mission,

I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Finding Fault.

We have a right to find fault with some things. First, with long sermons. They are tedious, if ever so good, to most of a congregation, after forty or fifty minutes. We may find fault with long exhortations, for they always kill the life of a meeting, be it ever so good. I will find fault with doting about questions of no profit, which engender strife. This is a meeting-killer also. Some have lost the Spirit of God, and instead accept some old bone that once had life in it, over which they growl, especially if you happen to hit it. This is carnal. I think if there was more fault found with these things, a partial reform might follow, and the life of many meetings be saved, and thus stop so many funeral services.

Brethren, do not be guilty of murdering a meeting. If you do not know when to speak, what to speak, and what time to speak, keep still. Some I have seen had a good testimony in its place. But if you get it out of its place, it proves a block forward of the wheel. I have been hurt many times when the meeting was prepared to call sinners forward for prayers, to have some one start off on a dry exhortation, or story, and lower down the meeting to zero. Such things ought to be found fault with. Quick time is needed in time of battle. Slow time in practising manual exercises. The "dead march" in time of execution. A time for all things is to have them at the right time. HIRAM MUNGER.

Correspondence.

From Geo. U. Lewis.

BRO. GRANT:—Up here amongst the hills of Vermont, surrounded by sectarianism, bigotry and superstition, is a little company of eight believers "of like precious faith" who are striving to "let their light shine," and whose daily cry is,

"Jesus, thou rightful heir, O come and reign."

Bro. S. Lamson, of W. Roxbury, preached to us once in four weeks, the spring and summer past. We esteem him as a faithful laborer in the Master's cause. Bro. L., assisted by Bro. Daniel Braley, of E. Roxbury, commenced a meeting with us Saturday, Dec. 29th, and closed with a watch-meeting Monday night. A few of the brethren and sisters from the neighboring towns came in and staid through the meetings.

Though we cannot speak as some of your correspondents have of a large number of broken-hearted penitents, yet, blessed be God, we were not left without the witness that the good Spirit was with us. Monday night five tearful ones arose and asked the prayers of God's children. Nor have we to encounter opposition to the extent of some of our brethren in other places. Yet we are not without this. Our Master's promise holds good—"In the world ye shall have tribulation," but, "in me . . . . peace."

Bro. Braley preached a powerful discourse on Monday evening from Gen. 2 : 7. He showed from the "Word" that man naturally has no immortality, that he was made of the dust, and that he would return to dust, that the immortal soul theory was of its "father, the devil." Some took offence and said, "if this was all there was to man they might as well serve the devil as any way." My God, should not the love wherewith thou hast loved the children of men lead them to repentance? Are there not inducements enough held out in thy Word to lead them to a life of holiness? Or must sermons be spiced with the immortality of the soul and the God-dishonoring doctrine of endless torment to get men into the kingdom? Bro. Braley preached to us again last Sunday (the 13th). He knocked the props from under the (imaginary) sky kingdom, and placed it firmly on the new earth with a literal city for its capital, a literal throne, a literal King and literal subjects. Yours looking for the return of the King.

Bethel, Jan. 16th, 1861.

From Sr. M. L. C——.

BRO. GRANT:—As I see by the Crisis that the sick are restored to health by the prayer of faith, permit me through its choice columns, to send a request to the general believers in Christ, for their prayers in my behalf, that I may exercise faith in God's word, venture out on his promises, and be restored to health, as I am now a sufferer by disease. I have tried various remedies, but do not get any lasting benefit from them; and I ask your prayers in my behalf that I may be restored to health by the great Physician, that I might spend my time in his service. How many of God's children will unite in prayer for my recovery every night at seven o'clock for two weeks, remembering the command is to "pray one for another, that ye may be healed"? "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

Obituary Notices.

Died, of consumption, at Honeoye, Ont. Co., N. Y., Dec. 21st, 1860, Bro. CALVIN MILLER, formerly of Bristol, Ct., aged thirty-five years.

Bro. Miller was a pioneer in the cause of truth, but his work is done, and he awaits the sounding of the last trumpet to awake him to glory. A very large congregation assembled at his funeral, who listened attentively to a discourse by the writer from Job 19 : 25–27.

Also, at Honeoye, N. Y., Nov. 19th, 1860, Mrs. MARY BRIGGS, daughter of Ira and Lucy W. Allen, aged thirty-nine years. Funeral service by Eld. Justin, Baptist, assisted by the writer. Text, Hosea 13 : 14.

Also, at Honeoye, Dec. 15th, 1860, Mrs. BETSEY GARFIELD, sister of Mrs. Lucy Allen, aged seventy-one years. Sermon by the writer, from 2 Tim. 4 : 6–8.

Also, at Honeoye, Jan. 11th, 1861, Mrs. LUCY W. ALLEN, wife of Ira Allen, aged seventy-three years. Sermon by the writer, from Ps. 23 : 4. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises," etc. Heb. 11 : 13.

Thus death has been doing his work among us during the past two months, severing the fondest earthly ties, and laying our friends beneath the cold clods of the valley. The family of Bro. Allen is well known by all who are acquainted with the rise and progress of Advent truth and its kindred doctrines in Honeoye. Therefore they will find many sympathizers in their bereavement. Very many of the preaching brethren have had occasion to bless them for their kindness and hospitality, which has ever been manifested by them to all God's children. Their daughter Mary was taken sick suddenly in November, and after a short illness died, leaving a broken family circle of husband and seven children. During her illness her mother was taken with the same disease (inflammation of the lungs), which resulted in death. Sister Garfield, while nursing her, was seized with the same disease and died after a short illness. Her faith was strong in life, and we are persuaded that death shall not be able to separate her from the love of Christ. Sister Allen believed in Christ's soon coming and kingdom, possessed a firm faith in his power to save, and has gone down to the grave like a shock of corn fully ripe.

"Hope made for her a pillow,
And Faith a garment rare,
To wrap her in her slumbers
Till Christ her home prepare."

Her aged companion no longer enjoys the society of the gentle wife who has walked by his side thus far in life's toilsome journey. A son and two daughters are left to mourn the gentle guide of their youthful steps, and the sympathizing friend and companion of their maturer years. But hope bids them view the time not far distant when the voice of the Son of God shall pierce the tomb, the dead arise, and they with her shall shout, "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

They would ask an interest in the prayers of all the pilgrims, that they may be sustained by the grace of God in this deep affliction. They would be glad to hear by letter from those friends and acquaintances who earnestly sympathize with them in their bereavement. FRANK BURR.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Portland, Ind., Oct. 3d, 1860, Bro. TRUMAN FOX.

Our venerable brother was one of the pioneer Adventists of the West. Formerly of the M. E. Church, he became convinced not only of the doctrine of Christ's speedy advent to reign on the earth, but also of the truth that we are to seek for the precious gift of life and immortality through Christ if we ever obtain it. Upon reviewing these grand truths, he failed not to publish them to the utmost of his ability, not only in private, but frequently in public, when he often exhibited far more than ordinary talent, much to the discomfiture of our enemies.

No man can claim perfection in this life; but in christian zeal Father Fox was perhaps seldom surpassed; and to this he added great generosity and self-devotion. Many pilgrims who sought refreshing, never failed to find a hearty welcome under his roof. He was afflicted with paralysis, and saw many a long month of afflicting confinement, but which was borne with great christian fortitude—desiring to live, and yet willing to die if God so willed. I visited him in company with Bro. Harding during the summer, prayed with him, and endeavored to comfort him with the gospel, after which we enjoyed together the Lord's supper, and then parted to meet by and by and sit down and eat bread together in the kingdom of God, where sin and mortality are no more.

Feeling his end approaching, he bid all adieu, and without a struggle peacefully fell asleep in the all-consoling hope of blissful resurrection. An able discourse was delivered on the occasion of his death by Sr. M. Mansfield, from Job 19 : 56. He has left a deeply afflicted widow, numerous children and kin, with many warm friends, but who, thanks be to God! do not mourn without hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." P. B. M.

FRANCE.

There is great activity in the French arsenals and posts. A camp at Chalons will be formed early in the spring, consisting of 60,000 men, under command of Gen. McMahon.

ITALY.

Gaeta, Jan. 23d. The fire of the Sardinians is vigorously continued, while the enemy reply to it slowly.

The London Globe learns that Francis II. has resolved to hold out at Gaeta by advice of foreign ministers.

It is rumored that negotiations are progressing to replace the French troops in Rome by those of Sardinia.

The typhus fever is making great ravages at Gaeta.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

A Vienna correspondent of the Times says: "The prevalent opinion is that the ferment in Hungary will soon be so tremendous that it will be necessary to place the whole country in a state of siege. If the Emperor Francis Joseph understands his metier, he will give a liberal Constitution to the non-Hungarian provinces of the empire, as by so doing he will disarm his enemies, and prove to the world at large that he really does intend to change the system of government.

There is good reason for believing that preparations are being made for a general rising in Servia, Montenegro, the Herzegovina and Bosnia, and it is said that Prince Couza is aware of what is going on. Count Rechberg demanded the extradition of the Hungarian refugees who are in the Danubian Principalities, but Prince Couza, at the instigation of the Porte, flatly refused to surrender them."

The Paris correspondent of the Times writes:—"I have received a private letter from Toulon of the 21st inst, which says,—'I cannot tell you whether we shall have peace or war, but I can assure you that immense activity prevails in the French arsenals and military ports. At Toulon particularly shipbuilding is going on as rapidly as if the Government was going to send three or four fleets to sea, together with twenty steel plated frigates. Never under any Government has such activity been observed, and in order to provide officers for this increase in the war navy, one additional admiral, four vice-admirals, sixteen rear-admirals, thirty captains of line-of-battle ships (capitaines de vaisseaux), and twenty captains of frigates, are about to be appointed. All the troops of the new levy lately called out are being carefully drilled through the centre and south of France. The generals commanding divisions have received orders that the instruction of the troops must be completed by the 1st of March. This measure is applied to the entire army, infantry, cavalry, artillery and engineers. The latter have constructed a bridge on a new model, by which an entire division may cross a rapid river within an hour."

The Vienna correspondent of the Times writes: "In Venetia all the necessary preparations for defense have been made, and I repeat that the Sardinians will not have the shadow of a chance of success, should they attempt to obtain possession of the Quadrilateral by force of arms."

DOMESTIC.

THE REBELLION.—The Raleigh (N. C.) Standard predicts that if the difficulties between the North and South should not be settled within the next six months, war will be the result, three or four confederacies will be formed, and the consequences to slavery will be fatal. The Standard says:—

"If war once breaks out, it will rage in the interior, on our seacoasts, on the high seas, and on our frontiers. One section will let loose the Indians on another section. Twenty millions of Northern people will at once become our enemies. They will war upon us along a line of three thousand miles from the Atlantic to the Pacific. One section will call in foreign troops against another section. One confederacy will humble itself before the powers of Europe to get better commercial terms than the other confederacies. Meanwhile war will rage. Negro property will cease to be valuable, because the products of slave labor and of all other labor will be in a great degree cut off from the markets of the world. The negroes will know too, that the war is waged on their account. They will become restless and turbulent.

Heavy taxes will result from these wars. These taxes must be paid mainly out of slave labor. Strong governments will be established, and will bear heavily on the masses. The masses will at length rise up and destroy everything in their way. State bonds will be repudiated. Banks will break. Widows and orphans will be reduced to beggary. The sword will wave everywhere paramount to all law. The whole world outside the slaveholding States, with slight exceptions, is opposed to slavery; and the whole world, with slave labor thus rendered insecure and comparatively valueless, will take sides with the North against us. The end will be—Abolition!"

Washington, Feb. 8. The impression here among gentlemen well acquainted with the subject is, that no apprehension need be entertained of an immediate attack on Fort Sumter, as the question will be referred to the Southern Congress. In the meanwhile the South Carolina authorities will keep a stricter guard on the coast to intercept any attempt at reinforcement. All domestic supplies and mail facilities will be denied, and every possible means will be taken to weaken and starve out the garrison.

The committee of peace in Congress was engaged to-day with measures looking to adjustment.

Nearly all the commissioners to the Peace Convention have arrived, including Massachusetts and New York.

Large numbers of influential gentlemen from all parts of the country are constantly arriving, including many of the Virginia Legislature.

New York, Feb. 8. A special dispatch from Washington says that General Wool will demand guaranties that the Capitol will not be attacked before he will assent to any reconciliation.

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 9. The Southern Convention last night unanimously agreed upon a Constitution and provisional government. A strong and vigorous government will go into immediate operation with full powers and ample funds. No proposition for a compromise or reconstruction will be entertained. The Convention will remain in session to make the necessary laws.

It is confidently declared by many that war will be declared by South Carolina against the United States, and an assault made on Fort Sumter, on the 17th.

Savannah, Ga., Feb 9. Gov. Brown seized yesterday five vessels owned in New York, viz: brigs R. W. Kibbey and Golden Lead; barques D. Murray and Adjuster, and schooner Julia A. Holbrook.

The Richmond Dispatch says if any one doubts that the South is in earnest, a visit to the Tredegar works in that city will dispel the illusion. Two ten-inch Columbiads, destined for Alabama, are nearly completed, and two fierce looking mortars, for South Carolina, will shortly be ready for the troops of that Republic. Shell and cannon shot lay about promiscuously and in heaps, and a large number of men are engaged in the manufacture of these destructive messengers. The manufacture of cannons, gun carriages, etc., is also actively prosecuted.

AFFAIRS AT WASHINGTON.—Private accounts from the Federal Capitol to the latest dates, represent the state of things to be as critical as ever. An uncertain fear pervades the very air of the governmental city. Those familiar with the condition of affairs would not be surprised at any violence. A prominent Senator from the North has said, within a day or two, the nation was going to inevitable destruction. Another has remarked that the capitol, to be perfectly safe, ought to contain ten thousand men. We are assured the atmosphere of Washington induces nearly every patriot, visiting the city, to modify his opinions, so as to consent to all but dishonorable sacrifices to avert impending dangers.—Transcript.

☞ Rocking chairs are an American invention, and a correspondent of the Historical Magazine asks, when they were introduced into use? Twenty-five years ago, they were sent to Europe as presents, and in France were then regarded as great novelties.

Conference at Kennebunkport, Me.

Several ministering brethren, and others in the western part of this State, think it best to have regular quarterly conferences in this region, and have decided to adopt such a plan. In accordance with such an arrangement, the first conference will (by request of Bro. W. H. Mitchell of Kennebunkport) be held with the church in that place, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 28th, at half past six o'clock, and continuing over the following Sunday.

The object of these meetings is to awaken an increased interest in regard to the subject of the speedy coming of the Savior, and the preparation necessary to meet him in peace. The ministering brethren in this part of the State, and the brethren and sisters generally, are invited to attend. Let us meet and work together in love and harmony, for the salvation of ourselves and others. For the brethren and sisters favorable to such meeting,

R. R. YORK.

Yarmouth, Me., Feb. 7th, 1861.

Quarterly Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be held in the Bean school-house, Mt. Vernon, about three miles east of the village, to commence Thursday, 1 o'clock, P. M., Feb. 21st, and continue over Sunday. I am instructed to say that the Christian church and friends will sustain the conference. We shall expect to see all our ministers present who belong to this conference, and hope to see those from other parts who can come. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can come to work for the Lord, that his cause may be revived and sinners converted. Behold the Judge standeth at the door; soon our work will be over and the end come. Let us work while it is day. Brethren from abroad will come into the place and find directions where to put up. We have not the names of persons to give. Brethren will call on Deacon Simeon Leighton. I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Life of Hiram Munger.

SECOND EDITION, WITH A PORTRAIT.

This book is now ready. Those who wish a copy (and every one should have one) will please send in the orders soon, in order to obtain a supply. In addition to what has been published in the first book, there is a large appendix, which contains some deeply interesting items regarding the trials and persecutions to which the pioneers of the Advent faith were subjected; beside a number of valuable recipes for various maladies. Also, a life-like portrait will accompany this edition. Owing to the extra expense, the price will be 60 cents; postage 8 cts.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

[illegible] I send the enclosed stanzas, the outgushings of my heart's sympathy for those afflicted parents, who, in such quick succession, were bereft of their two eldest children. The affecting incident in the last hours of their son, John Wesley Parker, [illegible] touch a tender chord in every heart who reads it. In the obituary notice of him in your issue of Jan. 23d, is this touching paragraph: "The day he died he called for his violin, and with trembling fingers played a very touching melody, the sentiment of which was his farewell to his friends, and it was indeed, for in a few hours he was cold in death. His father asked him, a few moments before he died, how he felt. He whispered, 'All is well;' bade an affectionate good bye to all his weeping friends, and reclining upon the sofa with his head resting in his mother's arms, calmly and peacefully fell asleep."

Trembling he woke his dying dirge so sweet,
Tuning his lyre by a seraph's note,
Soft as the angel whispers by us float,
For heaven's adopted 't was a farewell meet.

Melody ne'er forgotten, soft and low,
As if 't were wafted from the heavenly sphere;
It was almost—his heart was there—scarce here;
'T was love's last effort to assuage grief's woe.

Echo reverberates with softest spell
Those notes unearthly, which will haunt the ear,
Bringing to mind the loved in death, still dear,
And sad expression of a last farewell.

Those hands, soon folded in the grasp of death,
Soft strike the chords of his own requiem;
His last, last work on earth all done, then he
Whispers, "All is well!" soon gently yields his breath.

Lovingly in arms beloved reclines to die,
After adieus were by him softly spoken—
That he "sleeps in Jesus" friends have token—
He surely needs no tears nor sorrow's sigh.

When in the Lord our dear ones fall asleep,
And memories sweet are round the path they've trod,
Cheerful in hope we give them up to God,
Nor will we ling r at the tomb to weep.

'T is "joy in grief" to know that dawn is near,
When joining "the new song" in union sweet,
We fall adoring at our Savior's feet,
And meet to shed no more the parting tear.

Leading events in the U. S.—Rail-road and Steamboat accidents—Fires—Earthquakes—Catastrophes—Storms—Explosions, etc., etc., in chronological order.

PREPARED BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Jan. 1st. Sunday.—The new-year came in cold: thermometer in New York down to within six degrees of zero. In the Eastern states and New York state the mercury went down below zero. At the White mountains, N. H., it sank to thirty-eight degrees below. Very cold weather in the South. A law expelling all free negroes from Arkansas went into effect in that state. 6th.—The steamer Northerner, Capt. Dall, bound from San Francisco to Portland in Oregon, was wrecked on the rocks near Cape Mendocino, and became a total loss. Thirty-eight of the passengers and crew were drowned. 10th.—An awful catastrophe occurred at Lawrence, Mass. The Pemberton cotton mills fell with a sudden crash, while some seven hundred operatives were at work in the building. About five hundred were buried in the ruins. After a large number had been taken out, and while the work of rescuing those who were still living was going on, the ruins caught fire, and those who were not crushed to death actually roasted alive. Eighty-eight dead bodies were dug out of the ruins and nearly three hundred others were more or less injured. Subscriptions for relief were started all over the country, the contributions amounting to $66,000. 17th.—A solemn day of fasting and prayer observed in Lawrence—all business was suspended. The awful catastrophe has no parallel on the continent and seemed to appall the whole nation. 19th.—Shocks of an earthquake felt at Charleston, S. C.; Augusta and Macon, Ga.; and at other places in the South. 30th.—Eighteen citizens expelled from Kentucky for holding anti-slavery opinions.

Feb. 1st.—The U. S. House of Representatives on the forty-fourth ballot elected William Pennington, Speaker. A long struggle, but a final Republican triumph. 3d.—A steam boiler exploded in the hat factory of Ames and Moulton in Brooklyn, demolishing a greater portion of the building, killing six persons instantly, and wounding fifteen others. 10th.—A tremendous gale occurred in New York, New Jersey, Penn., and the Eastern states, doing immense damage: $200,000 worth of property was destroyed along the Hudson river. 22d.—A great strike of the journeymen shoemakers occurred in Lynn, which soon spread all over New England, 20,000 persons being engaged in it. A great hurricane passed over New Orleans, extending all through the Mississippi and Ohio valleys, and destroying a vast amount of property.

March 1st.—While workmen were engaged in pulling down the old St. Xavier Catholic church in Cincinnati, a portion of the walls fell and instantly killed thirteen men. [illegible] The steamboat Alfred Thomas [illegible] her boiler near Easton, Pa., tearing the boat in pieces, killing thirteen persons and wounding fifteen others. 14th.—The shock of an earthquake was felt in [illegible] parts of Mass. 15th.—An earthquake [illegible] April 17th.—The Legislature of the State of New York adjourned after a session of one hundred and six days. Five hundred and twenty-one acts were passed. It was conceded by all parties that it had been the most corrupt legislative body that ever convened in this or any other country. 24th.—The shock of an earthquake felt at Spartanburgh, S. C. 28th.—Great excitement all over the country on hearing of the brutal fight between John C. Heenan and Thomas Sayers, which took place in England, April 17th.

May 5th.—A large boat on a mill pond near Camden, N. C., containing a pleasure party on a picnic, sunk, and twenty-five of the number on board, parents and children, were drowned. 14th.—The Japanese Embassy arrived at Washington, and were received with all the honors which their distinguished mission demanded. 21st.—The most disastrous hurricane ever experienced in this country, visited portions of the Western States. It swept along the Ohio river, from Marietta, Ohio, to Louisville, Ky. Not less than one hundred lives were lost, and a great many persons were injured in the ruins of buildings. Houses were blown down, trees uprooted, steamboats wrecked, coal barges sunk, railroad trains capsized, and in some cases whole forests were destroyed. It is impossible to estimate in dollars the amount of damage which the tornado occasioned, but it could not have been less than two or three millions. In Cincinnati alone half a million of dollars worth of property was destroyed. 22c.—The ceremony of signing treaties and exchanging ratifications between the United States government officers and the Japanese ambassadors took place in the city of Washington. 25th.—A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in the city of San Francisco. 30th.—A disease among the cattle in the New England States, called pleuro-pneumonia, having become so fatal, the people of Massachusetts became alarmed, and an extra session of the Legislature of that State was called and convened this day in Boston, to ascertain what measures could be taken to prevent the further spread of the disease.

June. Sunday, 3d.—A terrible tornado passed over part of Iowa and the north-west section of Illinois. It proved very destructive to both life and property in the towns of Clinton and Camanche, in Iowa, and Fulton, Morrison, Lynden and Albany, in Illinois. At the latter place eight persons were killed, and about fifty wounded. At Camanche twenty-four were killed, and a great number injured. The whole number of persons killed along the track of the tornado, is estimated at one hundred and fifty. Sunday, 17th.—A severe storm of wind, hail and rain occurred at Albany, which did considerable damage to property. A building was blown down, by which three or four persons were seriously injured. 21st.—The United States surveying steamer Walker, on her way to New York from her Southern station, which includes the coast of Alabama, Mississippi, and part of Louisiana, was run into by a schooner and sunk. The accident took place off Absecom, and in view of the light. Eighteen or twenty of the crew were lost.

July 6th.—A large four story building in St. Joseph, Mo., fell and buried beneath the ruins nine men, all of whom were killed. The ruins caught fire and were consumed. The loss was estimated at $150,000. 8th.—A number of disastrous fires occurred in various towns in Texas, which were supposed to have been the work of abolition incendiaries. Nearly a million dollars worth of property was destroyed. 20th.—At fifteen minutes to ten o'clock P. M., a brilliant meteor passed over N. York, which was seen in nearly all parts of the State, as well as in Philadelphia and other parts of Pennsylvania, and in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. The atmosphere at the time was very sultry, with no perceptible motion in the air. The meteor is thus described:—"A light cloud appeared in the west, from which a blue-tinted luminous globe shot out, which at the first glance suggested the idea of an artificial firework. Instantly it lost its globular form, bursting, like an immense sky-rocket, into four portions. The first two are represented as resembling brilliantly illuminated chandeliers, with innumerable jets of purple flame; the others were globular and comparatively small, appearing rather as the tail of the first. They maintained their relative distances as they flew athwart the sky from west to east, occupying in their flight something like a minute." The furthest points at which it was seen were Baltimore, Detroit, Mich., Portland, Me., and at a distance of about four hundred miles from New York at sea. 23d.—The British war steamers Hero and Ariadne arrived at St. John, N. B., with the Prince of Wales, eldest son of Queen Victoria, and heir to the throne of England.

August 2d.—A splendid meteor, similar in appearance to the one of the evening of the 20th July, was seen over a large region of the South and Southwest, at the same hour of the night that the previous one was seen. This last one was seen in Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, Ohio and Pennsylvania. [illegible] An earthquake in Kentucky; it was very severe in Henderson and Louisville. [illegible] A violent storm in the vicinity of New Orleans [illegible] the terminus of the [illegible] Gulf Railroad, the water rose over twelve feet, submerging the entire place and carrying away every house, with the exception of one. Between thirty and forty lives were lost.

Sept. 2d.—The steamship Lady Elgin, a Lake Michigan passenger boat, was run into by a schooner, near Chicago, while on her trip from that port to Milwaukie, and sunk in twenty minutes. She had on board nearly five hundred passengers, a large portion of whom were excursionists from Milwaukie, including a military company and two fire companies, with bands. One hundred and twenty were saved and three hundred and fifty lost. About two hundred bodies were recovered. 5th.—The lodging rooms of the Catholic Orphan Asylum at Toledo, Ohio, were destroyed by fire, and six persons perished in the flames. 15th.—A most disastrous storm swept over and along the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. At Mobile the tornado was terrific, and damaged property in the city to the amount of nearly a million of dollars. A number of vessels on the Gulf were lost and many others damaged. At the Balize and in Bolixi, La., the gale was terrific. The latter place was nearly destroyed and a number of lives were lost. 20th.—The Prince of Wales, after having a most brilliant reception and escort in and through the principal cities and towns of Canada, entered the United States at Detroit, Michigan, as Lord Renfrew. He was received with all the honors due his distinguished position. 21st.—By the falling of the wall of a burning building in New Orleans, fifteen men were killed and twenty wounded. 28th.—News received that Gen. William Walker, the leader of the Central American fillibusters, was shot at Truxillo on the 12th.

Oct. 2d.—Another disastrous hurricane swept over New Orleans and other parts of Louisiana. A number of lives were lost, buildings were blown down and unroofed, and vessels destroyed and damaged. 17th.—A severe shook of an earthquake, lasting nearly thirty seconds, was felt in nearly all of the New England States and in portions of Canada. 20th.—The Prince of Wales left the shores of the American continent, at Portland, Me. His reception, both in Canada and the United States, was most brilliant and satisfactory, and he left for England highly delighted with his trip. It was estimated that the demonstrations in the United States and Canada in honor of the Prince cost $3,600,000. $750,000 were spent in New York, $1,000,000 in Canada, $400,000 in Boston, and $100,000 in Philadelphia and Cincinnati each.

Nov.—A great national crisis approaching,—excitement in Kansas, murders and depredations. 22d.—Great and extensive suspension of banks both North and South in view of secession now threatened by South Carolina. 24th.—An earthquake at Helena, Ark. 25th. Sunday.—A great storm on lake Erie and Ontario, causing the loss of nearly a hundred vessels and over one hundred lives. 29th.—Twenty-four states observe Thanksgiving on this day.

Dec.—The month came in with great excitement on the threatened aspect of the nation. Congress much agitated with the idea of a breaking up of the union of the States. 14th.—The President in view of the dangerous condition of the country appoints Jan. 4th as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer. 16th. Sunday.—An earthquake felt at Portland and all through Maine. 20th.—South Carolina passed an ordinance of secession dissolving all connection of that state with the federal government. 21st.—The secession of S. C. causes great rejoicing in all the South. 22d.—A great robbery of nine hundred thousand dollars in Indian Trust Funds at Washington. 24th.—South Carolina adopts her declaration of independence. 25th. Christmas.—The whole country depressed and alarmed. 31st.—Since the declaration of peace in 1783, which left this country free and independent, no year has closed upon the Union leaving the spirits of the people in such a depressed and crushed condition. South Carolina seceded from the confederacy, a prospect of five or six other States going out of the Union, confidence impaired, credit perished, trade at a stand still, workmen out of employ, and no hope of any change for the better, all combined to cast a gloom over the whole country. Two steamships were lost during the past year, the first of which was the Hungarian, belonging to the Liverpool and Quebec and Portland Company, which sailed from Liverpool on the 9th of February, and was dashed to pieces on the rocks at Cape Sable on the night of the 19th of the same month, and every soul on board, about 150 in number, found a watery grave. The other vessel lost was the new steamship Connaught, of the Galway, St. Johns, N. F., and Boston line, which sailed from Galway on her second voyage September 25th, and was destroyed by fire on the 7th of October when within 140 miles of Boston, but fortunately all her passengers and crew, numbering about 600 souls, were most miraculously saved by the brig Minnie Schiffer, a vessel of only 192 tons burthen, under the command of Captain Wilson. One great event of the year was the arrival at New York of the mammoth steamship Great Eastern, which sailed from Southampton June 17, at 10 A. M., and arrived at the Lightship at 8 A. M. on the 28th, and came up to the city at 5 P. M. same day. She sailed again on her return, on the 16th of August, at 4:30 P. M., arrived at Halifax at 4 P. M. on the 18th, and sailed from that port at 9 A. M. on the 19th, and reached Milford Haven August 26, at 6:30 P. M. The actual running time over was 8 days, 20 hours and 54 minutes, deducting the difference in time and detention by running into Halifax.

It is computed that over six hundred thousand persons have died in the United States during the year 1860: of these twenty were revolutionary soldiers. These deaths have been accompanied by sixteen millions, eight hundred thousand cases of sickness, or one million two hundred thousand years of sickness in all. Such is the estimate of Dr. Robinson.

The number of failures in business in 1860 amount to 3676, with liabilities amounting to not less than $79,807,845. This includes the failures in the British Provinces. Of all these failures, no less than 2014 were caused by speculating outside of legitimate business, 869 by lack of mercantile knowledge, fires, bad debts and the like, 754 by swindlers, 300 by dissipation, extravagance, gambling, looseness, and only 164 likely to pay. These figures strikingly exhibit the corruption in business and the faithlessness of the times; "not one," says the Independent, "but what has been a dishonest failure in some form." A startling record indeed!

There arrived at New York from foreign ports during the year 1860, steamers, war steamers, corvettes, ships, barks, barkentines, brigs, galliots, schooners, yachts, canal boats, to the number of 4451. Twenty-six nations were represented by these numerous vessels and they brought to this country 266,627 foreign passengers, while 10,710 more passengers arrived during the year from California. Probably as many persons as would people the city of Boston have come to our shores in 1860.

In 1859, there were seventy-nine railroad accidents in the country at which 411 persons were wounded and 129 persons killed. In 1860, there were seventy-four railroad accidents, when 315 persons were wounded and 57 killed. These enumerations do not include individual accidents caused by the travelers themselves, or deaths or injuries caused by the conduct of persons in crossing or standing on the track when cars were in motion. Railroad accidents have constantly diminished since seven years ago, and the killed and wounded are much less in number. In 1853 there were 234 killed. The total number of killed since Jan. 1st, 1853, amounts to 1166; the wounded to 3926. This is an awful slaughter of human life, but it must be remembered that millions have traveled on the roads, and that accidents are growing less.

Of steamboat accidents, there occurred in 1859 twenty-nine accidents, killing 597 persons, and wounding 134 others. In 1860 there were twenty-one accidents, killing 242 persons and wounding 146 others. There is no diminution of steamboat accidents in eight years past. Since Jan. 1st, 1853, there has occurred 242 steamboat accidents, which resulted in killing 3001 persons, and wounding 1090 others. All these took place on our inland waters and rivers.

Lake navigation opened on the 5th of March, 1860, and closed on the 14th of Dec. The aggregate of loss of life is fearfully large. It is larger than that of any previous three seasons. Five hundred and sixty persons met their death between the 23d of March and the 25th of Nov., a period of eight months, by water, steam and cold, and the casualities incident to working sail vessels. In this calculation the loss of the Lady Elgin is put at 400 souls. Seventy-eight lives, chiefly if not entirely those of seafaring men, were sacrificed to the demon of the waters and to the frost and snow in the terrific gale that swept the lakes on the 23d and 24th days of Nov. Twenty seamen, on nearly as many different vessels, while in the performance of their duty, were swept overboard during the season and drowned. Thirty-five persons met their deaths by being scalded, by violent concussions, or by being drowned, in consequence of explosion of boilers. Six entire crews were lost, not one being left to tell the tale.

In 1859 there occurred fifty-one fires with a loss of 122 lives. In 1860 there occurred seventy-five fires, when 186 lives were sacrificed to the burning flames. This does not include the victims at Lawrence. In seven years, since Jan. 1, 1854, there has been in the United States 490 fires, at which 1081 human beings perished. By far the greater number of fires have occurred in the month of March of each year than in any other month of the season.

The loss of property by fires is enormous. In 1860, two hundred and fifty-one fires occurred, destroying property to the value of $15,597,000. Add to the above the amount of property destroyed by fires, where the loss was less than twenty thousand dollars, and the aggregate would be increased to $22,000,000. It is estimated that in the past seven years, since Jan. 1st, 1854, the losses by fires in the U.S. where the damage has been put down at twenty thousand dollars and upwards, amounts to $173,794,000, while the total loss by all fires runs up to the enormous sum of $149,000,000.

Such is the awful record for our own country. The year 1861 opens with distress and perplexity on all faces—a great famine in Kansas—the fatal diphtheria destroying thousands of children in various parts of the country—corruption and treason widespread in the government—the slave states in a political frenzy—the idolized union of the confederate states crumbling in pieces—hate and strife rankling everywhere—wickedness insolent and rampant—an increasing thirst for blood—and the red flames of war kindling all along our Southern border.

If we turn to the old world, the following graphic picture, drawn by the pen of a Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald, gives at a stroke the aspect of things in Europe. Under date of Jan. 1st he says:—

"A great catastrophe is preparing: the ancient order of things is tottering to its fall, and Europe is about to pass through a baptism of fire to a new political and social system. Such is the general impression that prevails from the Mediterranean to the Gulf of Finland, and from the Golden Horn to the shores of the Atlantic. And assuredly we have had signs and wonders enough to herald the approaching crisis. On every side of us we behold powerful empires crumbling to pieces, and defunct nationalities rising into renewed existence. Austria, so strong and confident on the 1st of Jan., 1859, so unbending in her arrogance, and so stubborn in her adherence to the traditions of the past, is stricken with sudden paralysis; bankrupt in her finances, her finest provinces torn from her or in almost open rebellion against her authority, she endeavors in vain to allay the storm by concessions which she obstinately refused in the hour of her might, and which now only serve to hasten her dissolution. Turkey is in the last stage of political atrophy, and even before life is quite extinct the crows are gathering around her to feast upon the corpse.' The colossal empire of the Czar is heaving in the throes of a social revolution; and England, so long accustomed to play the leading part in Europe, is reduced to the defensive, and is anxiously fortifying her own coasts, which, for eight centuries, have been deemed unassailable. On the other hand, the Italian nation is slowly struggling into existence, and collecting its energies for a conflict with its hereditary enemy, who still holds the gem of Italy in his relentless grasp. Downtrodden Poland is shaking her chains, the clank of which strikes terror to the hearts of her oppressors; the forgotten nations of the East are arousing themselves from their lethargy, and even Ireland is dreaming of the days of Brian Boroihme, and indulging in visions of liberation from the yoke of the Saxons. And above all towers the impassable form of one man, who, Jupiter-like, shakes the world with his nod, and on whom the eyes of princes and peoples are fixed in breathless expectation. In fact, the history of Europe is now centered in the personal history of Louis Napoleon; he has made himself the incarnation of fate, and carries peace or war in the folds of his mantle."

The last signs begin to thicken—the Lord is at hand. Let the people of God LOOK UP AND LIFT UP THEIR HEADS, FOR THEIR REDEMPTION DRAWETH NIGH.

Selections.

Dr. Cumming on the Old Year.

Dr. Cumming delivered a lecture at the National Scotch Church, Crown Court, Covent Garden, on Tuesday, his subject being "A Retrospect of the Year." Having selected as his text the 13th chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, 12th verse, "The night is far spent, the day is at hand," he proposed to inquire what were the symptoms that the night was passing away. Dr. Arnold, he said, had expressed conviction that we were approaching the end of the world, and the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (Lord Carlisle) that if the Book of Daniel were inspired, it was evident that we were on the eve of the most stupendous events the world ever witnessed. He himself had said that, looking to the various epochs mentioned by Daniel, it might be gathered that the world would be at an end in 1867 or 1868, and this seemed to be plain, for Christ was born, as they had the authority of many writers for saying, in the year 4132, to which, if 1860 were added, it would show that we had nearly completed the 6000th year spoken of by the prophet, and should be close on 7000, which was to be the period of rest. Referring to Palestine, he said that from the heights of Lebanon to the sea, during 1800 years, there had been nothing but darkness, and yet in the year 1860 it came before the world as the great crisis of the East. Far different things were evidently in store for that land. The Emperor of Russia had there 350,000 members of the Greek Church who were looking to him, while there were looking to the Emperor of the French 250,000 Roman Catholics. Considering the love he had for annexation, it was not improbable that the eldest son of the Church—a very naughty son the Pope frequently found him—would at no distant time consider that it would be well to annex Syria to France. This annexation, if attempted, would lead to a general war, for it would be instantly asked who was to have Palestine, which was the gangway to India. Another instance that the night was passing away might be found in Turkey, for in Turkey in Europe there were now 9,000,000 professing christians, while there were only 2 1-2 millions of Mahometans. Another evidence was to be found in China. Whatever might be their judgment of the policy or principle of the late war, they would all agree that the sword, terrible as it was, had opened up a path for missionaries of the Gospel; and access had been secured to a capital which for a thousand years had been pronounced unapproachable. With regard to the United States, the Rev. gentleman quoted from the New York Observer, and expressed an opinion that under the guidance of Mr. Lincoln, the new President, the States would get rid of that which was a fever in the heart of America. [illegible] evidence of the passing away of night was to be found in Italy. [illegible] at Exeter Hall not long since, [illegible] his conviction that the power of the Pope was on the [illegible] dissolution. Some of the newspapers made capital out of it, and ridiculed the idea that the mightiest Power in Europe was in danger; but now the poor old man, the Pope, in his allocution, was lifting up his hands in despair, and calling upon his foes as well as his friends for assistance. At present France appeared to be the protector of the Pope, but they might depend upon it that the French army was merely in Rome as a jailor to the Pope, the intention being to despoil him of his temporalities. The Pope certainly would not continue in Rome without temporal power, and the absence of the Pope from Rome would be the virtual dissolution of the whole Roman Catholic system. With regard to home affairs, the Rev. Doctor argued that "the day" is at hand, by evidences gathered from the revivals in Ireland, as well as the progress of religion in England and Scotland, from eminent men as well as unlettered persons being engaged in preaching in theatres, concert-rooms, from omnibuses and cabs, and from the corners of the streets, as well as from the general spread of education amongst all classes of the people.

Alone with God.

By request we again publish the following "devout utterance" of the sweet poetess, Mary C. Ames.

Alone with God! day's craven cares
Have crowded onward unawares;
The soul is left to breathe her prayers.

Alone with God! I bare my breast.
Come in, come in, O holy guest,
Give rest—thy rest, of rest the best.

Alone with God! how calm a calm
Steals o'er me, sweet as music's balm,
When seraphs sing a seraph's psalm.

Alone with God! no human eye
Is here, with eager look to pry
Into the meaning of each sigh.

Alone with God! no jealous glare
Now stings me with its torturing stare;
No human malice says—beware!

Alone with God! from earth's rude crowd,
With jostling steps and laughter loud,
My better soul I need not shroud.

Alone with God! he only knows
If sorrow's ocean overflows
The silent spring from whence it rose.

Alone with God! he mercy lends
Life's fainting hope, life's meagre ends,
Life's dwarfing pain he comprehends.

Alone with God! he feeleth well
The soul's past life that will o'erwell;
The life-long want no words may tell!

Alone with God! still nearer bend;
Oh, tender Father, condescend
In this my need, to be my friend.

Alone with God! with suppliant mein,
Upon thy pitying breast I lean,
Nor less because thou art unseen.

Alone with God! safe in thine arms,
O shield me from life's wild alarms,
O save me from life's fearful harms.

Alone with God! my Father, bless
With thy celestial promises
The soul that needs thy tenderness.

Alone with God! O, sweet to me
This covert to whose shade I flee,
To breathe repose in thee—in thee!

Faith and Prayer.

At all times and seasons faith and prayer find fullness of mercy to pardon, and of grace to sanctify, in Jesus Christ. The supply is inexhaustible. Mountains have been exhausted of their gold, mines of their diamonds, and the depths of ocean of their pearly gems. The demand has emptied the supply. Over once busy scenes silence and solitude now reign; the caverns ring no longer to the miner's hammer, nor is the song of the pearl-fisher heard upon the deep. But the riches of grace are inexhaustible. All that have gone before us have not made them less, and we shall make them no less to those who follow us. When they have supplied the wants of unborn millions, the last of Adam's race, that lonely man, over whose head the sun is dying, beneath whose feet the earth is reeling, shall stand by as full a fountain as this day invites you to drink and live, to wash and be clean.—Dr. Guthrie.

Discovery of Faults.

Three things may be said truly of every fault in a professing christian, viz.: 1. It injures the christian himself. 2. It is displeasing and dishonoring to God. 3. It is likely to injure our fellow-creatures, especially those we love best. Therefore, it should be the earnest desire of every christian to discover all his faults and sins, that he may repent of and correct them.

It is difficult, very difficult to know one's self. Too many christians seem more concerned to discover the faults of others, than their own, and more sharp-sighted too; and yet their aim seems not to be the improvement of their brethren, but rather the pleasure of censuring them. David prayed earnestly to be enabled to discover his secret sins, and herein he was wise. Sins may be unknown to us whilst apparent to others; and all sins lie open to the eyes of God.

Our best friends are those who tell us of our faults for our good. The pious Baxter said:

"If ever you would have peace, resolve against sin to the amount of your power. Never excuse it, or cherish it, or favor it more. Confess it freely. Thank those that reprove you for it. Desire those about you to watch over you, and tell you of it, though it be evident. And if you do not see so much pride, worldliness, unpeaceableness, or other sins in yourself as your friends think they see in you, yet let their judgment make you jealous of your heart, seeing self-love doth so oft blind us, that [illegible] countenance not their plain dealing, lest you discourage them, and deprive your soul of so great benefit. Think best of those as your greatest friends, who are least friends to your sin, and do most for your recovery from it."

Wise suggestions are these; but obviously correct and important as they are, it requires considerable grace to make us willing to know our faults. Strange as it surely is, we have to proceed more cautiously in telling our friends of their faults than of their excellencies; although it is far more important that they should be made acquainted with the latter. Let us ask and pray to know ourselves.

Reading for Youth.

"Lord, Save; I Perish!"

In the year 1852 I was residing in C——, a small town on the bank of the Ohio, and on one occasion I joined a party of young men who, like myself, were without God and without hope in the world. We crossed the river, and spent the day in wild frolic in a village in Kentucky, which place we left at sundown to return home. When we were all on board our small boat, most of the party seemed the worse for liquor, and one man was so much intoxicated that we could not restrain him. We had reached the middle of the river when he jumped upon the gunwale, and capsized us all into the water. I immediately struck out for the Indiana shore, but soon turned and saw that my companions were plunging about in the stream; but a few had seized the boat, and were clinging to its sides as it lay keel upward.

I was rejoiced to see two boats approaching. First one, then the other came to my rescue; but, fool that I was, I rejected the offer, for I felt proud of my superior strength and skill, and I struck out boldly towards that part of the shore where steamboats stop for coal. Owing to the sudden rise and fall of the Ohio, permanent wharves would not at all times be accessible, and large boats are used as floating wharves; and in my blindness I was approaching this spot, where the water, passing under these boats, came out in a boiling flood.

There I found myself sinking, perishing almost within reach of the shore. My foolish pride was subdued. I felt my need of a strong hand to lift me from the yawning gulf. But God had not given me over to death. As soon as I threw up my arms and called for assistance, help was at hand, and I was taken to a place of safety. The two boats landed my companions. Thus we were all rescued from a watery grave.

The young who are out of Christ may learn a lesson from my story. You are now in the stream. You are relying on your own strength to stem the current. You are blindly refusing the aid of an almighty Savior. Cease struggling to save yourselves without him. Throw up your arms and cry, "Lord, save; I perish!" Oh, call now for mercy, and you will find that the Lord Jesus is able and willing to save you.—Child's Paper.

A Child's Application of Scripture.

In a Chinese christian family at Amoy, a little boy, the youngest of three children, on asking his father to allow him to be baptized, was told that he was too young—that he might fall back if he made a profession when he was only a little boy. To this he made the touching reply,—"Jesus has promised to carry the lambs in his arms. As I am only a little boy it will be easier for Jesus to carry me." This logic of the heart was too much for the father. He took him with him, and the dear child was ere long baptized. The whole family, of which this child is the youngest member—are all members of the Mission Church at Amoy.—Pres.

Washington's Filial Affection.

Washington, when a boy, was about going to sea as a midshipman, and his trunk had been taken to the boat, when, as he went to take leave of his mother, he saw the tears bursting from her eyes, and an expression of deep sadness on her countenance. Seeing the distress of his parent, he at once turned to the servant and said: "Go and tell them to bring back my trunk. I will not go away and break my mother's heart." His mother was struck with the spirit and manner of the decision, and at once said to him, "My son, God has promised to bless the children that honor their parents, and I believe he will bless you."

"Yes, father," said his little daughter; "but don't he send them food and clothing by us?"

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

This Same Jesus.

He, who wept o'er Judah's plain,
Comes in time to earth again;
He, who in the grave was lain,
Who for sinful man was slain,
Soon in power divine shall come,—
Call the weary pilgrim home,—
This same Jesus.

That same form, whose words are true,
Soon shall make this earth anew,—
Those same lips, that pardon speak,
Shall confess the christian meek,—
Soon shall give them life and peace,—
Bid their weary wanderings cease,—
This same Jesus.

Firm our faith—He will appear!
Signs foretell Messiah near.
Vain attempts to disbelieve,
Wait we now our King t' receive:
Soon the royal greet we 'll give,—
Hail! O King, forever live!
This same Jesus.

The Great Commandment.

This commandment was given by Christ, the Captain of salvation, to us who profess to be his soldiers, who have been warned to appear at all times, armed and equipped as the law directs. See Eph. 6 : 14. Now if the soldiers wish to win the prize, they should remember that much depends on the obedience to this command of the Captain who will prove victorious; therefore there are great inducements to the faithful and there are no impossibilities required. This commandment is Love. Says Jesus, Jn. 15 : 12, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." By this we learn that the subjects of Christ are to be known and distinguished among men by their mutual affection.

The dispensation of Jesus Christ is a system of most wonderful, most mysterious grace; it is the manifestation, commendation and perfection of divine love. It originated in the love of the Father, and is accomplished by the love of the Son. Hence it was natural that love should be the cardinal virtue in the character of his saints, and that it should be the law which regulates their conduct towards each other. And it is worthy of remark, that he has made his love to us not only the motive but the pattern of our love to each other. Says Jesus,—"Love one another as (the like) I have loved you." Now it is for us to obey it, and if it won't make us conspicuous, I do not know what will. There will be no need of asking the observers of this command whether their parents are respectable, or to show their papers of recommendation, or to inquire of their neighbors, to ascertain their character, and who they are. Jesus says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13 : 35.

Let us consider the love of Christ. His was real and great affection. So let us love, not in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth. His was free and disinterested, without any regard to our deserts; so ours should be independent of any regard to our own advantage. His was fruitful, so should ours be in every thing that can establish the comfort of each other. His was a love of forbearance and forgiveness; so should ours be. His was unchangeable, notwithstanding our unkindness; thus we are bound to love one another, and continue unalterable in our affection to each other. The apostles echoed the language of their Master, and continually enjoined the churches which they had planted, to love one another, and to let brotherly love abound and increase. It is a grace so important that, like holiness, no measure of it is sufficient to satisfy the requirement of the Word of God. It is the bond deed to the whole earth in the world to come; those who have it in possession are rich, thank the Lord. It is the basis, and cement, and beauty of the christian union.

This love is of a very sacred nature, and is quite peculiar. It is operative, and will lead us to bear one another's burthens and so fulfill the law of Christ. When we see any oppressed, or in need of our help, we should cherish a tender solicitude to know and relieve their wants; in short, we should let them feel that the call for help reaches not only our ear but our heart. Love requires that we should visit the sick and afflicted; "I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison (or bondage), and ye came unto me," etc. Here we see that something is done; not merely to call and see them and tell them you hope the Lord will pity and help them; that would add to sorrows already heavy. O christian love! bright image of the Savior's heart, whither hast thou fled? Think of the sick sufferer, to whom wearisome days and nights are appointed. Love will yield effectual relief, and administer the consolations of a hope full of immortality. Love is noble, honorable, and heroic, wherever it operates; it will circulate far and wide the praises of that dear Name which is the secret of the wonder. It was a proverb with pagans—"See how these christians love one another!" A finer eulogium was never pronounced on the christian church.

Again; pecuniary relief will be administered to those who are in need. How just, how forcible is the interrogation of the Apostle,—"Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—1 John 3 : 17. Nothing can be more absurd than those pretensions to love which are not supported by exertions to relieve the wants of the object beloved. It must be a singular affection which is destitute of mercy. Forbearance is a great part of love. We are surrounded with all gradations of intellect, and all varieties of temper, also a great diversity of character; some are forward and obtrusive, others are talkative; some are complaining and whining, others are abrupt, and so on. Now here is room for the exercise of love. Christ loved us while we were his enemies. So we should love, not only those who love us, but all.

Can we indeed love any one, and at the same time see them do that which we know will injure them, without entreating them to desist? Striking are the words of God to the Jews,—"Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke him, and not suffer sin upon him."—Lev. 19 : 17. Not to rebuke him, then, when he sins, is, instead of loving him, to hate him. This neglect is what the apostle means by being partakers of other men's sins. I am aware that it is a self-denying duty; but that cannot excuse its neglect. Love will enable us to perform it, and the neglect of it violates the law of Christ. Every christian should bear reproof with meekness. Few know how to give reproof with propriety, still fewer how to bear it. "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head." (I think it would the heart.) How small is the number who can adopt this language in sincerity! What wounded pride, what mortification and resentment are felt by many when their faults are told to them! When we have so far sinned as to deserve rebuke, we ought to have humility enough to bear it with meekness.

Besides what I have written, there is much more which love will constrain us to do, if we are the willing and obedient. It is the greatest commandment, and that which, indeed, seems to include every other. Now, dear readers, do you observe this commandment? Look well to yourselves, and be not deceived, God is not mocked. We shall reap as we sow. We are highly privileged to live to see the last jots and tittles of prophecy being completed. Time is about to expire; the political horizon gathers blackness!

Dear saint, be humble, watchful, faithful. We are in the furnace of affliction. The sorrows of earth are severe. Some of us have foes of our own household, who are not with us in the journey of love. From them we do not receive the consolations of divine love. But a few more trials, a few more battles, temptations, scoffs and ridicule; a few more groans, sighs and tears, and the kind hand of the dear Redeemer will wipe them all away.

For the Crisis.

"The Church—Her Calling, Position and Office.—London, 1845."

The neat little volume bearing this title was received from a friend in Philadelphia some years since. It was read with an interest that was as profound as it was abiding. Its savor, I trust, will never be lost. It brought together the titles, designations and prospects of "the called in Christ" from Holy Scripture, so that they could be contemplated, and in our measure appreciated connectedly. My purpose was to notice the work then. Nay, I was prompted to spread its teachings, because the subject possessed an absorbing interest to me. But as I approached the effort, I was restrained by a consciousness that something was not clear—that the Spirit's mind was not there fully expressed. The lapse of time and the good Lord's gracious leadings, I trust, have disclosed the subject to my view "more perfectly." Hence, I now venture to notice the work. To avoid misapprehension, I note:

1. My delight in appropriating all the title of honor and all the promises of good that the author quotes with such becoming earnestness and fervency of spirit. Bless the Lord for the benefit derived—for the christian fellowship enjoyed in reading his savory, inspiring and able work,—the very best of its kind.

2. My desire was, on such a theme—so full of grace to the christian and of glory to God—to echo the ideas and the very words of the author. And even now this sweet savor—this divine charm—as to the subject, will restrain, I trust, every word not needful to express a Scriptural reason for dissent in his application of a part of his quotations of the Word.

On page fourth our author quotes many of the descriptions of the church—its members and relations: "Regenerate or re-born men—new creatures in Christ—children of the resurrection—habitation of God through the Spirit—the bride of Christ—kings and priests unto God," etc. On page seventh, "Our election is out of and away from the earth." Page eighth, "We are saints or separated ones unto God, and RISEN ones with Christ—WE HAVE DIED," etc. These descriptions of the christian calling are all true, taken in their proper connections, "rightly dividing the word of truth;" but out of such relations they seem contradictory to experience, and impossible to all intelligent faith. The author seems here to take all the expanding glories of the ever opening "riches of the glory of the inheritance of the saints," and applies it too entirely here,—as if the resurrection were past already. As if the kingdom had come, and we had really somehow passed away from the earth. The Holy Ghost saith, "Buried with him into the likeness of his death (by baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him and raised up,") etc. Rom. 6: 3–5; Col. 2: 12; 3: 1–3. Hence, when we read, "if we be dead with Christ," or "risen with Christ," it applies, with its attendant faith and grace, to this fact—it hath transpired so far and only in this recorded form. No one is buried in faith, or hope, or the Holy Ghost; because these operate to enliven, enlighten and exalt. But faith in the burial and resurrection of Jesus prompts to this burial—this obedience "in baptism." "Re born men" applies properly to those who, like their Lord, are born again—born from the dead. There are two Adams, two begettings and two births. One is "earthly," the second is by the resurrection from death into "the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15.

In the light of such Scriptural descriptions of the believer's burial and rising in baptism, as a present christian experience—such statements of the second birth at the resurrection as "born from the dead," the author appears to me to confuse the subject—to burden and embarrass the weary soul, and forestal faith as to "those without"; because universal observation fails, in every instance, to justify the application of such terms to our present christian endowments. The christian is indeed "begotten again to a lively hope"—he is "buried in baptism"—is also thus "raised up"—he is "an heir according to promise"; and in all this the facts justify the language. But all beyond what is expressed in "the Word," and applied to the present life, is mother of faith and hope, and to become reality only in the future "resurrection of the just" and kingdom of God.

The principle of my answer to each of these glowing terms as to the glory and honor, the sonship and kingdom of the saints, which our author applies to the present, is found in the prophetic style,—"Unto us a child is born," Isa. 9, (seven hundred years in advance of the fact.) "Whom he did foreknow, he called, justified and GLORIFIED." Rom. 8: 29. The prophetic tense is used, as if the glorifying of the saints had then passed, already, ere their calling to be christians was known at all. The principal terms employed by this writer are only true prophetically, to be realized in the future resurrection and immortalization of the saints. Then they will be enjoyed in fact and in its fullness.

Again, page tenth:—"He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk even as he walked. This is our description and directory—the lineaments and features of our character, and the laws and principles of our walk and life and being." In this, there is no distinction made between the obedience of Jesus to his human parents till about his thirtieth year; no distinction between his example of submission as the Son of man to social, as well as religious laws and ritual services, and his dispensational and miraculous action as the Messiah—the manifested "Son of God with power." Note this fact.

Moses, Joshua, Gideon, John the Baptist and the apostles of Christ were subject, like us, to social and religious law, (as are all God's people) until their divine commission exchanged their action from the duties of ordinary life to the miraculous, that became then as the special messengers of the Most High. THE EXAMPLE they all set us as to this subject life is that of fidelity to all the relations that God has appointed for us to fill, and await our "high calling," according to promise, at the coming and kingdom of Christ. 1 Thess. 4: 13–18; Phil. 3 : 13–21; Heb. 11. A like want of discrimination appears on pp. 17, 18:—"The law speaks to servants; the gospel speaks to sons. The law respects a nature prone to disobedience; the gospel respects a nature inclined to obedience; as if it were above law and free to live according to our own impulses—a law unto ourselves." Is not this assumption of superiority to law the bane of all ANTINOMIANS?—of all the erring High Churchmen?—nay, of all parts of the great apostasy? Do we not all know that "the whole law" is abbreviated and re-enforced by the Greater than Moses—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . and thy neighbor as thyself"? Are not all the precepts of the second table of the decalogue re-asserted by Jesus and Paul? Are we not "under law to Christ"? 1 Cor. 9 : 21; Rom. 13 : 9; Matt. 19 : 18. Is not this law to Christ more profound than that given by Moses, in its prohibition of even the covetous or murderous and impure purpose? Matt. 5 : 17–48. Antinomians and fanatics of various grades adopt the author's idea and language for the worst of purposes. Surely it is a grave error that suggests and allows of such flagrant abuses.

Once more he says: "We differ from that ancient nation . . . in our calling . . . (in) not seeking and desiring, however moderately, of present possessions, . . . but weanedness, mortifiedness," etc. Page 14. It is true "the called in Christ," the "church of the first-born," must differ from Israel. They differ as to dispensation, and as to their worship, and their relations both toward God and man. But the author does not hint to the uninformed reader that "the Israel of God" (like us) differed widely from themselves at the several stages of their incipient and established history. That their national worship was an example and shadow of the kingdom yet to come—that their ordinances, commemorative and prospective, were analogous to ours under the gospel, in that they were embodiments of gospel truth till He come in his kingdom.

The author anticipates the christian's development too much. He writes like those who bend back and selvedge up the great day (the one thousand years) into a literal day, at the beginning of that period. He seems at times to crowd all the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory into the christian's incipient, only begotten and struggling state. Whereas, new wine must have new bottles,—resurrected, glorified bodies,—else the bottles break and both they and the wine be lost. The new creature is renewed only in God's order. The new heart and new spirit are enjoyed in this life; but the new creature complete is when this mortal puts on immortality, to bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. 15 : 45–55; 1 John 3 : 1–3; 2 Thess. 1 : 7–9.

The author, in his zeal to distinguish the church from Israel, seems oft to ignore the higher distinction between the christian's state in grace and in glory. True, he quotes some Scripture as to the present; but then there can be no excuse for conforming it with the glorious future. The promise cannot be yea and nay. We cannot now be "the children of the resurrection" and yet be groaning for it, as was the apostle.—Rom. 8 : 19–23.

The element of evil, the confusion of ideas and of inspired statement in this work, is analogous to that which makes man immortal, while yet he is really mortal, and waiting to put on immortality at the last trump.—1 Cor. 15. In illustration, I remark, "It is written, ye are dead, . . . she is dead while she liveth;" because mortal—because death having "passed upon all," they "shall surely die," or having rejected life by Jesus and the resurrection, "death abideth on them." This obvious and accommodated meaning of death is made by many the only or proper meaning; and in consequence they make all the living all dead, as long as they live! yet if one kill another he is a murderer, to be hanged by the public hangman. Nay more, to crown the climax of contradictions, he does not kill, but only seems to slay, while he really raises the murdered ones to an higher sphere in life. With such, it is a grave heresy to think that the dead are not alive after they "surely die!"

This habit of confounding all language, and logic too, is oft applied to praying "Thy kingdom come;" while yet in some inexplicable mystery it did come, they say, long ago! Thus the record of the birth, life and death of Jesus is taken as in some sense true; but yet, in a like mystery, he always existed, and, in seeming to be born, only altered his appearance! Hence, his seeming to have been promised through one thousand years as the woman's seed—his seeming birth, etc., was all "a mystery"—an imposition on the understanding and faith of mankind. To me, no subject can be so confounded in Scripture. Only believe the promise as to the Virgin's conceiving and bearing a Son—believe the recorded fulfillment in Jesus' birth, (Luke 1) then we may also believe that "the word" (of promise), which was in the beginning, became flesh by its accomplishment. Let all such distinctions that God has made come out. Then there is coherency—then, faith is firm.

"THY WORD IS TRUTH."—John 17 : 17. This truth lies in its accordance with the facts in the case. Through near six thousand years, the facts that fulfill the word answer to the representation which the word contains. Thus the God of truth demonstrates the precise truthfulness of his own word. The tempter was the first to contradict it—to make its meaning a mystery, (like the real presence in the Lord's supper) which facts fail to sustain. Hence any man, on whatever subject, who applies the word against obvious facts—who applies "re-born men, children of the resurrection," etc., to the christian's present subject and suffering state, confounds things and states that are totally distinct both as to time and event. On all portions of divine truth this confusion of idea—this commingling of fancied and real fulfillments, obtains. It is always darkness.

The author does quote much Scripture most preciously. I have been edified by reading his delightful work—delightful as to its theme, its savor of Jesus, and its apparent earnestness to inspire us with becoming views of our present and prospective relations to God's glorious purpose in "the restitution of all things spoken." I can appreciate the work, while I aim to correct an error as to principle in it.

Let it then stand that the christian is already "begotten again to a hope of life." But that he is "under tutors and governors till the time appointed of the Father"; that then he will be "born from the dead" or "translated"—join the "church of the first-born"—be "like him, the King of kings"—in the glory of "kings and priests unto God"—to "reign with him a thousand years," etc. This makes the whole story straight. This openly justifies God's word. This maintained, confounds all the hosts of darkness. This demonstrates that the revealed judgment of God on the medley and babble of all "Babylon," is according to truth. The serpent lies only in a coil; he goes only in a crooked way, peculiar to himself. But the way of truth is made straight. The word of God, the ways of God, are equal and agreeable to the facts of christian experience. Amen.

For the Crisis.

The Better Land.

All down through the long vista of years, which have passed away with their records of the mutability of all things of an earthly nature—amid those scenes of war and carnage which marked the destruction of the Jewish economy, those Jewish seers looked beyond the utter destruction of Jerusalem, whose splendor had reached the uttermost parts of the known earth,—and while uttering their bitter denunciations against their own people, they saw by an eye of faith a better land, with an heavenly Jerusalem, whose government will not be corrupt, but holy. There they longed to find a final rest from the sorrows of life. And all through the martyr age, that epoch of blood and despair [illegible] to God's chosen people, they marched forth to the stake with a glorious hope of that better land, crowns being in reserve for them when all things are made new.

In our own age of moral declension and infidelity, there are a few who are looking forward to a better land, where the sorrowing sons and daughters of Adam will meet those prophets and martyrs with robes and crowns of victory. Earth has no joys for the true follower of Christ. His affections are placed above, and he views this earth as one vast grave-yard full of dead men's bones; and as his friends, one by one are taken from his side, it seems but to draw him nearer to Him who is the only true source of all earthly comfort, to Him who has promised never to forsake. If faithful to his fellow men, he hopes to cross the stormy sea of time and anchor where—

"In that pure home of endless joy
Earth's parted friends shall meet,
With smiles of love that never fade,
And blessedness complete;
There, there adieus are sounds unknown,
Death frowns not in that scene."

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 4.

Everything now appeared different. The fields and groves, the birds and flowers, my heart and home, all were new and seemed to join in the grateful song of praise to God for the wonderful change. My Bible, too, instead of the fear and condemnation which had heretofore attended its perusal, I now received sweet, rich and heavenly comfort and instruction from its sacred pages. I learned that the path of humble obedience was the only path of safety, and I resolved to follow the teachings of the Holy Spirit and bear the cross daily; therefore I commenced by joining in the family devotion with my parents, which duty, while faithfully performed, greatly increased my courage and confidence.

In those days it was not deemed intrusive if young converts and elder saints took part in the more public services of the sanctuary on the Lord's day, as well as ministers, by publicly confessing Christ, and exhorting one another, and inviting sinners to come to the same full fountain and partake of the water of life freely.

The first Sabbath after my conversion, I attended meeting at the usual place. The same minister under whose faithful labors I had received my convictions, preached as he was wont to do, with such melting power and heavenly eloquence as seldom failed to reach and affect the hardest heart. Some two or three young converts were present.* During the discourse a sweet, heavenly peace, and the tender influences of the spirit of love and affection filled my whole soul. At its close, a certain undefinable feeling, or impulse, came over me, and while thinking upon its meaning, one after another of the converts arose and spoke of the joys of pardoned sin and the love of God that filled their souls. The next moment, as if some unseen hand had lifted me, I was standing up and joining in the same song of praise and glory to God for what he had done for my soul. Several followed in exhortation till the house seemed filled with the glory and power of God, which caused the saints to rejoice and sinners to weep and tremble.

Thus I went on obeying the teachings of the Spirit, rejoicing in God, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Some two months passed, when the duty of baptism presented itself. I had learned from the Book that Christ had lived our example and died our sacrifice, and one of the most glorious imitable examples which he had left on record for his children to follow was baptism. And again in his commission to his disciples after his resurrection, Mark 16 : 15, 16, he strictly enjoins this important duty. From several passages, such as Rom. 6 : 4, Col. 2 : 12, I believed immersion was the only right mode of water-baptism. Having now a desire and resolution to keep all the commands and follow the footsteps of my Divine Lord, I resolved to embrace the first opportunity of publicly acknowledging Christ in this ordinance.

IS RELIGION BEAUTIFUL?—It is always beautiful: in the child, maiden, wife and mother. Religion shines with a holy, benignant beauty of its own, which nothing on earth can mar. Never yet was the female character perfect without the steady faith of piety. Beauty, intellect, wealth! they are like pit-falls, dark in the brightest day, unless religion throw her soft beams around them to purify and exalt, making twice glorious that which seemed all loveliness before.

The Two Hells from one Pulpit.

Some months ago a man preached in this place. After preaching, the minister in charge gave notice that the brother had a picture for sale. On Monday he found many buyers. It was placed in a window in one of our public streets. I cannot fully describe it; but it was a representation of a lake of fire; the "rich man" was there. On each end of the lake was to be seen a volcano throwing up its fire and smoke,—a descending road above the lake; many seemed to be running down this road and dropping off into the lake with the "rich man." Away above this, overlooking this horrible scene, was Paradise, or the place of the righteous. All this purported to be gathered from the 33d chap. of Ezek., 11th verse. Neither heaven or hell is found in the whole chapter.

Two weeks ago hell, Number 2. was taught from Luke 13: 34, and part of 35th verse; and perhaps I shall give his views better by quoting those of a writer in the "Wesleyan" some two years ago:—"The sinner will continue to sin in eternity, and sinning will increase and roll onward with ever increasing and resistless momentum. God will withdraw the restraints of his grace, and the influences of his divine Spirit, and leave the sinner to himself. No moral restraints will be put upon him, and he let alone to follow out during an eternity of existence his rebellion and hatred, cursing and blasphemy." He says, "the powers of the world to come are not to modify, but to deepen and intensify character formed in this life." Evidently it was the design of this teacher to fix up a hell worse than the hell of the picture number one.

I am an unlearned man, and it has not been my fault; therefore I have a right to ask Orthodoxy, in the best way I can, are either of these hells consistent, and is this the heaven you expect to have and enjoy; that is, to look over the battlements of heaven and see the wicked in despair? Can man enjoy perfect bliss in such a heaven? I have heard it from a learned divine, that the righteous have no real sympathy for the wicked; but I think this would make a saint in heaven worse than a sinner on earth, or even the "rich man" in hell.

An Important Principle.

"Behold, to OBEY is better than sacrifice, and to HEARKEN than the fat of rams."—1 Sam. 15: 22.

All true and acceptable worship consists in obedience to the commandments of the Lord. It is the rightful prerogative of the Giver of talent, to determine how it shall be occupied. Though we speak with the tongue of an angel, if it is not in accordance with the Divine will, revealed in the sacred Scriptures, it is a violation of the principle of love, which consists in keeping God's commands, and without which we are "nothing."

A sincere desire to serve God, is indeed the fruit of his own Spirit and acceptable in his sight; but this desire must be accompanied with the prayer, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" God will be worshiped "in truth" as well as "in spirit." It was well that David had it in his heart to build the house of the Lord, before he knew the will of the Lord that he was not to do it. It was right that the house should be built, but not that David should build it.

Neither are we to conclude that an act is right and approved of God, because its effects are good. Our Father overrules for good many things which are contrary to his word of truth. It was well that the ark was not thrown from the cart and broken to pieces; but this did not justify Uzza, though his desire was to do good. He violated the command of the Lord in his word.

It is a good thing, in the general, to prophesy, or to speak the word of the Lord, "to edification, exhortation and comfort," but for any persons to do so on any occasion, when, according to the plain word of the Lord, "it is not permitted unto them to speak," and when, according to that holy word, "it is a shame" for them to speak,"—1 Cor. 14 : 34–37; appears to be incompatible with the principle that "this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." We are to "try the spirits," both our own and those of others, by the word of the Lord, which is truth.—John 17 : 17. We are not infallible. We may mistake our own spirit for the Spirit of God.

Dear brethren and sisters in our precious Redeemer, the King of Zion, whose word is our law; my heart's desire and prayer to God for you is, that you may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

"His adorable will let us gladly fulfil,
And our talents improve,"

according to his own word, which is to "judge (us) in the last day" at his coming. "To him be glory both now and forever."

This Same Jesus.

He, who wept o'er Judah's plain,
Comes in time to earth again;
He, who in the grave was lain,
Who for sinful man was slain,
Soon in power divine sh ll come,—
Call the weary pilgrim home,—
This same J.sus.

That same form, whose words are true,
Soon shall make this earth anew,—
Those same lips, that pardon speak,
Shall confess the christian meek,—
Soon shall give them life and peace,—
Bid their weary wanderings cease,—
This same Jesus.

Firm our faith—He will appear!
Signs foretell Messiah near.
Vain attempts to disbelieve,
Wait we now our King t' receive:
Soon the royal greet we 'll give,—
Hail! O King, forever live!

The Great Commandment.

This commandment was given by Christ, the Captain of salvation, to us who profess to be his soldiers, who have been warned to appear at all times, armed and equipped as the law directs. See Eph. 6 : 14. Now if the soldiers wish to win the prize, they should remember that much depends on the obedience to this command of the Captain who will prove victorious; therefore there are great inducements to the faithful and there are no impossibilities required. This commandment is Love. Says Jesus, Jn. 15 : 12, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." By this we learn that the subjects of Christ are to be known and distinguished among men by their mutual affection.

The dispensation of Jesus Christ is a system of most wonderful, most mysterious grace; it is the manifestation, commendation and perfection of divine love. It originated in the love of the Father, and is accomplished by the love of the Son. Hence it was natural that love should be the cardinal virtue in the character of his saints, and that it should be the law which regulates their conduct towards each other. And it is worthy of remark, that he has made his love to us not only the motive but the pattern of our love to each other. Says Jesus,—"Love one another as (the like) I have loved you." Now it is for us to obey it, and if it won't make us conspicuous, I do not know what will. There will be no need of asking the observers of this command whether their parents are respectable, or to show their papers of recommendation, or to inquire of their neighbors, to ascertain their character, and who they are. Jesus says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13 : 35.

Let us consider the love of Christ. His was real and great affection. So let us love, not in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth. His was free and disinterested, without any regard to our deserts; so ours should be independent of any regard to our own advantage. His was fruitful, so should ours be in every thing that can establish the comfort of each other. His was a love of forbearance and forgiveness; so should ours be. His was unchangeable, notwithstanding our unkindness; thus we are bound to love one another, and continue unalterable in our affection to each other. The apostles echoed the language of their Master, and continually enjoined the churches which they had planted, to love one another, and to let brotherly love abound and increase. It is a grace so important that, like holiness, no measure of it is sufficient to satisfy the requirement of the Word of God. It is the bond deed to the whole earth in the world to come; those who have it in possession are rich, thank the Lord. It is the basis, and cement, and beauty of the christian union.

This love is of a very sacred nature, and is quite peculiar. It is operative, and will lead us to bear one another's burthens and so fulfill the law of Christ. When we see any oppressed, or in need of our help, we should cherish a tender solicitude to know and relieve their wants; in short, we should let them feel that the call for help reaches not only our ear but our heart. Love requires that we should visit the sick and afflicted; "I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison (or bondage), and ye came unto me," etc. Here we see that something is done; not merely to call and see them and tell them you hope the Lord will pity and help them; that would add to sorrows already heavy. O christian love! bright image of the Savior's heart, whither hast thou fled? Think of the sick sufferer, to whom wearisome days and nights are appointed. Love will yield effectual relief, and administer the consolations of a hope full of immortality. Love is noble, honorable, and heroic, wherever it operates; it will circulate far and wide the praises of that dear Name which is the secret of the wonder. It was a proverb with pagans—"See how these christians love one another!" A finer eulogium was never pronounced on the christian church.

Again; pecuniary relief will be administered to those who are in need. How just, how forcible is the interrogation of the Apostle,—"Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—1 John 3 : 17. Nothing can be more absurd than those pretensions to love which are not supported by exertions to relieve the wants of the object beloved. It must be a singular affection which is destitute of mercy. Forbearance is a great part of love. We are surrounded with all gradations of intellect, and all varieties of temper, also a great diversity of character; some are forward and obtrusive, others are talkative; some are complaining and whining, others are abrupt, and so on. Now here is room for the exercise of love. Christ loved us while we were his enemies. So we should love, not only those who love us, but all.

Can we indeed love any one, and at the same time see them do that which we know will injure them, without entreating them to desist? Striking are the words of God to the Jews,—"Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke him, and not suffer sin upon him."—Lev. 19 : 17. Not to rebuke him, then, when he sins, is, instead of loving him, to hate him. This neglect is what the apostle means by being partakers of other men's sins. I am aware that it is a self-denying duty; but that cannot excuse its neglect. Love will enable us to perform it, and the neglect of it violates the law of Christ. Every christian should bear reproof with meekness. Few know how to give reproof with propriety, still fewer how to bear it. "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head." (I think it would the heart.) How small is the number who can adopt this language in sincerity! What wounded pride, what mortification and resentment are felt by many when their faults are told to them! When we have so far sinned as to deserve rebuke, we ought to have humility enough to bear it with meekness.

Besides what I have written, there is much more which love will constrain us to do, if we are the willing and obedient. It is the greatest commandment, and that which, indeed, seems to include every other. Now, dear readers, do you observe this commandment? Look well to yourselves, and be not deceived, God is not mocked. We shall reap as we sow. We are highly privileged to live to see the last jots and tittles of prophecy being completed. Time is about to expire; the political horizon gathers blackness!

Dear saint, be humble, watchful, faithful. We are in the furnace of affliction. The sorrows of earth are severe. Some of us have foes of our own household, who are not with us in the journey of love. From them we do not receive the consolations of divine love. But a few more trials, a few more battles, temptations, scoffs and ridicule; a few more groans, sighs and tears, and the kind hand of the dear Redeemer will wipe them all away.

EVIL THOUGHTS.—Have a care of evil thoughts. Oh, the mischief they have done in the world! Bad thoughts come first, bad words follow after, and bad deeds bring up the close. Strive against them! watch against them! pray against them! they prepare the way for the enemy.

For the Crisis.

"The Church—Her Calling, Position and Office.—London, 1845."

The neat little volume bearing this title was received from a friend in Philadelphia some years since. It was read with an interest that was as profound as it was abiding. Its savor, I trust, will never be lost. It brought together the titles, designations and prospects of "the called in Christ" from Holy Scripture, so that they could be contemplated, and in our measure appreciated connectedly. My purpose was to notice the work then. Nay, I was prompted to spread its teachings, because the subject possessed an absorbing interest to me. But as I approached the effort, I was restrained by a consciousness that something was not clear—that the Spirit's mind was not there fully expressed. The lapse of time and the good Lord's gracious leadings, I trust, have disclosed the subject to my view "more perfectly." Hence, I now venture to notice the work. To avoid misapprehension, I note:

1. My delight in appropriating all the title of honor and all the promises of good that the author quotes with such becoming earnestness and fervency of spirit. Bless the Lord for the benefit derived—for the christian fellowship enjoyed in reading his savory, inspiring and able work,—the very best of its kind.

2. My desire was, on such a theme—so full of grace to the christian and of glory to God—to echo the ideas and the very words of the author. And even now this sweet savor—this divine charm—as to the subject, will restrain, I trust, every word not needful to express a Scriptural reason for dissent in his application of a part of his quotations of the Word.

On page fourth our author quotes many of the descriptions of the church—its members and relations: "Regenerate or re-born men—new creatures in Christ—children of the resurrection—habitation of God through the Spirit—the bride of Christ—kings and priests unto God," etc. On page seventh, "Our election is out of and away from the earth." Page eighth, "We are saints or separated ones unto God, and RISEN ones with Christ—WE HAVE DIED," etc. These descriptions of the christian calling are all true, taken in their proper connections, "rightly dividing the word of truth;" but out of such relations they seem contradictory to experience, and impossible to all intelligent faith. The author seems here to take all the expanding glories of the ever opening "riches of the glory of the inheritance of the saints," and applies it too entirely here,—as if the resurrection were past already. As if the kingdom had come, and we had really somehow passed away from the earth. The Holy Ghost saith, "Buried with him into the likeness of his death (by baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him and raised up,") etc. Rom. 6 : 3–5; Col. 2 : 12; 3 : 1–3. Hence, when we read, "if we be dead with Christ," or "risen with Christ," it applies, with its attendant faith and grace, to this fact—it hath transpired so far and only in this recorded form. No one is buried in faith, or hope, or the Holy Ghost; because these operate to enliven, enlighten and exalt. But faith in the burial and resurrection of Jesus prompts to this burial—this obedience "in baptism." "Re-born men" applies properly to those who, like their Lord, are born again—born from the dead. There are two Adams, two begettings and two births. One is "earthly," the second is by the resurrection from death into "the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15.

In the light of such Scriptural descriptions of the believer's burial and rising in baptism, as a present christian experience—such statements of the second birth at the resurrection as "born from the dead," the author appears to me to confuse the subject—to burden and embarrass the weary soul, and forestal faith as to "those without"; because universal observation fails, in every instance, to justify the application of such terms to our present christian endowments. The christian is indeed "begotten again to a lively hope"—he is "buried in baptism"—is also thus "raised up"—he is "an heir according to promise"; and in all this the facts justify the language. But all beyond what is expressed in "the Word," and applied to the present life, is mother of faith and hope, and to become reality only in the future "resurrection of the just" and kingdom of God.

The principle of my answer to each of these glowing terms as to the glory and honor, the sonship and kingdom of the saints, which our author applies to the present, is found in the prophetic style,—"Unto us a child is born," Isa. 9, (seven hundred years in advance of the fact.) "Whom he did foreknow, he called, justified and GLORIFIED." Rom. 8 : 29. The prophetic tense is used, as if the glorifying of the saints had then passed, already, ere their calling to be christians was known at all. The principal terms employed by this writer are only true prophetically, to be realized in the future resurrection and immortalization of the saints. Then they will be enjoyed in fact and in its fullness.

Again, page tenth:—"He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk even as he walked. This is our description and directory—the lineaments and features of our character, and the laws and principles of our walk and life and being." In this, there is no distinction made between the obedience of Jesus to his human parents till about his thirtieth year; no distinction between his example of submission as the Son of man to social, as well as religious laws and ritual services, and his dispensational and miraculous action as the Messiah—the manifested "Son of God with power." Note this fact.

Moses, Joshua, Gideon, John the Baptist and the apostles of Christ were subject, like us, to social and religious law, (as are all God's people) until their divine commission exchanged their action from the duties of ordinary life to the miraculous, that became then as the special messengers of the Most High. THE EXAMPLE they all set us as to this subject life is that of fidelity to all the relations that God has appointed for us to fill, and await our "high calling," according to promise, at the coming and kingdom of Christ. 1 Thess. 4 : 13–18; Phil. 3 : 13–21; Heb. 11. A like want of discrimination appears on pp. 17, 18:—"The law speaks to servants; the gospel speaks to sons. The law respects a nature prone to disobedience; the gospel respects a nature inclined to obedience; as if it were above law and free to live according to our own impulses—a law unto ourselves." Is not this assumption of superiority to law the bane of all ANTINOMIANS?—of all the erring High Churchmen?—nay, of all parts of the great apostasy? Do we not all know that "the whole law" is abbreviated and re-enforced by the Greater than Moses—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . and thy neighbor as thyself"? Are not all the precepts of the second table of the decalogue re-asserted by Jesus and Paul? Are we not "under law to Christ"? 1 Cor. 9 : 21; Rom. 13 : 9; Matt. 19 : 18. Is not this law to Christ more profound than that given by Moses, in its prohibition of even the covetous or murderous and impure purpose? Matt. 5 : 17–48. Antinomians and fanatics of various grades adopt the author's idea and language for the worst of purposes. Surely it is a grave error that suggests and allows of such flagrant abuses.

Once more he says: "We differ from that ancient nation . . . in our calling . . . (in) not seeking and desiring, however moderately, of present possessions, . . . but weanedness, mortifiedness," etc. Page 14. It is true "the called in Christ," the "church of the first-born," must differ from Israel. They differ as to dispensation, and as to their worship, and their relations both toward God and man. But the author does not hint to the uninformed reader that "the Israel of God" (like us) differed widely from themselves at the several stages of their incipient and established history. That their national worship was an example and shadow of the kingdom yet to come—that their ordinances, commemorative and prospective, were analogous to ours under the gospel, in that they were embodiments of gospel truth till He come in his kingdom.

The author anticipates the christian's development too much. He writes like those who bend back and selvedge up the great day (the one thousand years) into a literal day, at the beginning of that period. He seems at times to crowd all the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory into the christian's incipient, only begotten and struggling state. Whereas, new wine must have new bottles,—resurrected, glorified bodies,—else the bottles break and both they and the wine be lost. The new creature is renewed only in God's order. The new heart and new spirit are enjoyed in this life; but the new creature complete is when this mortal puts on immortality, to bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. 15 : 45–55; 1 John 3 : 1–3; 2 Thess. 1 : 7–9.

The author, in his zeal to distinguish the church from Israel, seems oft to ignore the higher distinction between the christian's state in grace and in glory. True, he quotes some Scripture as to the present; but then there can be no excuse for conforming it with the glorious future. The promise cannot be yea and nay. We cannot now be "the children of the resurrection" and yet be groaning for it, as was the apostle.—Rom. 8 : 19–23.

The element of evil, the confusion of ideas and of inspired statement in this work, is analogous to that which makes man immortal, while yet he is really mortal, and waiting to put on immortality at the last trump.—1 Cor. 15. In illustration, I remark, "It is written, ye are dead, . . . she is dead while she liveth;" because mortal—because death having "passed upon all," they "shall surely die," or having rejected life by Jesus and the resurrection, "death abideth on them." This obvious and accommodated meaning of death is made by many the only or proper meaning; and in consequence they make all the living all dead, as long as they live! yet if one kill another he is a murderer, to be hanged by the public hangman. Nay more, to crown the climax of contradictions, he does not kill, but only seems to slay, while he really raises the murdered ones to an higher sphere in life. With such, it is a grave heresy to think that the dead are not alive after they "surely die!"

This habit of confounding all language, and logic too, is oft applied to praying "Thy kingdom come;" while yet in some inexplicable mystery it did come, they say, long ago! Thus the record of the birth, life and death of Jesus is taken as in some sense true; but yet, in a like mystery, he always existed, and, in seeming to be born, only altered his appearance! Hence, his seeming to have been promised through one thousand years as the woman's seed—his seeming birth, etc., was all "a mystery"—an imposition on the understanding and faith of mankind. To me, no subject can be so confounded in Scripture. Only believe the promise as to the Virgin's conceiving and bearing a Son—believe the recorded fulfillment in Jesus' birth, (Luke 1) then we may also believe that "the word" (of promise), which was in the beginning, became flesh by its accomplishment. Let all such distinctions that God has made come out. Then there is coherency—then, faith is firm.

"THY WORD IS TRUTH."—John 17 : 17. This truth lies in its accordance with the facts in the case. Through near six thousand years, the facts that fulfill the word answer to the representation which the word contains. Thus the God of truth demonstrates the precise truthfulness of his own word. The tempter was the first to contradict it—to make its meaning a mystery, (like the real presence in the Lord's supper) which facts fail to sustain. Hence any man, on whatever subject, who applies the word against obvious facts—who applies "re-born men, children of the resurrection," etc., to the christian's present subject and suffering state, confounds things and states that are totally distinct both as to time and event. On all portions of divine truth this confusion of idea—this commingling of fancied and real fulfillments, obtains. It is always darkness.

The author does quote much Scripture most preciously. I have been edified by reading his delightful work—delightful as to its theme, its savor of Jesus, and its apparent earnestness to inspire us with becoming views of our present and prospective relations to God's glorious purpose in "the restitution of all things spoken." I can appreciate the work, while I aim to correct an error as to principle in it.

Let it then stand that the christian is already "begotten again to a hope of life." But that he is "under tutors and governors till the time appointed of the Father"; that then he will be "born from the dead" or "translated"—join the "church of the first-born"—be "like him, the King of kings"—in the glory of "kings and priests unto God"—to "reign with him a thousand years," etc. This makes the whole story straight. This openly justifies God's word. This maintained, confounds all the hosts of darkness. This demonstrates that the revealed judgment of God on the medley and babble of all "Babylon," is according to truth. The serpent lies only in a coil; he goes only in a crooked way, peculiar to himself. But the way of truth is made straight. The word of God, the ways of God, are equal and agreeable to the facts of christian experience. Amen.

The Better Land.

All down through the long vista of years, which have passed away with their records of the mutability of all things of an earthly nature—amid those scenes of war and carnage which marked the destruction of the Jewish economy, those Jewish seers looked beyond the utter destruction of Jerusalem, whose splendor had reached the uttermost parts of the known earth,—and while uttering their bitter denunciations against their own people, they saw by an eye of faith a better land, with an heavenly Jerusalem, whose government will not be corrupt, but holy. There they longed to find a final rest from the sorrows of life. And all through the martyr age, that epoch of blood and despair to God's chosen people, they marched forth to the stake with a glorious hope of that better land, crowns being in reserve for them when all things are made new.

In our own age of moral declension and infidelity, there are a few who are looking forward to a better land, where the sorrowing sons and daughters of Adam will meet those prophets and martyrs with robes and crowns of victory. Earth has no joys for the true follower of Christ. His affections are placed above, and he views this earth as one vast grave-yard full of dead men's bones; and as his friends, one by one are taken from his side, it seems but to draw him nearer to Him who is the only true source of all earthly comfort, to Him who has promised never to forsake. If faithful to his fellow men, he hopes to cross the stormy sea of time and anchor where—

"In that pure home of endless joy
Earth's parted friends shall meet,
With smiles of love that never fade,
And blessedness complete;
There, there adieus are sounds unknown,
Death frowns not in that scene."

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 4.

Everything now appeared different. The fields and groves, the birds and flowers, my heart and home, all were new and seemed to join in the grateful song of praise to God for the wonderful change. My Bible, too, instead of the fear and condemnation which had heretofore attended its perusal, I now received sweet, rich and heavenly comfort and instruction from its sacred pages. I learned that the path of humble obedience was the only path of safety, and I resolved to follow the teachings of the Holy Spirit and bear the cross daily; therefore I commenced by joining in the family devotion with my parents, which duty, while faithfully performed, greatly increased my courage and confidence.

In those days it was not deemed intrusive if young converts and elder saints took part in the more public services of the sanctuary on the Lord's day, as well as ministers, by publicly confessing Christ, and exhorting one another, and inviting sinners to come to the same full fountain and partake of the water of life freely.

The first Sabbath after my conversion, I attended meeting at the usual place. The same minister under whose faithful labors I had received my convictions, preached as he was wont to do, with such melting power and heavenly eloquence as seldom failed to reach and affect the hardest heart. Some two or three young converts were present.* During the discourse a sweet, heavenly peace, and the tender influences of the spirit of love and affection filled my whole soul. At its close, a certain undefinable feeling, or impulse, came over me, and while thinking upon its meaning, one after another of the converts arose and spoke of the joys of pardoned sin and the love of God that filled their souls. The next moment, as if some unseen hand had lifted me, I was standing up and joining in the same song of praise and glory to God for what he had done for my soul. Several followed in exhortation till the house seemed filled with the glory and power of God, which caused the saints to rejoice and sinners to weep and tremble.

Thus I went on obeying the teachings of the Spirit, rejoicing in God, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Some two months passed, when the duty of baptism presented itself. I had learned from the Book that Christ had lived our example and died our sacrifice, and one of the most glorious imitable examples which he had left on record for his children to follow was baptism. And again in his commission to his disciples after his resurrection, Mark 16 : 15, 16, he strictly enjoins this important duty. From several passages, such as Rom. 6 : 4, Col. 2 : 12, I believed immersion was the only right mode of water-baptism. Having now a desire and resolution to keep all the commands and follow the footsteps of my Divine Lord, I resolved to embrace the first opportunity of publicly acknowledging Christ in this ordinance.

IS RELIGION BEAUTIFUL?—It is always beautiful: in the child, maiden, wife and mother. Religion shines with a holy, benignant beauty of its own, which nothing on earth can mar. Never yet was the female character perfect without the steady faith of piety. Beauty, intellect, wealth! they are like pit-falls, dark in the brightest day, unless religion throw her soft beams around them to purify and exalt, making twice glorious that which seemed all loveliness before.

The Two Hells from one Pulpit.

Some months ago a man preached in this place. After preaching, the minister in charge gave notice that the brother had a picture for sale. On Monday he found many buyers. It was placed in a window in one of our public streets. I cannot fully describe it; but it was a representation of a lake of fire; the "rich man" was there. On each end of the lake was to be seen a volcano throwing up its fire and smoke,—a descending road above the lake; many seemed to be running down this road and dropping off into the lake with the "rich man." Away above this, overlooking this horrible scene, was Paradise, or the place of the righteous. All this purported to be gathered from the 33d chap. of Ezek., 11th verse. Neither heaven or hell is found in the whole chapter.

Two weeks ago hell, Number 2, was taught from Luke 13 : 34, and part of 35th verse; and perhaps I shall give his views better by quoting those of a writer in the "Wesleyan" some two years ago:—"The sinner will continue to sin in eternity, and sinning will increase and roll onward with ever increasing and resistless momentum. God will withdraw the restraints of his grace, and the influences of his divine Spirit, and leave the sinner to himself. No moral restraints will be put upon him, and he let alone to follow out during an eternity of existence his rebellion and hatred, cursing and blasphemy." He says, "the powers of the world to come are not to modify, but to deepen and intensify character formed in this life." Evidently it was the design of this teacher to fix up a hell worse than the hell of the picture number one.

I am an unlearned man, and it has not been my fault; therefore I have a right to ask Orthodoxy, in the best way I can, are either of these hells consistent, and is this the heaven you expect to have and enjoy; that is, to look over the battlements of heaven and see the wicked in despair? Can man enjoy perfect bliss in such a heaven? I have heard it from a learned divine, that the righteous have no real sympathy for the wicked; but I think this would make a saint in heaven worse than a sinner on earth, or even the "rich man" in hell.

An Important Principle.

"Behold, to OBEY is better than sacrifice, and to HEARKEN than the fat of rams."—1 Sam. 15 : 22.

All true and acceptable worship consists in obedience to the commandments of the Lord. It is the rightful prerogative of the Giver of talent, to determine how it shall be occupied. Though we speak with the tongue of an angel, if it is not in accordance with the Divine will, revealed in the sacred Scriptures, it is a violation of the principle of love, which consists in keeping God's commands, and without which we are "nothing."

A sincere desire to serve God, is indeed the fruit of his own Spirit and acceptable in his sight; but this desire must be accompanied with the prayer, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" God will be worshiped "in truth" as well as "in spirit." It was well that David had it in his heart to build the house of the Lord, before he knew the will of the Lord that he was not to do it. It was right that the house should be built, but not that David should build it.

Neither are we to conclude that an act is right and approved of God, because its effects are good. Our Father overrules for good many things which are contrary to his word of truth. It was well that the ark was not thrown from the cart and broken to pieces; but this did not justify Uzza, though his desire was to do good. He violated the command of the Lord in his word.

It is a good thing, in the general, to prophesy, or to speak the word of the Lord, "to edification, exhortation and comfort," but for any persons to do so on any occasion, when, according to the plain word of the Lord, "it is not permitted unto them to speak," and when, according to that holy word, "it is a shame" for them to speak,"—1 Cor. 14 : 34–37; appears to be incompatible with the principle that "this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." We are to "try the spirits," both our own and those of others, by the word of the Lord, which is truth.—John 17 : 17. We are not infallible. We may mistake our own spirit for the Spirit of God.

Dear brethren and sisters in our precious Redeemer, the King of Zion, whose word is our law; my heart's desire and prayer to God for you is, that you may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

"His adorable will let us gladly fulfil,
And our talents improve,"

according to his own word, which is to "judge (us) in the last day" at his coming. "To him be glory both now and forever."

Doubts Dispelled.

Concerning the opinions of the Adventists, as a religious body, I had been exceedingly skeptical; I did not go to hear them preach, nor had I read their writings to any extent, nor sought information respecting them. Filled with prejudice, I was led to think some visionist, having left the old, established paths, was wandering amid the mazes of conjecture in his attempt to play the prophet. But in Feb., 1860, Eld. I. C. Wellcome held a series of meetings at this place, during which I was almost persuaded to be an Adventist, but the good seed, falling among thorns, was soon choked out and lost.

About the beginning of September last, a young man called at my door leaving an appointment to preach at our school-house that evening, to which I replied, "I will endeavor to attend." His arguments were so replete with Scripture evidence as to preclude all attempts at refutation from me; I could only say, "You are too literal, or too material in your perceptions"; still, he was prepared to defend these accusations from that Word which is Truth. From that time to the present, he has continued to labor, for the most part, among us, and his labors have been blest.

Respecting the immortality of the soul, I was early taught to imbibe that sentiment, which has descended from the antique ages of heathen philosophy, adopted and fostered by the church, through almost every period of her rise and decline, since the time of the apostles, till it has become a dogma of gigantic proportions. Being early impressed with these and kindred views, I have found it exceedingly difficult to disengage my mind from what I had taken for granted, as among the fundamental truths of God's Word. I asked, "Are these things so? Have I, these many years, been laboring under the false impression, that the commandments of men are the doctrines of Divine Inspiration?" For a solution of these, and similar queries, touching the end of the finally impenitent, a distinctive resurrection, etc,, etc., I have found it necessary to revert "to the law, and to the testimony"; and here, thanks be to the Great Giver of every good and perfect gift, light has sprung forth from its unfailing source, expelling the misty vapors of the mind, until I see as I never saw before,—a new glass seems added to the telescope of eternal truth.

God and eternity seem no longer shrouded in awful mystery. The immutable truths of God's Word through Christ, open up a bright prospect beyond the grave to all his faithful followers, who are looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

Questions for J. S. White by Wm. Chapin.

With reference to the Old Testament, it is said that "holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." In the gospel, it is said, that Christ had the Spirit without measure; and that his apostles received the Holy Ghost. It follows, then, that what we have from these sources on the great question of man's salvation, comes from the Holy Ghost. I may therefore let W. C. hold the conversation with H. G.

W. C. 1. Did "Christ that existed prior to his advent, as a separate person from the Father," suffer in the garden, expire on the cross, and lie three days and three nights in the heart of the earth?

H. G. I have said of this being, who was in due time called Christ, that, "In the beginning he laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of his hands." Heb. 1:10; Ps. 102:25. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." "He was in the world, and the world was made by him. He came unto his own and his own received him not. And the Word (Theos) was made flesh, and dwelt among us." I have also said that this being who became flesh died; that he poured out his soul unto death; that he was in the heart of the earth three days and nights; that he rose from the dead; that death has no dominion over him.

W. C. 2. We read in Gen. 1:1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Also, in Isa. 44:6, "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel and his Redeemer the Lord of host; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God." Also, 8th verse; "Is there a God beside me? Yea, there is no God; I know not any." Does the God spoken of in these Scriptures refer to God the Father, or to Christ the Son?

H. G. I have used all this language and much more of the same import. It should be borne in mind, however, that in Gen. 1:1, I used God in the plural, which the translators have put in the singular.

In Isaiah 44th, I spoke of God in contrast with the idols, or false gods, which men worshiped. In this relation there is but one God—one Deity—one Divinity. This one Deity is that which is to be worshiped, in contrast with all other deities, so called. The Deity is in the Father and in the Son, still it is the same, it is a unit. When spoken of as God, it is the one God beside whom there is no other. Some of the language I used in Isaiah 44th, I have applied to Christ; such as "Redeemer," the "First and the Last." I have also repeatedly said, that the being called Christ is God. I have said that the Father is God, and that he made the worlds, and that he made them by his Son. Now in all that I have said on this subject, I am not aware that I have contradicted myself, but if you think otherwise, then we must agree to differ in our judgment.

W. C. 3. If Christ is "from everlasting," is there any being older than the Son, or before him?

H. G. The whole verse reads thus: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." It will be plainly seen that I here spake of Christ. The word everlasting is not exactly the word that I used. I used the word as it is in the margin,—"From the days of eternity." This is what I have said of the Savior, the Redeemer of Israel.

In view of what I have said, W. C. inquires, Is there any being older than the Son, or before him? Whether there is, or is not, what I have said, I have said, and it is true. If it therefore follows that there is no being older than the Son, then let it be so. But I have nowhere told how old that being is who became flesh and dwelt among men. I have said that he was in the beginning; that all things were made by him; that by him God made the worlds; that he had glory with the Father before the world was; and that he became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich.

If I have failed to make men see that the being who was called Christ had an existence before he came in the flesh, it has not been intentional, but rather for the want of an ability. I have used words so plainly, that all admit, who believe that I have spoken at all on this subject, that Christ did pre-exist in the purpose of God. True, I have not used the word "pre-existence," and if I had, it would have been said that I meant pre-existence only in purpose. I have said of the Savior's existence, as a being before he came into the world, that he was in the beginning. I have used the personal terms, in several forms, I, he, him, who, whose, etc. These terms and others, I have used in speaking of him who "became poor that we might become rich." I cannot make the subject any plainer than I have made it from the record.

Notes by the Way.

On arriving at Portsmouth, I found that Sister Hanscomb died the day before I arrived, which was a disappointment, as the object of my visit was at that time to see her alive, which she so much desired. But she fell asleep in full hope of a speedy resurrection to eternal life. Held two meetings; and at Kennebunkport on Sunday, Jan. 6th, held three meetings. The third was a good breaking down time. Some six started to serve God. Some took the first step, to the great joy of Bro. Wm. Mitchell, who preaches to them. Back to Portsmouth the 8th. The brethren thought a protracted meeting was needed, and as Bro. Pratt's health forbade his laboring much, we commenced a bombardment, which resulted in three wounded the first day. The third day they gave up their weapons of warfare, and swore allegiance to the King of glory, and become submissive prisoners of hope. This stirred the enemy, and he sent in those that had familiar spirits to watch and report, and as I always hated the black flag of the Devil, I fired at it on my own hook to venture. This brought out more of the wizard company. They seemed very bold awhile, but soon got disgusted at our "calling sinners forward for prayers in a christian land," as they said. But that was not it. If God had not heard prayer, they would have kept their position in the front seats. But he did, for at every meeting the groans of the wounded sinner were heard; the Spirit of God searched hearts, and those wizards were affected to tears, and must yield or run. This is what disgusted them. God worked, and they could not help it. They retreated to the back part of the house, and had their influence among themselves; so much so that some of their captivated silly women went to sleep in our meeting. But the next bomb-shell woke them up, and some left suddenly. The young soldiers began to take their little slings and fight effectually. Their testimonies were as sharp as needles. They pricked many in the heart, whom bold professors could not touch. While we held the trowel in one hand and sword in the other, Bro. Pratt had loaded up a charge for wizards and demons, and Sabbath eve touched it off. This opened the eyes of many to see the power of the Devil to deceive, by tipping tables and rapping, etc. Among it all the rappers retreated to their own fort, got them a medium to repair up; but I think their leakey ship will go down, or never be a terror to that people again. Bro. Pratt is there with artillery enough for them, and he has fairly awakened to this subject, and as sick as he is will defend the fort.

Amid all this battle sinners kept coming in with a flag of truce, and laying down their weapons of warfare. Some fifteen were converted, besides backsliders that returned. The church is much encouraged. I baptized seven last Sabbath—three men, heads of families, all came out rejoicing. This set other denominations to work holding protracted meetings. I left for this place, Manchester, to stay a week.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 20, 1861.

Leaves from my Journal.

Friday, Feb. 1st. This morning we left our kind friends at Keeseville for our next appointment, which was at Champlain. Although we left them weeping, we hope to see them soon in the kingdom, rejoicing around the throne. We think there is seed sown in K. that will yet germinate, grow and bear fruit to the glory of God.

From K. we went sixteen miles by stage to Plattsburg, expecting to take the cars for Champlain, a distance of twenty-seven miles; but at 3 o'clock, when preparing to go to the R. R., the conductor came in and gave us information that the engine was out of order, and would not leave till the next day. As we had an appointment at C. for the evening, we felt anxious to be there; for it is one of our principles to never disappoint a congregation, if possible to be present. Accordingly, we chartered a team, and started; but we never rode over so much snow in the same distance before. A very strong wind had blown from opposite directions across the road, and piled up vast quantities of snow, making it very difficult to get along, especially when we met any one with a team. But by the blessing of the Lord we arrived in safety. It was said to us as we started, that we should turn over half a dozen times before our arrival; but our careful driver avoided all upsettings. It was our privilege to ride in company with Eld. Wright, an intelligent Baptist minister, with whom we had a very interesting conversation on the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, and the immediate personal coming of Christ. We found him a candid man, a lover of truth, who manifested a true christian spirit. He seemed convinced that our views are in harmony with the Bible, and remarked, "If you are right, I am wrong;" and the manner in which he spoke, indicated that he thought his own position much weaker than he had supposed.

When we arrived at Champlain, we found a congregation anxiously waiting for our arrival, fearing a disappointment. We were glad to find the desire to hear had increased since we were there before. A prominent lawyer in the place has opened his office for weekly meetings, and is convinced of the truth; others of the same profession are very much interested. Although the weather was cold, and the traveling bad, some came several miles to hear. One Dr. and his wife came seven miles and returned every evening. We found him an ardent lover of truth, and willing to embrace it as fast as presented to his understanding. At the close of the first meeting one requested prayers.

Sabbath, Feb. 3d. This morning we met for a love feast, and enjoyed a pleasant season. At noon, three were buried with Christ in baptism, and others resolved to follow their example soon. In the evening four rose for prayers, being satisfied that what they do must be done quickly. We closed our interesting meetings around the table of the Lord, commemorating his death and sufferings. We shall expect to hear more good news from Champlain. Here we met Bro. C. P. Dow, a faithful watchman, who is sounding an alarm to a careless world.

Monday, Feb. 4th. The mercury this morning is twenty-five degrees below zero, with an abundance of snow, so that the cars have only run once or twice during the past week between Rouse's Point and Montreal. We had some hope of getting through to M. from Moore's station, on the Ogdensburg road, but we were obliged to back out and go to Rouse's Point, and wait till six o'clock in the evening, when we left for Montreal, a distance of forty-four miles, arriving after midnight.

After riding several hours, an English gentleman (?) pulled out his old pipe, deliberately filled and lit it, and then entertained us with his filthy stinking tobacco smoke, rendering the atmosphere unfit for any to breathe, unless it be the fabled monsters of the infernal regions. After enduring it for some time, we went out and stood in the cold to get some pure air that had not been polluted by the poisonous fumes of tobacco. When we returned, he was still puffing away in a very leisurely manner, as though all were delighting in what he was doing. We finally said to him, "This smoke is very disagreeable to some," as there were several ladies present. He very coolly replied, "If you do not choose to smoke, it is no sign that others should not." After this gentle hint to mind our own business, we made the best of it we could, and were very thankful when he got through offering incense to Bacchus, and allowed us again to breathe air that had not been contaminated with tobacco smoke. We expect to be obliged to bear such disagreeable and disgusting things from wicked men; but it astonishes us that any one professing godliness should persevere in such a filthy habit as the use of tobacco, when required in the Scriptures to "Cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." We know of no habit so nasty as the one under consideration; and it is certain that its indulgence produces filthy imaginations and lustful desires, difficult to be resisted; and that those who use tobacco are not so easily reached with the gospel, and are much more likely to backslide after they have started. They have temptations to overcome, which do not trouble those who let this poisonous stimulant alone. Come, save your tobacco money and give it to the poor, and no longer encourage the boys to become tobacco chewers and smokers, by your example. Remember the habit is exceedingly disagreeable to those who do not use it, and your breath very offensive. When we meet a smoker in the street, we usually hold our breath when passing him, that we may not inhale his poisonous perfumes, with which he is polluting the surrounding atmosphere. May the Lord help all our readers, who are looking for the coming of Jesus, to resist and overcome this unfortunate habit.

When we arrived at the St. Lawrence river, the passengers were taken into some open stages for a three-mile midnight ride into the city. While crossing this noble stream, we fancied that we were having quite a life-like representation of Dr. Kane's arctic expedition. The snow, as we learned, was about five feet deep where it was not drifted. In order to get some idea of the road over the river, imagine yourself riding upon frozen ocean waves, covered with snow. We found it difficult to sit upon the seat, and finally yielded to the force of circumstances, and sat, or rather rolled, upon the bottom of the sleigh. In addition to this, we were obliged to face a cold, biting air. On either side of the road were small icebergs of various shapes and sizes. We were glad when we reached the city. As we rode through the streets, we noticed that we were frequently some three or four feet above the sidewalk; and when we arrived at the hotel, we had to look out a place to get down the snow bank, in order to enter the house, where, at about one o'clock in the morning, we were rejoiced to find a rest for the remainder of the night.

Tuesday, Feb. 5th. At five o'clock, our usual hour of rising, we aroused again to our morning duties. At early dawn we took a walk through the city, stepping in for a few moments to the great Catholic Cathedral; a very costly structure of stone, that will hold some seven thousand people. The wax candles were burning by the great altar, and the worshipers of the Virgin Mary were continually coming and going, crossing themselves with their holy water, and passing on to say their prayers. We admired their zeal but pitied their blindness. Montreal is a well built city, containing about one hundred thousand inhabitants. It is the largest in British America. The principal buildings are of granite, and present a fine appearance. It is a pleasant place in the summer, but quite different in the winter.

At half past eight o'clock, we started for the cars, leaving the depot at fifteen minutes past nine, one half hour behind time, and arrived safely at Richmond, a distance of seventy-three miles, between one and two o'clock. We then crossed the St. Francis river to Melbourne, and found a home at Bro. Gilman's. We remained here till Saturday noon, when we left for Danville, a distance of twelve miles.

When we left Montreal, we passed through the noted Victoria bridge, some two miles in length, built wholly of iron and stone. It is covered, and is the most remarkable work of the kind in the world. When at Melbourne, we became acquainted with Prof. J. H. Graham, teacher of mathematics in St. Francis College at Richmond. He came over to meeting, and was much interested in the evidences of the Lord's coming. He is an amiable man, and appears to be a lover of truth. Our meetings at Melbourne were very much interrupted by a terrible snow storm, said to surpass any for more than twenty years. It usually snows some every day, but on the 7th and 8th insts. we had the king of snow storms. The snow drifted very badly, and on Friday morning the mercury was said to be forty-five degrees below zero! We thought we had been acquainted with winter weather before; but this capped the climax. We learned that a lady school teacher froze her feet badly while in her school room. In the evening a few assembled at Bro. Gilman's, and we had a good meeting. Two requested prayers.

During the winter, we learn that the weight of snow upon the houses has broken through the roofs of some, and killed some of the people within. During this last storm, eight trains of cars were stuck fast in the snow between Island Pond and Montreal. We heard that some of them were without food for twenty-four hours, and were obliged to burn up the fences for wood. If we had been any later, we should have been in the same company. We felt thankful to the Lord for providing us a good home during the storm.

As no trains had broken through for several days, we were obliged to go to Danville on Saturday by private conveyance, walking a good part of the way, on account of the snow; but we arrived in safety at Bro. Porter's happy pilgrim home, Feb. 11th, where we now are.

☞ We learn that Bro. Himes has had a relapse, and has concluded finally to go to the "Cure" in Dansville. May the Lord bless and give him health. Letters on business for the "Voice" may be sent to Boston as usual, but personal communications to Dansville, N. Y. He will be glad to hear from old friends.

The Holy Spirit.

What is the Holy Spirit? How are we to be filled with it? How can we tell the difference between the operation of the Holy Spirit and the spirit of Mesmerism?

T. M. Preble.

The foregoing are important questions. We may not be able to give an answer satisfactory to all, but will endeavor to give our own views in as plain a manner as we can, praying the Lord to direct us in harmony with his word. The subject is one that has had no small share of our attention for several years, and one on which our mind is now at rest. Some years since we were much perplexed on this point, and thrown into doubts and darkness through fear of being influenced by Mesmerism, in religious meetings; but through the mercy of God we experienced a joyful relief, and have not been troubled any since. We often find people in the same perplexing state of mind we felt at the time to which we have referred. If we can say any thing to aid them in escaping from "Doubting Castle," we shall be thankful for the privilege."

Holy Spirit and Holy Ghost mean the same thing; but the former is the better form of expression, and is adopted in the new translation by the American Bible Union. We would remark in passing, that the word ghost occurs eleven times in the Old Testament, nine of which are from a word which signifies, "wasted away,"—literally, expired, and is thus rendered in the new translation by the American Bible Union. The other two examples are from words which mean, "breathed out the breath." All of these relate to death, with no intimation that when a man gives "up the ghost," any thing more is meant than that he died. The word rendered spirit in the O. T. is ruach, and in the N. T. is pneuma. These words are used in four senses:—1, a being; 2, a state of mind; 3, the atmosphere we breathe; 4, an influence. Angels are examples of the first; but they are tangible, literal organisms, as are all intelligent beings. As examples of the second use, we read of the "proud in spirit," and those who have a "haughty spirit." When used in the third sense, the words denote the atmosphere we breathe, and is then denominated "the breath of lives;" as when David says;—"Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104:29. Again, when speaking of man, he says:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146:4. The fourth use, which is the one we are to consider, we assume represents an influence or power proceeding from a being. The first and third uses represent material agents; the second and fourth only results arising from active beings.

In answer to the question, "What is the Holy Spirit?" we would remark,

1st. It is not the word, or Bible, because the receiving of the word and the Holy Spirit are spoken of as separate things. In Acts 8:14–15, we read:—"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." In this case, they "had received the word," but after this, "Peter and John" prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." This shows clearly that the reception of the Holy Spirit may be separate from the word, and be subsequently received; otherwise, this passage appears to be meaningless. Again, in 2 Pet. 1:21, Peter says:—"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." This passage forever settles the point that the Spirit and word are wholly independent of each other; or are in no sense identical; but, as we shall find, agree with each other.

It is very evident that what moves a man to write is not that which he writes. In other words, the man who writes is not the book written. He is a person by himself; the book written is an object distinct from the man, and may exist as such when he is dead; and that which "moved" him to write is neither the man nor the book, and may exist and act independent of either, as well after their destruction, as before their existence; for no one who believes the Bible would claim for a moment that this Holy Spirit did not exist till after the Scriptures were written; for in such a case, there would be no Spirit to move "holy men of God" to write; consequently, the word could not be written by its influence, and then it would follow that there is neither word nor Spirit. Without pursuing this point further, we think all can see plainly that the Spirit is an independent agent moving holy men to write that which God would speak to the inhabitants of this world.

Another office of this Spirit is to comfort the saints after they have obeyed his commandments. Says the apostle, "We are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him."—Acts 5:32. Says Jesus, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth."—John 14:16–17. This passage shows again that the Spirit is something distinct from the word; for Jesus had already spoken the word to his disciples; but this Spirit is "another Comforter," promised to his children. This point is so clear, that we do not see how additional testimony can make it plainer.

In our next, we will continue the examination.

The Epistle to the Laodiceans.

In Col. 4:16, Paul gives the following instruction to the Colossians:—"And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea."—This shows that there was an epistle from Laodicea, which Paul desired to be read to the Colossians, as well as the one written to them. In Dr. Clarke's commentary may be found a translation of what purports to be the epistle to which Paul refers. Dr. C. says in reference to it:—

"I give it here from the best [Latin] copies; and add a literal translation, that the curious, whether learned or unlearned, may have what some have believed to be authentic, and what has doubtless existed, in one form or other, from a very remote antiquity."

"The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Laodiceans.

"1. Paul an apostle, not from men, nor by men, but by Jesus Christ, to the brethren which are in Laodicea.

"2. Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. I give thanks to Christ in all my prayers, that ye continue and persevere in good works; waiting for the promise in the day of judgement.

"4. Be not troubled with the vain speeches of certain who pretend to the truth, that they may draw away your hearts from the truth of the gospel which was preached by me.

5. And may God grant that those who are of me, may be led forward to the perfection of the truth of the gospel, and perform the benignity of works which become the salvation of eternal life.

"6. And now my bonds are manifest, which I suffer in Christ; and in them I rejoice and am glad.

"7. And this shall turn to my perpetual salvation, by means of your prayers, and the assistance of the Holy Spirit, whether they be for life or for death.

"8. For my life is to live in Christ; and to die will be joyous.

"9. And may our Lord himself grant you his mercy; that ye may have the same love, and be of one mind.

"10. Therefore, my beloved, as ye have heard of the coming of the Lord, so think and act in the fear of the Lord, and it shall be to you eternal life.

"11. For it is the Lord that worketh in you.

"12. Whatsoever you do, do it without sin, and do what is best.

"13. Beloved, rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, and beware of filthy lucre.

"14. Let all your prayers be manifest before God.

"15. And be firm in the sentiments you have of Christ. And whatsoever is perfect, and true, and modest, and chaste, and just, and amiable, that do.

"16. And whatsoever ye have heard, and received, retain in your hearts, and it shall tend to your peace.

"17. All the saints salute you.

"18. Salute all the brethren with a holy kiss.

"19. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

"20. And cause this epistle to be read to the Colossians; and that to the Colossians to be read to you.

To the Laodiceans, written from Rome, by Tychicus and Onesimus."

Melchisedec.

A friend wishes for an answer to the following questions through the "Crisis":—

1st. Who was Melchisedec?

3d. Did he exist before the foundation of the world?

Various have been the conjectures advanced in regard to the first question. Some have supposed that it was Enoch; others that it was Shem, the son of Noah, and others that it was the Son of God; but all these suppositions prove nothing. The only reliable answer that can be given must be in harmony with the Scripture. The question undoubtedly arises from the account of him as given by Paul in Heb. 7:3. "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life: but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually." If this text teaches that Melchisedec had no father or mother, and that he had no beginning of days, or end of life, then the second question is answered; he not only existed before the foundation of the world, but coeternal with God; and yet he is called a man,—"without end of life,"—then he will live as long as God lives; and we must come to the legitimate conclusion from the premise, there are two self-existent Gods, or beings that never had a beginning, and never will cease to live. "He abideth a priest continually," that is, as long as he lives; hence we have two priests officiating at the same time, and will continue to all eternity.

The above conclusions are absurd, and grow out of a false premise in relation to Melchisedec's having no father, or mother, or beginning of days. To get a right understanding of this, it is necessary that we take into consideration the subject under discussion by the apostle. The subject properly commences with the first verse of the fifth chap: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: and no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but He that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." By this we learn that the subject that Paul is discoursing upon, is the calling and ordaining of priests; and that Christ was called of God and made a priest after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron. The argument of Paul in his discourse goes to show, first, that if the priesthood is changed there must be a change of the law. Chap. 7:11—12,—"If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." Second, that the priesthood is changed from the order of Aaron to that of Melchisedec, chap. 7:21, 22,—"For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec: by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament." In the first verse of the 8th chapter we have the whole argument summed up:—"Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: we have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." This gives us a view of what Paul was trying to prove; namely: that the priesthood was changed from the Aaronic order to that of Melchisedec.

Now we are prepared to examine in relation to Melchisedec and his order of priesthood in contradistinction to the Aaronic. The claim to the office of priest, under the Aaronic order, was in the pedigree. The Jewish priests were obliged to produce an exact genealogy of their families, showing that they were of the tribe of Levi, before they were allowed to officiate as priests. When this was produced they could act as priest, whether they were righteous or not. To show that the order of Melchisedec is more perfect than that of Aaron, Paul commences by giving us the signification of the name of Melchisedec. Chap. 7:1, 2,—"For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the Most High God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first, being by interpretation king of righteousness, and after that also king of Salem, which is, king of peace." This man was king of Salem. His name interpreted, signifies, "First, king of righteousness, and after that king of peace." It was a name given to a man to signify the position that he occupied; as Abraham was given in place of Abram, to signify that he was a father of many nations; and as Israel was given to Jacob, to signify one of faith; so Melchisedec was a name given to signify one that was king of righteousness, and a priest of God at the same time. Then to show that this order of priesthood is not dependent upon the tribe of Levi, he says, that Melchisedec was priest of the Most High God, "Without father, without mother, without descent, (Margin, pedigree,) having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils."

Paul explains what he means by saying without father, or mother, beginning of days, or end of life; when he says he is "without descent," or as the margin reads, without pedigree, or genealogy; that is, this man was called to be priest of God, without proving that he was of some special tribe, for he had no genealogy, or pedigree, by which he could show who his father or mother were, consequently he could not tell when he began life, and there is no account of the man to show when he died. Hence, so far as his genealogy is concerned, he is without father or mother, beginning of days or end of life.

Now we notice the last clause of the verse: "But made like unto the Son of Doubts Dispelled.

Concerning the opinions of the Adventists, as a religious body, I had been exceedingly skeptical; I did not go to hear them preach, nor had I read their writings to any extent, nor sought information respecting them. Filled with prejudice, I was led to think some visionist, having left the old, established paths, was wandering amid the mazes of conjecture in his attempt to play the prophet. But in Feb., 1860, Eld. I. C. Wellcome held a series of meetings at this place, during which I was almost persuaded to be an Adventist, but the good seed, falling among thorns, was soon choked out and lost.

About the beginning of September last, a young man called at my door leaving an appointment to preach at our school-house that evening, to which I replied, "I will endeavor to attend." His arguments were so replete with Scripture evidence as to preclude all attempts at refutation from me; I could only say, "You are too literal, or too material in your perceptions"; still, he was prepared to defend these accusations from that Word which is Truth. From that time to the present, he has continued to labor, for the most part, among us, and his labors have been blest.

Respecting the immortality of the soul, I was early taught to imbibe that sentiment, which has descended from the antique ages of heathen philosophy, adopted and fostered by the church, through almost every period of her rise and decline, since the time of the apostles, till it has become a dogma of gigantic proportions. Being early impressed with these and kindred views, I have found it exceedingly difficult to disengage my mind from what I had taken for granted, as among the fundamental truths of God's Word. I asked, "Are these things so? Have I, these many years, been laboring under the false impression, that the commandments of men are the doctrines of Divine Inspiration?" For a solution of these, and similar queries, touching the end of the finally impenitent, a distinctive resurrection, etc., etc., I have found it necessary to revert "to the law, and to the testimony"; and here, thanks be to the Great Giver of every good and perfect gift, light has sprung forth from its unfailing source, expelling the misty vapors of the mind, until I see as I never saw before,—a new glass seems added to the telescope of eternal truth.

God and eternity seem no longer shrouded in awful mystery. The immutable truths of God's Word through Christ, open up a bright prospect beyond the grave to all his faithful followers, who are looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Questions for J. S. White by Wm. Chapin.

With reference to the Old Testament, it is said that "holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." In the gospel, it is said, that Christ had the Spirit without measure; and that his apostles received the Holy Ghost. It follows, then, that what we have from these sources on the great question of man's salvation, comes from the Holy Ghost. I may therefore let W. C. hold the conversation with H. G.

W. C. 1. Did "Christ that existed prior to his advent, as a separate person from the Father," suffer in the garden, expire on the cross, and lie three days and three nights in the heart of the earth?

H. G. I have said of this being, who was in due time called Christ, that, "In the beginning he laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of his hands." Heb. 1:10; Ps. 102:25. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." "He was in the world, and the world was made by him. He came unto his own and his own received him not. And the Word (Theos) was made flesh, and dwelt among us." I have also said that this being who became flesh died; that he poured out his soul unto death; that he was in the heart of the earth three days and nights; that he rose from the dead; that death has no dominion over him.

W. C. 2. We read in Gen. 1:1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Also, in Isa. 44:6, "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel and his Redeemer the Lord of host; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God." Also, 8th verse; "Is there a God beside me? Yea, there is no God; I know not any." Does the God spoken of in these Scriptures refer to God the Father, or to Christ the Son?

H. G. I have used all this language and much more of the same import. It should be borne in mind, however, that in Gen. 1:1, I used God in the plural, which the translators have put in the singular.

In Isaiah 44th, I spoke of God in contrast with the idols, or false gods, which men worshiped. In this relation there is but one God—one Deity—one Divinity. This one Deity is that which is to be worshiped, in contrast with all other deities, so called. The Deity is in the Father and in the Son, still it is the same, it is a unit. When spoken of as God, it is the one God beside whom there is no other. Some of the language I used in Isaiah 44th, I have applied to Christ; such as "Redeemer," the "First and the Last." I have also repeatedly said, that the being called Christ is God. I have said that the Father is God, and that he made the worlds, and that he made them by his Son. Now in all that I have said on this subject, I am not aware that I have contradicted myself, but if you think otherwise, then we must agree to differ in our judgment.

W. C. 3. If Christ is "from everlasting," is there any being older than the Son, or before him?

H. G. The whole verse reads thus: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." It will be plainly seen that I here spake of Christ. The word everlasting is not exactly the word that I used. I used the word as it is in the margin,—"From the days of eternity." This is what I have said of the Savior, the Redeemer of Israel.

In view of what I have said, W. C. inquires, Is there any being older than the Son, or before him? Whether there is, or is not, what I have said, I have said, and it is true. If it therefore follows that there is no being older than the Son, then let it be so. But I have nowhere told how old that being is who became flesh and dwelt among men. I have said that he was in the beginning; that all things were made by him; that by him God made the worlds; that he had glory with the Father before the world was; and that he became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich.

If I have failed to make men see that the being who was called Christ had an existence before he came in the flesh, it has not been intentional, but rather for the want of an ability. I have used words so plainly, that all admit, who believe that I have spoken at all on this subject, that Christ did pre-exist in the purpose of God. True, I have not used the word "pre-existence," and if I had, it would have been said that I meant pre-existence only in purpose. I have said of the Savior's existence, as a being before he came into the world, that he was in the beginning. I have used the personal terms, in several forms, I, he, him, who, whose, etc. These terms and others, I have used in speaking of him who "became poor that we might become rich." I cannot make the subject any plainer than I have made it from the record. J. S. White.

Notes by the Way.

On arriving at Portsmouth, I found that Sister Hanscomb died the day before I arrived, which was a disappointment, as the object of my visit was at that time to see her alive, which she so much desired. But she fell asleep in full hope of a speedy resurrection to eternal life. Held two meetings; and at Kennebunkport on Sunday, Jan. 6th, held three meetings. The third was a good breaking down time. Some six started to serve God. Some took the first step, to the great joy of Bro. Wm. Mitchell, who preaches to them. Back to Portsmouth the 8th. The brethren thought a protracted meeting was needed, and as Bro. Pratt's health forbade his laboring much, we commenced a bombardment, which resulted in three wounded the first day. The third day they gave up their weapons of warfare, and swore allegiance to the King of glory, and become submissive prisoners of hope. This stirred the enemy, and he sent in those that had familiar spirits to watch and report, and as I always hated the black flag of the Devil, I fired at it on my own hook to venture. This brought out more of the wizard company. They seemed very bold awhile, but soon got disgusted at our "calling sinners forward for prayers in a christian land," as they said. But that was not it. If God had not heard prayer, they would have kept their position in the front seats. But he did, for at every meeting the groans of the wounded sinner were heard; the Spirit of God searched hearts, and those wizards were affected to tears, and must yield or run. This is what disgusted them. God worked, and they could not help it. They retreated to the back part of the house, and had their influence among themselves; so much so that some of their captivated silly women went to sleep in our meeting. But the next bomb-shell woke them up, and some left suddenly. The young soldiers began to take their little slings and fight effectually. Their testimonies were as sharp as needles. They pricked many in the heart, whom bold professors could not touch. While we held the trowel in one hand and sword in the other, Bro. Pratt had loaded up a charge for wizards and demons, and Sabbath eve touched it off. This opened the eyes of many to see the power of the Devil to deceive, by tipping tables and rapping, etc. Among it all the rappers retreated to their own fort, got them a medium to repair up; but I think their leakey ship will go down, or never be a terror to that people again. Bro. Pratt is there with artillery enough for them, and he has fairly awakened to this subject, and as sick as he is will defend the fort.

Amid all this battle sinners kept coming in with a flag of truce, and laying down their weapons of warfare. Some fifteen were converted, besides backsliders that returned. The church is much encouraged. I baptized seven last Sabbath—three men, heads of families, all came out rejoicing. This set other denominations to work holding protracted meetings. I left for this place, Manchester, to stay a week. Hiram Munger.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 20, 1861.

Leaves from my Journal.

Friday, Feb. 1st. This morning we left our kind friends at Keeseville for our next appointment, which was at Champlain. Although we left them weeping, we hope to see them soon in the kingdom, rejoicing around the throne. We think there is seed sown in K. that will yet germinate, grow and bear fruit to the glory of God.

From K. we went sixteen miles by stage to Plattsburg, expecting to take the cars for Champlain, a distance of twenty-seven miles; but at 3 o'clock, when preparing to go to the R. R., the conductor came in and gave us information that the engine was out of order, and would not leave till the next day. As we had an appointment at C. for the evening, we felt anxious to be there; for it is one of our principles to never disappoint a congregation, if possible to be present. Accordingly, we chartered a team, and started; but we never rode over so much snow in the same distance before. A very strong wind had blown from opposite directions across the road, and piled up vast quantities of snow, making it very difficult to get along, especially when we met any one with a team. But by the blessing of the Lord we arrived in safety. It was said to us as we started, that we should turn over half a dozen times before our arrival; but our careful driver avoided all upsettings. It was our privilege to ride in company with Eld. Wright, an intelligent Baptist minister, with whom we had a very interesting conversation on the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, and the immediate personal coming of Christ. We found him a candid man, a lover of truth, who manifested a true christian spirit. He seemed convinced that our views are in harmony with the Bible, and remarked, "If you are right, I am wrong;" and the manner in which he spoke, indicated that he thought his own position much weaker than he had supposed.

When we arrived at Champlain, we found a congregation anxiously waiting for our arrival, fearing a disappointment. We were glad to find the desire to hear had increased since we were there before. A prominent lawyer in the place has opened his office for weekly meetings, and is convinced of the truth; others of the same profession are very much interested. Although the weather was cold, and the traveling bad, some came several miles to hear. One Dr. and his wife came seven miles and returned every evening. We found him an ardent lover of truth, and willing to embrace it as fast as presented to his understanding. At the close of the first meeting one requested prayers.

Sabbath, Feb. 3d. This morning we met for a love feast, and enjoyed a pleasant season. At noon, three were buried with Christ in baptism, and others resolved to follow their example soon. In the evening four rose for prayers, being satisfied that what they do must be done quickly. We closed our interesting meetings around the table of the Lord, commemorating his death and sufferings. We shall expect to hear more good news from Champlain. Here we met Bro. C. P. Dow, a faithful watchman, who is sounding an alarm to a careless world.

Monday, Feb. 4th. The mercury this morning is twenty-five degrees below zero, with an abundance of snow, so that the cars have only run once or twice during the past week between Rouse's Point and Montreal. We had some hope of getting through to M. from Moore's station, on the Ogdensburg road, but we were obliged to back out and go to Rouse's Point, and wait till six o'clock in the evening, when we left for Montreal, a distance of forty-four miles, arriving after midnight.

After riding several hours, an English gentleman (?) pulled out his old pipe, deliberately filled and lit it, and then entertained us with his filthy stinking tobacco smoke, rendering the atmosphere unfit for any to breathe, unless it be the fabled monsters of the infernal regions. After enduring it for some time, we went out and stood in the cold to get some pure air that had not been polluted by the poisonous fumes of tobacco. When we returned, he was still puffing away in a very leisurely manner, as though all were delighting in what he was doing. We finally said to him, "This smoke is very disagreeable to some," as there were several ladies present. He very coolly replied, "If you do not choose to smoke, it is no sign that others should not." After this gentle hint to mind our own business, we made the best of it we could, and were very thankful when he got through offering incense to Bacchus, and allowed us again to breathe air that had not been contaminated with tobacco smoke. We expect to be obliged to bear such disagreeable and disgusting things from wicked men; but it astonishes us that any one professing godliness should persevere in such a filthy habit as the use of tobacco, when required in the Scriptures to "Cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." We know of no habit so nasty as the one under consideration; and it is certain that its indulgence produces filthy imaginations and lustful desires, difficult to be resisted; and that those who use tobacco are not so easily reached with the gospel, and are much more likely to backslide after they have started. They have temptations to overcome, which do not trouble those who let this poisonous stimulant alone. Come, save your tobacco money and give it to the poor, and no longer encourage the boys to become tobacco chewers and smokers, by your example. Remember the habit is exceedingly disagreeable to those who do not use it, and your breath very offensive. When we meet a smoker in the street, we usually hold our breath when passing him, that we may not inhale his poisonous perfumes, with which he is polluting the surrounding atmosphere. May the Lord help all our readers, who are looking for the coming of Jesus, to resist and overcome this unfortunate habit.

When we arrived at the St. Lawrence river, the passengers were taken into some open stages for a three-mile midnight ride into the city. While crossing this noble stream, we fancied that we were having quite a life-like representation of Dr. Kane's arctic expedition. The snow, as we learned, was about five feet deep where it was not drifted. In order to get some idea of the road over the river, imagine yourself riding upon frozen ocean waves, covered with snow. We found it difficult to sit upon the seat, and finally yielded to the force of circumstances, and sat, or rather rolled, upon the bottom of the sleigh. In addition to this, we were obliged to face a cold, biting air. On either side of the road were small icebergs of various shapes and sizes. We were glad when we reached the city. As we rode through the streets, we noticed that we were frequently some three or four feet above the sidewalk; and when we arrived at the hotel, we had to look out a place to get down the snow bank, in order to enter the house, where, at about one o'clock in the morning, we were rejoiced to find a rest for the remainder of the night.

Tuesday, Feb. 5th. At five o'clock, our usual hour of rising, we aroused again to our morning duties. At early dawn we took a walk through the city, stepping in for a few moments to the great Catholic Cathedral; a very costly structure of stone, that will hold some seven thousand people. The wax candles were burning by the great altar, and the worshipers of the Virgin Mary were continually coming and going, crossing themselves with their holy water, and passing on to say their prayers. We admired their zeal but pitied their blindness. Montreal is a well built city, containing about one hundred thousand inhabitants. It is the largest in British America. The principal buildings are of granite, and present a fine appearance. It is a pleasant place in the summer, but quite different in the winter.

At half past eight o'clock, we started for the cars, leaving the depot at fifteen minutes past nine, one half hour behind time, and arrived safely at Richmond, a distance of seventy-three miles, between one and two o'clock. We then crossed the St. Francis river to Melbourne, and found a home at Bro. Gilman's. We remained here till Saturday noon, when we left for Danville, a distance of twelve miles.

When we left Montreal, we passed through the noted Victoria bridge, some two miles in length, built wholly of iron and stone. It is covered, and is the most remarkable work of the kind in the world. When at Melbourne, we became acquainted with Prof. J. H. Graham, teacher of mathematics in St. Francis College at Richmond. He came over to meeting, and was much interested in the evidences of the Lord's coming. He is an amiable man, and appears to be a lover of truth. Our meetings at Melbourne were very much interrupted by a terrible snow storm, said to surpass any for more than twenty years. It usually snows some every day, but on the 7th and 8th insts. we had the king of snow storms. The snow drifted very badly, and on Friday morning the mercury was said to be forty-five degrees below zero! We thought we had been acquainted with winter weather before; but this capped the climax. We learned that a lady school teacher froze her feet badly while in her school room. In the evening a few assembled at Bro. Gilman's, and we had a good meeting. Two requested prayers.

During the winter, we learn that the weight of snow upon the houses has broken through the roofs of some, and killed some of the people within. During this last storm, eight trains of cars were stuck fast in the snow between Island Pond and Montreal. We heard that some of them were without food for twenty-four hours, and were obliged to burn up the fences for wood. If we had been any later, we should have been in the same company. We felt thankful to the Lord for providing us a good home during the storm.

As no trains had broken through for several days, we were obliged to go to Danville on Saturday by private conveyance, walking a good part of the way, on account of the snow; but we arrived in safety at Bro. Porter's happy pilgrim home, Feb. 11th, where we now are.

☞ We learn that Bro. Himes has had a relapse, and has concluded finally to go to the "Cure" in Dansville. May the Lord bless and give him health. Letters on business for the "Voice" may be sent to Boston as usual, but personal communications to Dansville, N. Y. He will be glad to hear from old friends.

The Holy Spirit.

What is the Holy Spirit? How are we to be filled with it? How can we tell the difference between the operation of the Holy Spirit and the spirit of Mesmerism? T. M. Preble.

The foregoing are important questions. We may not be able to give an answer satisfactory to all, but will endeavor to give our own views in as plain a manner as we can, praying the Lord to direct us in harmony with his word. The subject is one that has had no small share of our attention for several years, and one on which our mind is now at rest. Some years since we were much perplexed on this point, and thrown into doubts and darkness through fear of being influenced by Mesmerism, in religious meetings; but through the mercy of God we experienced a joyful relief, and have not been troubled any since. We often find people in the same perplexing state of mind we felt at the time to which we have referred. If we can say any thing to aid them in escaping from "Doubting Castle," we shall be thankful for the privilege."

Holy Spirit and Holy Ghost mean the same thing; but the former is the better form of expression, and is adopted in the new translation by the American Bible Union. We would remark in passing, that the word ghost occurs eleven times in the Old Testament, nine of which are from a word which signifies, "wasted away,"—literally, expired, and is thus rendered in the new translation by the American Bible Union. The other two examples are from words which mean, "breathed out the breath." All of these relate to death, with no intimation that when a man gives "up the ghost," any thing more is meant than that he died. The word rendered spirit in the O. T. is ruach, and in the N. T. is pneuma. These words are used in four senses:—1, a being; 2, a state of mind; 3, the atmosphere we breathe; 4, an influence. Angels are examples of the first; but they are tangible, literal organisms, as are all intelligent beings. As examples of the second use, we read of the "proud in spirit," and those who have a "haughty spirit." When used in the third sense, the words denote the atmosphere we breathe, and is then denominated "the breath of lives;" as when David says;—"Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104:29. Again, when speaking of man, he says:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146:4. The fourth use, which is the one we are to consider, we assume represents an influence or power proceeding from a being. The first and third uses represent material agents; the second and fourth only results arising from active beings.

In answer to the question, "What is the Holy Spirit?" we would remark,

1st. It is not the word, or Bible, because the receiving of the word and the Holy Spirit are spoken of as separate things. In Acts 8:14–15, we read:—"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." In this case, they "had received the word," but after this, "Peter and John" prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." This shows clearly that the reception of the Holy Spirit may be separate from the word, and be subsequently received; otherwise, this passage appears to be meaningless. Again, in 2 Pet. 1:21, Peter says:—"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." This passage forever settles the point that the Spirit and word are wholly independent of each other; or are in no sense identical; but, as we shall find, agree with each other.

It is very evident that what moves a man to write is not that which he writes. In other words, the man who writes is not the book written. He is a person by himself; the book written is an object distinct from the man, and may exist as such when he is dead; and that which "moved" him to write is neither the man nor the book, and may exist and act independent of either, as well after their destruction, as before their existence; for no one who believes the Bible would claim for a moment that this Holy Spirit did not exist till after the Scriptures were written; for in such a case, there would be no Spirit to move "holy men of God" to write; consequently, the word could not be written by its influence, and then it would follow that there is neither word nor Spirit. Without pursuing this point further, we think all can see plainly that the Spirit is an independent agent moving holy men to write that which God would speak to the inhabitants of this world.

Another office of this Spirit is to comfort the saints after they have obeyed his commandments. Says the apostle, "We are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him."—Acts 5:32. Says Jesus, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth."—John 14:16–17. This passage shows again that the Spirit is something distinct from the word; for Jesus had already spoken the word to his disciples; but this Spirit is "another Comforter," promised to his children. This point is so clear, that we do not see how additional testimony can make it plainer.

In our next, we will continue the examination.

The Epistle to the Laodiceans.

In Col. 4:16, Paul gives the following instruction to the Colossians:—"And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea."—This shows that there was an epistle from Laodicea, which Paul desired to be read to the Colossians, as well as the one written to them. In Dr. Clarke's commentary may be found a translation of what purports to be the epistle to which Paul refers. Dr. C. says in reference to it:—

"I give it here from the best [Latin] copies; and add a literal translation, that the curious, whether learned or unlearned, may have what some have believed to be authentic, and what has doubtless existed, in one form or other, from a very remote antiquity."

"The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Laodiceans.

"1. Paul an apostle, not from men, nor by men, but by Jesus Christ, to the brethren which are in Laodicea.

"2. Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. I give thanks to Christ in all my prayers, that ye continue and persevere in good works; waiting for the promise in the day of judgement.

"4. Be not troubled with the vain speeches of certain who pretend to the truth, that they may draw away your hearts from the truth of the gospel which was preached by me.

5. And may God grant that those who are of me, may be led forward to the perfection of the truth of the gospel, and perform the benignity of works which become the salvation of eternal life.

"6. And now my bonds are manifest, which I suffer in Christ; and in them I rejoice and am glad.

"7. And this shall turn to my perpetual salvation, by means of your prayers, and the assistance of the Holy Spirit, whether they be for life or for death.

"8. For my life is to live in Christ; and to die will be joyous.

"9. And may our Lord himself grant you his mercy; that ye may have the same love, and be of one mind.

"10. Therefore, my beloved, as ye have heard of the coming of the Lord, so think and act in the fear of the Lord, and it shall be to you eternal life.

"11. For it is the Lord that worketh in you.

"12. Whatsoever you do, do it without sin, and do what is best.

"13. Beloved, rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, and beware of filthy lucre.

"14. Let all your prayers be manifest before God.

"15. And be firm in the sentiments you have of Christ. And whatsoever is perfect, and true, and modest, and chaste, and just, and amiable, that do.

"16. And whatsoever ye have heard, and received, retain in your hearts, and it shall tend to your peace.

"17. All the saints salute you.

"18. Salute all the brethren with a holy kiss.

"19. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

"20. And cause this epistle to be read to the Colossians; and that to the Colossians to be read to you.

To the Laodiceans, written from Rome, by Tychicus and Onesimus."

For the Crisis.

Melchisedec.

A friend wishes for an answer to the following questions through the "Crisis":—

1st. Who was Melchisedec?

3d. Did he exist before the foundation of the world?

Various have been the conjectures advanced in regard to the first question. Some have supposed that it was Enoch; others that it was Shem, the son of Noah, and others that it was the Son of God; but all these suppositions prove nothing. The only reliable answer that can be given must be in harmony with the Scripture. The question undoubtedly arises from the account of him as given by Paul in Heb. 7:3. "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life: but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually." If this text teaches that Melchisedec had no father or mother, and that he had no beginning of days, or end of life, then the second question is answered; he not only existed before the foundation of the world, but coeternal with God; and yet he is called a man,—"without end of life,"—then he will live as long as God lives; and we must come to the legitimate conclusion from the premise, there are two self-existent Gods, or beings that never had a beginning, and never will cease to live. "He abideth a priest continually," that is, as long as he lives; hence we have two priests officiating at the same time, and will continue to all eternity.

The above conclusions are absurd, and grow out of a false premise in relation to Melchisedec's having no father, or mother, or beginning of days. To get a right understanding of this, it is necessary that we take into consideration the subject under discussion by the apostle. The subject properly commences with the first verse of the fifth chap: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: and no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but He that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." By this we learn that the subject that Paul is discoursing upon, is the calling and ordaining of priests; and that Christ was called of God and made a priest after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron. The argument of Paul in his discourse goes to show, first, that if the priesthood is changed there must be a change of the law. Chap. 7:11–12,—"If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." Second, that the priesthood is changed from the order of Aaron to that of Melchisedec, chap. 7:21, 22,—"For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec: by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament." In the first verse of the 8th chapter we have the whole argument summed up:—"Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: we have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." This gives us a view of what Paul was trying to prove; namely: that the priesthood was changed from the Aaronic order to that of Melchisedec.

Now we are prepared to examine in relation to Melchisedec and his order of priesthood in contradistinction to the Aaronic. The claim to the office of priest, under the Aaronic order, was in the pedigree. The Jewish priests were obliged to produce an exact genealogy of their families, showing that they were of the tribe of Levi, before they were allowed to officiate as priests. When this was produced they could act as priest, whether they were righteous or not. To show that the order of Melchisedec is more perfect than that of Aaron, Paul commences by giving us the signification of the name of Melchisedec. Chap. 7:1, 2,—"For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the Most High God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first, being by interpretation king of righteousness, and after that also king of Salem, which is, king of peace." This man was king of Salem. His name interpreted, signifies, "First, king of righteousness, and after that king of peace." It was a name given to a man to signify the position that he occupied; as Abraham was given in place of Abram, to signify that he was a father of many nations; and as Israel was given to Jacob, to signify one of faith; so Melchisedec was a name given to signify one that was king of righteousness, and a priest of God at the same time. Then to show that this order of priesthood is not dependent upon the tribe of Levi, he says, that Melchisedec was priest of the Most High God, "Without father, without mother, without descent, (Margin, pedigree,) having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils."

Paul explains what he means by saying without father, or mother, beginning of days, or end of life; when he says he is "without descent," or as the margin reads, without pedigree, or genealogy; that is, this man was called to be priest of God, without proving that he was of some special tribe, for he had no genealogy, or pedigree, by which he could show who his father or mother were, consequently he could not tell when he began life, and there is no account of the man to show when he died. Hence, so far as his genealogy is concerned, he is without father or mother, beginning of days or end of life.

Now we notice the last clause of the verse: "But made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually." Under the Aaronic order they must prove their genealogy, and were not allowed to commence until they were thirty years old, hence they must prove when they commenced life, and then they were not allowed to continue as priests after they were fifty years old.—Num. 8: 24, 25. "But this man abideth a priest continually"; that is, as long as he lives. Christ being made a priest after this ORDER shows:—

1st. That there was no necessity of his being of the tribe of Levi. Thus Paul answers an objection that might have been in the minds of some as to Christ being priest.

2d. Being of the order of Melchisedec, he could, or must be priest and king at the same time. The priests under the Aaronic order could hold but one office.

3d. Under the Aaronic order at the age of fifty they must cease to officiate, but under this order they remained in office without any regard to age. So Christ can continue priest without any regard to his age.

Who Melchisedec was cannot be told from the fact that Paul says there is no pedigree or genealogy of the man, his father or mother, or when he began his days, or ended his life; but this we know, that he was a man; for Paul says, "Now consider how great this MAN was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils." It was not Enoch, Shem, or Christ, for we have the genealogy of those, and of their fathers and mothers, and the beginning of their lives. Melchisedec was a king, but there is no genealogy of Melchisedec, from the fact that the name signifies one that is both king and priest, and is not a family name. He did not exist before the foundation of the world any more than any other man. The text does NOT teach the man had no father or mother, that he was without beginning of days or end of life; for that would prove too much; hence, it must have reference to his having no genealogy of father or mother, beginning of days or end of life, yet he was priest of the Most High God.

If we find out who Melchisedec was, we must be before Paul, and be able to tell his genealogy, age and death; at what age he was called to be priest, and many other things of which there is no account.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. Shepherd.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the Crisis, by your permission, that I am now prepared to deliver a course of four lectures, accompanied with a chart, on the Seven Churches of Asia, showing the process of Christ's kingdom, both in its first or spiritual aspect, and also its second or literal aspect, from his first appearance on earth, his final triumph and gloriousconsummation in the restored paradise of God. Any of the churches or brethren desiring to hear upon this interesting and important subject, please address me at Newark, New Jersey, stating where and when, and I will endeavor to comply with their desires so far as God gives me ability so to do. Yours truly in Christ.

Feb. 13th.

From Eld. Wellcome.

BRO. GRANT:—We have some good news to communicate from Richmond. The Lord still works here. During the winter several wanderers have come back to the Lord and found mercy. Three have been converted to God, and several others are in trouble with their sins, and want salvation. One of the last year's converts has commenced preaching, and the Lord is blessing him in obedience. There is much to do, and few faithful ones to do it. I am out in the highways and hedges most of the time. Find an attentive ear, and much inquiry everywhere. The midnight cry still accomplishes its specific work. It wakes up the virgins. The Lord is soon coming; let us be ready. Yours still waiting.

Richmond, Feb. 14.

From I. K. Lombard.

BRO. GRANT:—Though I am without experience, and in a new field, I find encouraging fruit appearing in several localities where I have labored. I love to see that any labor has not been in vain in the Lord, in that some dozen or more seem decided to have Christ and his truth in these days of fables, as the fruits of my labors during the fall and winter thus far. I find, however, that there is a special demand in these days of coldness and spiritual barrenness, for more of such preaching as used to characterize the primitive Methodists, as well as the Freewill Baptists of thirty or forty years ago. How sweet were the visitations of divine love on the occasions of their preaching, and their praying seasons. I am glad to be able to worship God in the truth, but I want to worship him in the Spirit also. I love to sing scriptural hymns with the understanding, but I would not fail of singing them in the Spirit also.

We have had some prayer meetings in this vicinity where the power of God was present, sometimes in solemnity and sometimes in love. I am glad to hear of the work of God in converting sinners to Christ and his truth, as communicated through the letters to the Crisis. Let us, while we would contend for the truth, in these days of fables, remember that we should also contend for the power of godliness in these days of the "form," merely; and for spirituality and love, in these days of barrenness and coldness.

It seems strange to me that among so many good teachers of the truth, as there are among us, we should have so few physicians for the "sin-sick soul." But the church is growing in this respect, and may the Lord bless this feature of his work to his glory and our encouragement.

East Stoneham, Me., Feb.

From Eld. M. Batchelor.

BRO. GRANT:—The great day of the Lord hasteth greatly.—Zeph. 1: 14. The great day in which the Lord will call the world to a reckoning, is just before us. We have had our day for trial, with every means and advantage to prepare us for that solemn day, if rightly improved, so that God is clear, if we are condemned. His long-suffering has waited long. Truly, that day is a solemn time for those who have slighted God's mercy and rendered themselves unworthy of everlasting life. Such have only the fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation that shall devour the adversaries.—Heb. 10: 27. But to those who have secured their life in Christ by complying with the holy requirements of the gospel of Christ, it is to them the day of grand release from all evil, and all the future is glorious. No change that shall take place after that day begins, but will open to them new glory and blessedness. Such ever say amen to the voice of God that is saying, "Behold, I come quickly!

That day truly hasteth. The events that are transpiring in all parts of the earth speak loudly. Time is short. Nearly all Europe, a great part of Asia, and a great part of this continent, are preparing for battle. Rome, the seat of the beast, is almost in the lake of fire and brimstone. It is only to put the match, and the flames must burst out and her smoke will be seen to ascend up.—Rev. 19: 3. Then the song of triumph will be heard. Read Rev. 19: 1—9. Sinner, brethren and friends, when Rome falls, the work for this age is about done. Then whatever the work for the next age shall be, we shall understand. Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, will be here to give us direction. Our greatest concern ought to be to carry out the great commission given by the Lord.—Matt, 24: 19, 20; Mark 16: 15, 16. These passages contain the work to be done and pursued until He comes whose right it is to reign. Let us be prepared to receive the kingdom of God as little children. I am as ever yours expecting the kingdom soon. Amen and amen.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Granville, Jan. 22d, 1861, FRANK J., son of Joseph and M. C. Phelon, aged nine years. The funeral was attended by D. Bates of Blandford. S. H. O.

At Enfield, Ct., Jan. 24th, 1861, CHARLES, son of Julius and Amanda King, aged fifteen years and five months.

Charley had been a patient sufferer for more than two years. His disease was consumption. For the last few weeks much of his time was spent in secret prayer. The Sabbath before he died he bade farewell to the members of the family, exhorting them to meet him in the kingdom. This is the fourth time that the family circle of Bro. and Sr. King has been invaded by the ruthless hand of death, and their jewels snatched from their embrace—their hearts riven with anguish; but they "sorrow not as those without hope," for they "believe that Jesus died and rose again, and them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

We hope all the good who may read this notice will in a special manner remember the surviving family in their fervent prayers to the throne of grace. May parents and children all meet in the kingdom, where there shall "be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying."

"When will the morning come?"

J. H. HALL.

Died, at Portsmouth, Jan. 9th, 1861, ISABELLA F., only child of Burnham C. and Harriet A. Dennett, aged four years and six months.

Little Isa was one of those lovely children possessed of those gentle, affectionate dispositions which attract wherever they are known. Although very young, she seemed to understand all about Jesus' coming and the glories of the everlasting kingdom. She frequently astonished people by her remarks about Jesus and his coming to give her a crown; and often when her father and mother were absent, and she was put to bed by some one who was not accustomed to pray, she would remain awake until they returned, and spring from her little bed and kneel to pray, saying she could not go to sleep because she had not prayed; and always after saying the Lord's prayer she would pray for dear father and mother, and grandpa and grandma, and repeat, "Lord, save us all in the kingdom." Suddenly she died of that disease that has robbed so many parents of their dear children—diphtheria. And how they miss the melody of that voice and the patter of those little feet and hands; and the gushing tears will flow as they come in contact with the numberless mementoes which she has left, each of which has a silent speech peculiar to itself. But they sorrow not as others that have no hope. They can take balm to their bleeding hearts, for they know that the triumph of death is short, and little Isa will be redeemed from the tomb, never to suffer again. They feel that they are weaned from this world, and will meet their darling, and share with her the glories of that beautiful kingdom she loved to talk about.

O come, Lord Jesus, quickly come!
And raise to life our sleeping one;
Restore to life, to health, to bloom,
Our lovely one now in the tomb.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says there is no doubt whatever that extraordinary naval and military preparations are being made in France. The reason given for them is the menacing attitude of Germany toward Denmark, and the speech of the King of Prussia.

ITALY.

Official dispatches announce that on the morning of the 22d the batteries at Gaeta unexpectedly opened a heavy fire against the Sardinians. The latter promptly replied. Fourteen war vessels were before Gaeta on the 22d, and at noon on that day they got into line. The Sardinians were actively engaged in erecting new batteries.

Garibaldi, in a letter to the Vigilance Committee in Italy, dated Jan. 13th, calls for fresh donations to procure the necessary means to enable Victor Emmanuel to enfranchise the rest of Italy. The committee is urged to penetrate every Italian with the idea that in the spring of this year, Italy must have a million of patriots under arms. He also says a journal should be established to inculcate upon the electors the choice of Deputies, who, having as their first thought the enfranchisement and integrity of Italy, shall obtain from government the arming of the nation.

DENMARK.

The minister of Marine has ordered the equipment of a steam squadron of twenty vessels, including gun and mortar boats. He has also announced that a certain number of Captains of merchant vessels can be received into the Navy, if prepared to undergo a course of instruction in the Government training schools, which will be opened in February.

A reserve force of eight hundred and ninety sailors has been ordered to assemble on the first of March. A committee has been appointed to purchase gun boats.

Immense activity was exhibited at the arsenal at Toulon, as if the Government intended to send three or four fleets to sea, together with twenty steel-plated frigates.

It was said that Francis Second had received a letter from the French Emperor, counseling him to cease resistance.

The King's reply was not known.

It is said that Prince Carignan has gone to Gaeta to negotiate for the surrender of the fortress.

The Italian troops are pursuing the reactionists and had entered the Roman States.

Sardinia has demanded the restoration of the soldiers made prisoners by the Papal Zouaves, and seized the Bishop of Sabine as hostage.

Rome, Jan. 29. Schiavori, one of the chiefs of the reactionary band in the Abruzzi, has surrendered. The fighting continues, and the spirit of revenge is strong on both sides. Villages have been set on fire, and Sardinian officers cut to pieces.

Naples, Jan. 29. Popular demonstrations have occurred, during which the presses of the two newspapers were broken up.

WARLIKE RUMORS.

Warlike rumors are still in the ascendant. The Daily News' correspondent says that in Paris the belief is assiduously cultivated that Prussia is preparing for war with France under the guise of a dispute with Denmark. Prussia and Austria, it is given out, are on the eve of an anti-French alliance, and Saxony and Bavaria will join them.

Austria and the German States continue their warlike preparations. Russia is also getting her armies in readiness for the eventful 1st of March. The soldiers on furlough have been recalled, and three corps d' armee are to be placed on a war footing, one of which is to march to the Pruth, another to the frontiers of Poland, and the third to any other destination which may be dictated by the march of events.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Feb 13. Owing to the apprehensions of a conspiracy to seize the public buildings, they have been privately guarded, though not in large force, for some weeks. The blowing up of the Capitol was regarded as not impossible, hence every night a thorough examination of its cellars and vaults was made by the Capitol police. To day officers of the Artillery were on duty for the purpose of immediately communicating with Congress should any attempt be made to attack the Capitol, and the military forces were ready to march at a moment's warning. Nothing was visible to excite the least apprehension, and perfect good order was preserved.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13. Lieut. Gilman, one of the officers in command of Fort Pickens, arrived here this evening with dispatches from Lieut. Slemmer and the commanders of vessels off Pensacola to the government. He left Pensacola on Saturday evening, having received a passport from Major Chase, who is in command of the Florida troops. He says the following vessels are off the harbor: The Brooklyn, Sabine, St. Louis, Macedonian and Wyandotte. The Brooklyn did not land her supplies for Fort Pickens, Lieut Slemmer having notified them that he had ample supplies for three months.

There are twelve hundred troops at Pensacola, and they are threatening every hour to make an attack on Fort Pickens. It is all that Major Chase and others in command can do to restrain them.

Lieut. Gilman says he would not be surprised if an attack was made at any moment, and it is very probable, owing to the limited number in the fort, that they would take it before the Brooklyn could throw her troops into the fort. If they take it at all, he says, they can take it in thirty or forty minutes; but there will be fearful loss of life even at that. The health of the officers and men on board of the vessels is good. Lieutenants Gilman and Slemmer are the only officers who took and are now in command of Fort Pickens.

New Orleans, Feb. 12. A message has been received from Montgomery, stating that a permanent government will be established by the 3d of March.

New York, Feb. 13th. Three boxes of amunition, one containing 2000 boxes percussion caps, and the other two 5000 cartridges with ball attached, designed for the Minie rifle, were seized to-day by the police on board the steamer Huntsville, destined for Savannah.

New York, Feb. 14th. The Herald Washington correspondent says that Lieut. Gilman, from Fort Pickens, has dispatches from Lieut. Slemmer and the commanders of the Brooklyn, Sabine, St. Louis, Wyandotte and Macedonian, which vessels are off Pensacola, to the Government. He reports that 1200 Florida troops are threatening Fort Pickens, and an attack was expected any moment. The health of the troops and the forces of the fleet was good. Lieut. Slemmer has plenty of provisions.

A letter from Capt. Doubleday of Fort Sumter, states that a railroad iron battery has been erected at Cummings Point, only an eighth of a mile from Fort Sumter.

FROM WASHINGTON. We copy the following from the correspondence of the New York Times:—

"The scene in the House to-day was very impressive. Thousands of people were present, filling every available spot. As many more left, being quite unable to reach the galleries. The arrangements for keeping the peace at the Capitol, and avoiding obstruction of the passage from one House to the other, were perfect.

When the Senate entered the hall of the House of Representatives, Vice President Breckinridge took a seat with the Speaker, and assumed the chair. Senators Seward, Douglas and Lane occupied the centre of the front row of Senators. From the moment the Senators took their seats, and throughout the proceedings, the audience looked on with almost breathless interest and silence, appreciating fully the grave solemnity of the occasion, and the decorum belonging thereto. There were no manifestations of applause, disapprobation or uneasiness in the audience, and when the Vice President had announced the result, and that Lincoln and Hamblin were elected, the vast audience, satisfied that the interesting event was consummated in peace, arose silently and withdrew in an orderly manner from the chamber. Vice President Breckinridge bore himself in the proceedings with marked dignity and courtesy.

SUFFERING IN SOUTHERN KANSAS.—Atchison, Feb. 14. A message from Hunter county reports the winter in South-western Kansas the most severe yet experienced. The snow is eighteen inches deep and the cold is intense. Stock is dying with fearful rapidity, and most all the inhabitants are reduced to buffalo meat. Teams are unable to get through the snow. The messenger walked twenty-six miles before finding the track, and seventy before reaching the stage at Emporia. The mail on the route has not been carried for three weeks. Horses and cattle were dying along the route. Many goods were abandoned in the middle of the prairies, in consequence of the teams having died or given out, and the drivers with frozen limbs had to seek the nearest settlement for refuge. One driver lost both legs, and another both hands. The Osage Indians had attacked a hunting party and killed two. Another messenger makes most urgent appeals for aid, which will be sent immediately. Urgent appeals for food have been made from the North-western settlements, and aid sent.

Notice.

Some brethren have signified their desire to have a special meeting of the A. C. Association the coming spring, and to then so amend the constitution of the Association that the subject of missions, preacher's aid, etc., may receive the attention it is thought they demand. It may be well to suggest to all concerned, that no amendment to the constitution can be effected in a special meeting except by a request of ten preachers or delegates, and then not until after two months notice.

B. P. MORGAN,
Pres. of the Association.

East Boston, Mass.

☞ As some who have subscribed for my contemplated book are expecting it, supposing it is published, I wish to say to those who have sent in their names, that the number of subscriptions is too limited to authorize its publication. Some who suggested and encouraged the effort, have not been heard from.

MARY D. WELLCOME.

Richmond, Me.

NOTE.—I am happy to inform brethren and sisters abroad that my health, by the blessing of God, is improved. I was able to meet with my flock Sunday, Feb. 10th, and speak to them for the first time for over a month. My health is not firm, but I hope by the blessing of God I may be soon restored fully both for enjoyment and labor. There is so much to be done, and the time so short, I agonize to be in the field, in full strength and health. But as God wills.

J. V. HIMES.

Boston, Feb. 12th, 1861.

Second Advent Conference

In Worcester, to commence Wednesday evening, March 13th, and continue through the week and over the following Lord's day. An invitation is extended to all, and the ministering brethren in particular to attend. The Lord willing, the probable order of exercise will be as follows: Prayer meeting from 9 till 10 o'clock A. M. Bible class from 10 till 12. Preaching at 2 and 7 P. M.

In behalf of the committee of arrangements,
A. ROSS.

☞ If any brother or sister knows the hymn commencing,

"Among the Judah captives,
One Daniel there was found,"

please send it to the Crisis office.

Especial Notice.

We wish to have it distinctly understood by the preaching brethren that if they wish to visit our place, they must first make known their desire to us before putting their appointments in the paper. Also that all letters must be directed to CHARLES F. DIXON, our corresponding Secretary. By order of the church at Rocky Brook, R. I.

Conference in Maine.

There will be a general conference held in Hermon, Me., to commence March 14th and continue over the 17th. Having learned the feelings of the brethren generally, we deem it important to call the attention of all the friends of God and lovers of the truth to make a renewed exertion to comfort and strengthen each other, and give the solemn alarm to a wicked world. The brethren are anxious to have Bro. James Hemenway attend, also Bro. Jones, if possible. All other preaching brethren are invited.

In behalf of the brethren in Maine,
ISRAEL DAMMAN,
JOHN BILLINGS,

☞ I am to be in Warren Co., Ill., as long as my labors are needed. If any wish them, address me at Tonica, Warren Co., Ill, care of G. W. Hurd.

Wm. H. Wild wishes to obtain six or seven copies of the "Jubilee Harp," by S. S. Brewer. He will pay for them their price as when new, soon as received. His address is Pleasantville, N. Y.

Conference at Kennebunkport, Me.

Several ministering brethren, and others in the western part of this State, think it best to have regular quarterly conferences in this region, and have decided to adopt such a plan. In accordance with such an arrangement, the first conference will (by request of Bro. W. H. Mitchell of Kennebunkport) be held with the church in that place, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 28th, at half past six o'clock, and continuing over the following Sunday.

The object of these meetings is to awaken an increased interest in regard to the subject of the speedy coming of the Savior, and the preparation necessary to meet him in peace. The ministering brethren in this part of the State, and the brethren and sisters generally, are invited to attend. Let us meet and work together in love and harmony, for the salvation of ourselves and others. For the brethren and sisters favorable to such meeting,

R. R. YORK.

Yarmouth, Me., Feb. 7th, 1861.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.61; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

For the Crisis.

Endless Day.

What buoys our struggling spirits up,
What cheers us on our way?
What makes life's burdens to us light?
'T is hope of endless day.

What makes us smile as tempests rage,
And earthly hopes decay?
What makes us feel such joy and peace?
'T is hope of endless day.

What causes us to cling to truth,
'Mid darkness and dismay?
What makes us feel its force and power?
'T is hope of endless day.

What makes us calm 'mid scenes of death,
When loved ones pass away?
It is the resurrection life,—
'T is hope of endless day.

What makes us look beyond the scenes
Of this our mortal stay?
It is the bright, the future life,—
'T is hope of endless day.

What makes us meek, what makes us mild,
And bear what others say?
What makes us love our enemies?
'T is hope of endless day.

What makes our longing hearts to look,
And wait, and watch, and pray?
What makes us sing deliverance near?
'T is hope of endless day.

What makes us feel the power of death
Must ere long lose its sway?
It is the hope that Christ will come,
And bring an endless day.

No. 2.

THE FALSE CHRISTS.

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. 24: 23—27.

A false Christ is not, as some would conclude in their application of this Scripture, any person who teaches false doctrine, but a person who falsely claims that he is Christ. It may be said that "such have arisen to the number of fifty, or more, since this prophecy was given." Very likely. But why should you say that just fifty, or any other definite number, should arise? Shall we base an argument for the fulfillment of this Scripture on the ground that a great many, or any definite number, have already arisen professing to be Christ? The question is not, have any arisen professing to be Christ, but have these particular ones described in the portion of Scripture before us? Since these appear on the earth where Christ is not expected till his second coming; since Christ gives their appearance as signs of his immediate coming; and since he cautions us against accepting them when they come for him and his coming, taking special pains to contrast the manner of his appearance with theirs: I conclude that their appearance at this time must be designed by the arch deceiver as a counterfeit for Christ's second advent. No other pretensions to the appearance of Christ on earth could gain the confidence of men; much less could they gain the reception of those who so far succeed as to "deceive if it were possible, even the elect."

It will be observed that two false Christs are here noticed. One appears visibly—"in the desert, "the other, invisibly—"in the secret chambers." The adherents of the former will tell us to "go forth" (where he is) that we may behold his "great signs and wonders"; but Christ says, "go not forth." The adherents of the latter will tell us to "believe" that he is already come and "in the secret chambers"; but Christ says, "believe it not." For he shall appear not "in the secret chambers" nor "in the desert," but "in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" and "in flaming fire." Nor shall his arrival be made known to his friends first and afterwards to others by their proclamation, as is the case with the false Christs; but his coming shall be manifest to the world as sudden as the lightning, and be seen as universally as that flash which extends "from the east even unto the west," in such a manner that "every eye shall see him." And while he is coming, before he descends to the earth, his enemies will know him, and "all the tribes of the earth shall mourn because of him, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." And before he descends to the earth he sends forth his angels with a great sound of a trumpet and gathers his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.—Matt. 24 : 30. Or as Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them . . . in the air."—1 Thess. 4 : 16.

Thus, while Christ is in the air, and all tribes of the earth mourn because of him, his saints, having their bodies fashioned like unto his glorious body, shall like him be able to move through the heavens, and being assembled unto him in the air will soon descend with him to the earth.—1 Thess. 3 : 13; Rev. 19 : 11—14; Jude 14; Zech. 14 : 5.

Whatever false Christs we may have had in the past, if the past would answer as a time for the fulfillment of this prophecy, we have had none which could "show great signs and wonders"; much less have their signs and wonders been so surprising that the elect alone have power to escape their deception. For the assurance that they "shall deceive, if it were possible, even the elect," implies that others generally will not escape the deceptions, but become his victims. We cannot conceive of a Christ without a religion, nor of a false Christ advocating the true system. We may therefore expect a false system of religion associated with the false Christ, and as generally received.

That there will be persecution in this time it is evident from Luke's account of the same:—"The days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man and ye shall not see it. And they shall say unto you, 'see here' or 'see there,' go not after them nor follow them. For as the lightning that lighteneth out of one part under heaven and shineth even unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day."—Luke 17 : 22—24. And also, "shall not God avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18 : 6—8.

From the above we learn that when it shall be said, "see here, or see there" is Christ, urging that he has already come, the church will be earnestly desiring his coming; or according to the second quotation, it will be when they shall "cry day and night unto him." This seems to foreshow a time of persecution immediately preceding Christ's coming. It must be so, since to avenge his elect implies ill treatment toward them, as also their crying day and night unto God; while the assurance that they shall not see that day, (as they desire,) and the intimation, "though he bear long with them," imply that their patience and faith will be tried. From this account of false Christs as given in Matt. and Luke we learn: 1. That immediately before the coming of Christ, there will arise two false Christs; one appearing visibly, the other invisibly. 2. That the one appearing visibly does not first show himself coming in the clouds of heaven, as the true Christ does, but "in the desert." 3. That he does not show himself at his first manifestation so that every eye shall see him, as the true Christ does, but having a location is seen only by those who "go forth" where he is. 4. That all tribes of the earth will not "mourn" because of him, as is the case when they behold the true Christ; but showing great signs and wonders he will gain the admiration of the world generally, and allure them into an acceptance of his mission, but not the elect. 5. That this will bring upon the elect a sore persecution when they will cry day and night for deliverance; while their infidel persecutors will be continually pressing upon them to receive the false Christ, saying to them, Lo! here is Christ, or there.

Of the two false Christs mentioned by our Lord, only one seems to be noticed in other places; the one appearing invisibly seeming of but little note. That one appearing visibly—"in the desert"—seems evidently to be the same as Paul's "Man of Sin," which we will now consider.

THE MAN OF SIN.

"Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come (the day of Christ's appearing,) except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the Son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above (Hendrick's trans. against) all that is called God or is worshiped: so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God (or according to Hendrick's trans. "declaring himself to be God). . . . And then shall that Wicked (one) be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming. Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, (or, according to Dr. Cumming, instead of "lying wonders," read, "miracles which prove a lie,") and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

That this Man of Sin is the false Christ of Matt. which appears visibly, is evident, 1. From the prominence here given to him as the most important sign of Christ's coming. 2. From his being seated in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God, or declaring himself to be God. 3. From his opposing and exalting himself above or against all that is called God or is worshiped. 4. From his being pointed out individually as the "Man of Sin"—the "Son of Perdition"—the "Wicked One," rather than as a body of opposers. 5. From his coming like the false Christ of Matt., "with all power and signs and lying wonders." 6. From the fact that all "who love not the truth" become the victims of his deceivableness of unrighteousness. 7. And because he is doing his work when Christ comes, and is at that time the special object of his judgment.

All these things might apply to the false Christ in Matt. better than to any other character; and may be expected from Spiritualism rather than from any other source. Besides, it would be difficult to harmonize the demands of the two accounts as referring to two different characters, since they must have their fulfillment at the same time—during a short period ending with the coming of Christ. But Paul says when speaking of his coming "there shall come a falling away first." This falling away must be the falling away so frequently alluded to in the Scriptures as coming in the last days and a short time before the coming of Christ. This time is noticed by Paul in his first letter to Tim. 4 : 1,—"In the latter times some shall depart from the faith." In his second letter, 3d. chap., he says,—"In the last days perilous times shall come." The perils are that men having a form of godliness, yet guilty of a violation of every law of God, apparently, shall abound. We are assured also that when the evidences of Christ's coming are being manifest, the church—the wise virgins as well as foolish—all slumber and sleep.—Matt. 25 : 1. And if the addresses to the seven churches mentioned in the Apocalypse, mean, as some think, seven different stages of the church reaching down to the coming of Christ, the last—Laodicean state—would represent a striking departure from the purity of the church in the last days preceding Christ's coming.

For the Crisis.

A Question.

"Did any of the early christian writers teach the total unconsciousness of man in death? If so, who? and in what language?" W.

ANSWER.

"The soul, O Grecians, is not IMMORTAL in its nature, but MORTAL. For it dieth and IS DISSOLVED with the body, if it be ignorant of the truth. But riseth again in the consummation of the world, together WITH THE BODY, suffering death in immortality itself by way of penalty and torment."—TATIAN, A. D. 172. Oatio. Contra Grecos. Sec. 13, p. 59.

"He (Tatian) fancied that the soul was dissolved with the body, and rose again with it at the resurrection. For as he makes all souls to die with the body, so he makes them all to rise again with it also." —Dr. S. Clarke Letter to Dodwell.

About A. D. 245, the Arabian Christians, where Paul had preached, were found to be entirely out of the line of false philosophy. "These asserted that, the human soul as long as the present state of the world existed, perished at death and died with the body, but was raised again at the time of the resurrection." And as a considerable COUNCIL was held on account of THIS, Origen being again requested, likewise here discussed the point in question.—Eusebius' Eccl. Hist. B. 4, ch. 37. Observe:

1. These were called heretics, men who, like Paul, who had preached salvation in Arabia, worshiped after the way that men called "heresy."

2. This doctrine prevailed so much that "a considerable council" was held about it.

3. Origen had met the question before, for here "being again requested" he discussed the point in dispute.

4. The champion brought to teach the Arabian brethren to reject Christ's truth and receive heathen philosophy, was an old, half-converted heathen philosopher, who believed in the PRE-EXISTENCE of souls, (I think also their transmigration)—in the restoration of all wicked men and DEVILS; who brought more fooleries into the church than any other man who had lived, who interpreted one scripture so literally that he made himself an eunuch in his holy fanaticism, and who interpreted other scriptures so figuratively as to spiritualize, not only almost all the Old Testament but even the Egyptian midwives! Exod. 1. He of course would be just the man to "spoil" the Arabians "through philosophy and vain deceit after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ," and of course on the spiritualizing principle could prove that life was death, and death life; sleep waking, and waking sleep; curse was blessing, and blessing curse; light darkness, and darkness light; good was evil, and evil good; sweet was bitter, and bitter sweet.

Enough. This is only a scrap from Old Paths, Part II. If the rest of that work is ever finished, more upon this subject will perhaps appear. Meanwhile I forbear, lest I should provoke the ire of some who are wiser than fourteen men that can render a reason; who deny all facts that they have not searched for enough to know; who teach the consciousness of the dead and prove it by quotations from pseudo-Josephus; who demonstrate that Luther taught consciousness in death (contrary to his own words) by large extracts from books that he never wrote, saw, or sanctioned; who give us slices of bad translation from Justin Martyr, to prove that souls never die, and who settle forever the question as to the character of demons by constant repetitions of a rash and mistaken ASSERTION of ALEXANDER CAMPBELL'S. From all such critics, "good Lord, deliver us."

HAPPINESS.—The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman. The foundation of political happiness is faith in the integrity of man. The foundation of all happiness, temporal and eternal, is faith in the goodness, the mercy, and the love of God.—Guesses at Truth.

☞ When the thrones of earth have crumbled to a heap of ruins, when all governments have been dissolved, and their records and monuments are forgotten, the dignity and worth of the christian ministry will shine in the glory of those who have been guided by its light to "honor and immortality."

Selections.

The Reunion of the Saints.

But there is reunion. And one of the joys of the morning is this reunion among the saints. During the night they had been scattered, in the morning they are gathered together. In the wilderness they have been separated, but in the kingdom they shall meet. During this age they have been like the drops of the fitful shower; in the age to come they shall be like the dew of Hermon, the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion, one radiant company, alighting upon the holy hills, and bringing with them refreshment to a weary earth. Then shall fully be answered the prayer of the Lord,—"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and has loved them, as thou hast loved me." John 27 : 21–23.

"I will smite the Shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad." Matt. 26 : 31. Such is our present position,—a smitten Shepherd and a scattered flock! But the day is at hand when "he that scattered shall gather," and there shall be a glorified Shepherd and a gathered flock; not merely one flock, one fold and one Shepherd, but one flock gathered, into the one fold around the one Shepherd, the scattering ceases, the wandering at an end, the famine exchanged for the green pastures, the danger forgotten, and the devouring lion bound. Then shall fully come to pass the prophecy regarding the issues of the Surety's death, "that he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad." John 11 : 52. Then what is written of Israel shall, in a higher sense, be fulfilled in the church: "Behold I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered, so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be. And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd." And as the ingathering of Israel is to be a blessing diffusing itself on every side, so is the reunion of the scattered church to be to the world; so that we may use Israel's promise here also: "I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing." Ezek. 34 : 11–26—Bonar.

Veracity.

The groundwork of all manly character is veracity. That virtue lies at the foundation of everything solid. How common it is to hear parents say, "I have faith in my child so long as he speaks the truth. He may have many faults, but I know he will not deceive me. I build on that confidence." They are right. It is a lawful and just ground to build upon. And that is a beautiful confidence. Whatever errors temptation may betray a child into, so long as brave, open truth remains, there is something to depend on, there is anchor-ground, there is substance at the centre. Men of the world feel so about one another. They can be tolerant and forbearing so long as their erring brother is true. It is the fundamental virtue. Ordinary commerce can hardly proceed a step without a good measure of it. If we cannot believe what others say to us we cannot act upon it, and to an immense extent that is saying that we cannot act at all. Truth is a common interest. When we defend it, we defend the basis of all social order. When we vindicate it, we vindicate our own foothold. When we plead for it, it is like pleading for the air of health we breathe. When you undertake to benefit a lying man, it is like putting your foot into the mire.—F. D. Huntington.

The Church Now and Then.

The tree in winter is not what it appears,—dead; nay, it is what it appears not,—alive; full in every part, root, stem, and branch, of vigorous, though hidden vitality, a vitality which frosts and storms are maturing, not quenching. All summer life is there; all autumn fruitfulness is there; though neither visible. It wraps up within itself the germs of future verdure, and awaits the coming spring. So is it is with the church in this age of wintry night; for it is both night and winter with her. Her present condition ill accords with her prospects. No one, in looking at her, could guess what she either is or is to be; could conceive what God has in store for her. For eye has nothing to do with the seeing of it, nor ear with the hearing of it. No one, in observing her garb or her deportment, or the treatment she meets with at the hands of men, or the sharp, heavy discipline through which she is passing could take the measure of her hopes. Faith finds difficulty in realizing her prospects, and she can hardly at times credit the greatness of her heritage, when thinking of what she is, and remembering what she has been.—Ex.

"You have omitted One."

The Rev. Mr. Fisch, of France, in a discourse recently delivered in the First Presbyterian church in New York, as we learn from The World, stated that in France permission must be obtained to hold religious meetings, or those assembling are liable to be fined. Where the districts are entirely under Roman Catholic influence, it is sometimes impossible to obtain a permit. In such cases the Protestants meet, and, having set a sentinel to watch the coming of the police officer, they proceed with their worship. One very rainy day they were worshiping under a tree, with umbrellas over their heads, when suddenly a policeman came upon them and ordered them to remain while he took down their names. They gave them readily, and he wrote them to the number of forty. Then he said:

"Have I not overlooked any; is there any one else here?"

"Yes," answered one of the company, "you have omitted ONE."

"Who is he?"

"He is One who has said, 'Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them.'"

The next day forty-four other Protestants in the village wrote a letter signing all their names, and sent it to the police, requesting their names to be added to the forty taken down before, as they were very sorry they were prevented by the rain from attending, and wished to be fined with the rest.

Short Sayings.

John Wesley's ordinary sermons were not more than half an hour long. We have seen the same statement made of Whitefield, though we know not on what authority, as none of his sermons were exactly reported. Many of the most eminent New England pastors, of the last two or three generations, were briefer in all their public services than is now commonly supposed. It was a common practice to divide one sermon between the two parts of the day, as in the instance of Dr. Emmons. Rev. Dr. Strong, of Hartford, often preached only twenty-one minutes, and never, it is said, over thirty. Professor Stuart, during his effective ministry in New Haven, was noted as well for the brevity as for the perspicuity and directness of his discourses. Our readers can multiply examples for themselves. We have heard it remarked by a competent judge, himself a successful pastor, that as far as he had observed, in general, the ministers who best held their place in the affections of the same congregation, had been characterised for brevity in their ministrations.—Independent.

Resignation.

Stricken, smitten, and afflicted,
Savior, to thy cross I cling;
Thou hast every blow directed,
Thou alone canst healing bring.

Try me till no dross remaineth,
And, whate'er the trial be,
While thy gentle arm sustaineth,
Closer will I cling to thee.

Cheerfully the stern rod kissing,
I will hush each murm'ring cry;
Every doubt and fear dismissing,
Passive in thine arms will lie.

And when through deep seas of sorrow
I have gained the heavenly shore,
Bliss from every wave I'll borrow,
And for each will love thee more.

HORSE RACING.—Horse racing is a cruel, wicked abuse of one of the noblest animals the Lord gave for the use of man. "The merciful man is merciful to his beast." Again, wherever you see horse racing, there you behold the works of the flesh, iniquity in high places, intemperance, licentiousness, drunkeness, gambling, swearing, taking God's name in vain; every thing hateful and abominable. Young man, keep away from these haunts of vice; shun them as the plague! "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not."—Prov. 1 : 10. "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men: avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away."—Prov. 4 : 14, 25. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time.—Eph. 6 : 15.—Golden Rule.

HOW TO REPROVE.—A late eminent judge of Virginia said, that the most cutting reproof he ever received for profaneness was without words. He happened to be crossing a ferry with the late John H. Rice. On account of shallows the boat could not be brought to land, and they were carried to the shore by the black ferrymen. One of these was so careless as to suffer Judge H.'s clothes to become wet, and the latter expressed his anger by an imprecation. Dr. Rice without saying a word, turned on him his large, speaking eye with a sorrowful expression. "I never so felt a reproof," said the judge, "in my life, and instantly begged his pardon. 'Ask pardon of God,' said Dr. Rice. I shall never forget it." At this time Judge H. was entirely ignorant who his reprover was.

Doctrine of Crisis.

Although I do not often write for your excellent paper, yet for the benefit of your readers, and some of which have spent most of their living on the physicians, and are nothing better but rather grow worse, and are now turning their attention to the laws of life, bathing, exercise and diet, I venture to write a few lines upon the Doctrine of Crisis in medical science.

Allow me to express the opinion that if every religious newspaper of the land had, like this paper, affixed to it a health department, it would save thousands from years of pain, sickness, and an early grave.

The doctrine of crisis originated with Hippocrates, "the father of medicine," born 460 B. C. He observed that there is a tendency in all diseases to a cure by some eruption or evacuation. Webster, in defining crisis, says, "It is sometimes used to designate the excretion of something noxious from the body, or of the noxious fluids in a fever." A person attacked with scarlet fever, for instance, on or about the third day, will throw to the surface (if not maltreated) a scarlet rash with an eruption. This is called a crisis; but if maltreated, the eruption does not appear, in which case the crisis does not appear; and although the patient may and does so far recover as to be able to walk about, and in some cases to do a little work, yet he can never be well, for the reason that his disease is secreted in his blood, until this crisis is brought about by some means—it may be by nature, or it may be by agencies. I have known persons remain in this state for from three to five years, and after that, under hydropathic treatment, come to a crisis having all the form and effect produced by scarlet fever five years before. The effect is, after the crisis has subsided, a speedy and permanent cure, and that without discontinuing the treatment, only changing its mode of application. Drs. Trall, Jackson, Gleason, Halstead, and others, report a large number of cases treated at their Cures, hydropathically, with similar results, only their diseases might have been different, such as measles, chicken pox, etc.

It is perfectly certain that some cases of chronic diseases are cured without any appearance of crisis; and I am convinced that some bad cases cannot be cured without it; and I am also convinced that many cases of crisis are injudiciously brought about by excessive hydropathic treatment. This shows the necessity of being well posted in what is to be done.

But what is a real crisis? may be asked. It is not necessary to go back to Hippocrates, or to the London College of Physicians. I will give a few testimonies of some of our own physicians of the present day. Dr. J. Weiss says of crisis: "This natural vital process is not to be regarded as morbid, for with the existing disease it has nothing in common. While it lasts, therefore, no crisis can ensue. The appearance of the crisis announces a return of the vessels in the diseased parts to their normal activity, ... the emancipation of the organism, or its organs, from disease. This is the sole signification of crisis, according to experience and nature." Dr. E. Johnson: "The system, by virtue of its own inherent energies, sometimes purges itself of morbid matters by a crisis; that is, by establishing some temporary outlet through which such morbid matters may and do escape, is perfectly certain. The Aleppo boil, small pox, measles, and many other well known diseases, prove this to demonstration, and beyond the possibility of question. In all these cases the crisis is clearly the means of cure. Without such the patient must die. Whether the water treatment has the power of urging nature to the establishing of such temporary outlet, is another question, to which I can only reply, I believe that it has." Dr. Johnson is an old school drug doctor. Dr. Gully testifies to the same in substance. Dr. I. H. Rausse very nearly the same thing.

Dr. Shew, in his Manual says: "A crisis may be said to be a visible effort on the part of nature to rid it of some morbid matters in it, or expelling them at some of the natural outlets of the system. . . . . The true philosophy of these apparent aggravations of disease is this; as the living power, or that which we call nature, becomes invigorated, a greater antagonism against disease is set up; the disease then makes a greater effort to remain, and, in the commotion thus caused, there appears to be an increase of the same."

I might cite others, but it is not necessary. Thus we see that crisis is the effort of nature to throw off disease. Nature may be assisted by means of a hydropathic course of treatment, and by a proper regard to diet.

My family experience in crises is as follows. In 1852 I sent my wife to a hydropathic establishment. Her disease was chronic scrofula. After four weeks of judicious water treatment of two baths daily, and once in two days a wet sheet pack, nature was assisted to make a desperate effort to throw off disease, and on came the crisis in the form of a rash on the neck, throat and chest. The treatment was not suspended, only changed. The result was, she was thoroughly and permanently cured; not even have the three children, born since, shown any signs of it in them, so that it may be said to be cured. But our oldest child, born before this crisis, broke out with scrofula swelling, and I was obliged to send her to a Water Cure, and she was cured in the same way; so that now not a vestige of disease remains in the family.

Another case, James T. Cornell, of Plymouth Hollow, Ct., about a year and half since was thought to be incurable of consumption. A water cure physician told him that five weeks would be sufficient to put him on his legs again. The trial was made at an establishment for that purpose. The result was, his treatment, with his diet, assisted nature to bring on a crisis in the form of diarrhea, which alarmed him; but his physician told him it was customary to have such a crisis in cure of consumption, and that it would result in his good. It did so, and he is and has been at work ever since, supporting his family like an honest man. Before he went, he said, and we expected in a very few days, to hide him with his fathers; but since then he has always said that no other means could have saved his life.

But I say to you all who wish to get well and keep well, if you cannot afford the means to go to a Water Cure, do not try to take home treatment unless you are well informed; and in order to inform yourself, send for Trall's "Hydropathic Encyclopedia, in one volume, and it will direct you how to treat every known disease. It will teach you how to get well and keep well. You will thus save your aches and pains to a great extent, and your doctor's bills. Yours truly, G. W. DENNY.

Scrofula.

Dr. Ira Warren, in his late great Medical work, under this head remarks:

"This disease was once thought to be peculiar to swine, and hence derived its name from scrofa, a sow."

The Doctor does not suppose this opinion to be correct. Neither does he intimate that any person of any note, in latter times has had any such opinion. He further says:

"It is contended by some, that scrofula is in all cases inherited; that we receive it from our progenitors, as we do their other constitutional peculiarities; that the disease is everywhere, and in all time, one and the same, which shows it to come from within, and not from without; that were it dependent on external causes for its existence, it would be generally modified by temperature, climate, and the peculiarities of the races effected by it. They assert that though the causes which are usually assigned for scrofula, such as living in cold, damp, and impure air, and the lack of sufficient food, connected with filthy habits, often have a powerful effect in developing scrofula already existing in the constitution, and aggravating it when already developed; it never produces it."

According to these writers, this disease is everywhere, one and the same thing, is not confined to any class of the races, is not modified by temperature or climate, and is not dependent on external causes, and consequently, does not depend on the food or drink. Dr. Warren adds:

"My own strong suspicion that scrofula arises from the animal poison of syphilis, filtered through the blood of many generations, inclines me to the adoption of the above views."

So far then as this authority is reliable scrofula in its origin has nothing to do with eating swine's flesh, or any flesh at all. And the argument against eating swine's flesh, because the word scrofula is derived, from scrofu, meaning sow, has no foundation in truth. But admitting it has, strictly speaking, it would only apply to female of the swine, leaving the male free to be eaten without the fear of being tainted by scrofula for so doing.

Dr. Shew says that scrofula is no more in the swine than in the cow and horse. Now if we admit that scrofula is in the swine, and admit that Dr. Shew is correct in saying that it is no more there than in the cow, it will follow that those who reject the swine but eat the cow, only make it a matter of choice through which kind of flesh to receive the poison. And it would also follow that those who reject the swine, and cow flesh too, but who drink the milk, only make it a matter of choice whether to eat the poison or drink it.

We are sometimes referred to certain unnatural appearances about the swine, which are taken as evidence of scrofula. If we should admit what is here claimed, we would say in reply, these signs exist in the cow and ox over the swine, two to one.

It is said that certain persons have been challenged to produce a Jew who had scrofulous taint. This challenge is with regard to the fact that Jews do not eat pork. If Dr. Warren, and the writers to whom he refers, are correct, the Jew has his share with the rest of the races in the taint of scrofula. And if he has not, it is not because he eats no swine's flesh, but because he has not inherited it from a corrupt ancestry. We might as well challenge such persons to produce an instance of scrofulous taint among the Irish, who make a great part of their living of swine's flesh, and the poorest kind too. We do not say that the Irish are free from the taint, but we do say that there may be as many instances of scrofula among the Jews produced, as can be produced among the Irish in proportion to their number.

REMEDY FOR PUTRID SORE THROAT.—This fatal disease may be speedily checked by giving the following prescription—a teaspoonful every hour until it operates as a cathartic. Keep it always on hand, to be given upon the first symptoms: One teacupful of strained honey; one tablespoonful of gunpowder, and a piece of freshly burnt alum, of the size of the end of your thumb; mix well together. Simple remedies, taken in time, often effect the most marvellous cures.—Ex.

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cts, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same of the Provinces.

Watchman, what of the Night?

"The morning cometh, and also the night."—Is. 21: 11.

Watchman! tell us of the night,
For thick darkness gathers round,
Black, mysterious clouds affright
Those who fear the trumpet's sound.
Traveler! these harbingers of woe to thee are peace and life,
They speak Messiah near, and end of Gentile strife.

Watchman! will no light appear
The narrow pathway to disclose?
Will not arise some glimmering star,
To guide my feet to sweet repose?
Traveler! from yon mountain's height, a light is rising to divide
The votaries of life from those who trust the surging Gentile tide.

Watchman! does God's word assure
A place of safety for his flock,
From pestilence and wrath secure,
Through faith upon his promised rock?
Traveler! o'er such the gates of death shall never close,
They 'll live to greet their King, triumphant o'er their foes.

Watchman! my faith within me dies,
I'm in a wilderness shut in;
Dark clouds before obscure my skies,
Behind me press the hosts of sin.
Traveler! look up; the cloud shall fall behind upon thy foes,
While morning breaks on thee, the night shall rest on those;
Worn traveler, urge thy way, thy perils are well nigh o'er,
God's sea of wrath shall close, thy foes thou 'lt see no more.

Living to the Glory of God.

How important that we are living continually for God; having his glory in view; seeking to promote his cause, to advance in knowledge of things pertaining to our eternal welfare. How essential that our hearts are continually filled with the love of God, and with the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit. Yes, this is of VITAL importance. If we have not this sweet comforter, our peace is gone, our confidence in prayer has ceased; and we are desolate and sad, unless we turn to the world, and then all is anxiety and care, nothing satisfying; all there is uncertain, and doubt and gloom reign supreme. How vast the contrast if we are living for God—seeking to do his will—knowing no will but his. All is then joy and peace. Come what may, his promises we can claim, can rely upon. He is our "Rock" and our "Fortress," a "stronghold", in time of trouble, a "present help in time of need." O how vain to trust in the vanities, the riches, and the wisdom of this world. How vain to trust in the puny arm of man. But upon the "arm of God" we can with confidence lean, trusting in Him who is all-wise and powerful, and who "doeth all things well."

Dear Brn. and Srs., who may read these lines, may we by the grace of God be enabled to live wholly to his glory. May we realize that we are not our own, but we are bought with a price. The precious blood of Jesus flowed for us; he was led as a lamb to the slaughter; he groaned and bled, suffered and died—yielded up his life for us, and now, blessed be God, he has ascended on high, and is there interceding with the Father in our behalf. O may it not be in vain! May we not trample under foot the blood of Jesus! May we not despise the great atoning sacrifice, but yield our hearts and all we have and are to him; seeking continually to possess his Spirit (for without it we are none of his), that we may be guided in all our walks and ways, and prove what is the acceptable and perfect will of God. Thus our peace will be "like a river;" and joyfully will we hail the dear Savior at his coming, and receive from him the welcome greeting, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Millennium.

Much is said of the Millennium, and many opinions are held by different orthodox churches. And some of them so very different from what I gather from the Book, that it seems proper to investigate. The word millennium is not in the Bible; but the term "a thousand years" is found in several places. As the word milennium is derived from too Latin words, mille, a thousand, and annus, year, signifying a thousand years, we shall not object to the term. Our inquiry then will be to learn what particular thousand years is spoken of. And first, we quote 2 Peter 3: 8;—"One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Some appear to understand by this, that the Lord is regardless of time, counting it all one eternal present. But we think it will help to understand this passage, to consider how the Lord has divided time. God created the world in six days, and rested on the seventh. Thus he divided time into sevens,—a very odd number, and as man seldom divides. But God, as though to rivet it on the mind of man, made to the Jews six working years, and then a Sabbath year. Moreover, the Jubilee, or great Sabbath year, which occurred after seven year weeks, all show that seven is God's number; and naturally suggests to the mind of man, that having made six thousand working years, there will be a Sabbath of a thousand years. And then we are told by Peter that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years; or, that one day answers to a thousand years"; thus, six days in the week should represent six thousand years of common time, and then the Sabbath day is a type of the seventh thousand years, or the millennium.

Secondly. Let us examine the proof of this great Sabbath. Rev. 20: 2;—"And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years." Verse 4;—"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." V. 5,—"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." 1 Thess. 4: 15, 16;—"For this we say unto you, by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (anticipate, or go before,) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God! and the dead in Christ shall rise first." This evidently includes all of the dead in Christ. Rev. 20: 6;—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." 1 Cor. 15: 51;—"Behold, I show you a mystery," says Paul, "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible; and we shall be changed."

It appears from the foregoing, that all the righteous dead shall rise in the first resurrection; that all the righteous living shall, at the same moment, be changed; so changed, as to be like the righteous who shall be raised from the dead. Next, let us consider the unrighteous dead. Rev. 20: 5;—"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Now this class being disposed of by good authority, we have only the wicked living to dispose of. Matt. 24: 40, on the coming of Christ, says:—"Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken and the other left." Now it being declared, that at the coming of Christ, one shall be taken and the other left; we are led to infer that the one is taken to his kind, to the company of christians who are raised from the dead; while the other is left with his kind, to sleep with the unrighteous dead a thousand years. Now that this is one and the same thousand years, is made very plain by reading Rev. 20, entire.

The sumum of the whole then is: That at the end of the week, of six thousand years, the great Sabbath will commence. At what particular time this week closes is not now my purpose to say; others have said; but that the Sabbath will commence at its close: that the trumpet of the archangel shall sound: that as the disciples saw Christ ascend into heaven, so, in like manner shall Christ descend from heaven; and as none but believers saw him go up, so none but believers shall see him come down: that all the righteous, from Abel to the present coming of Christ, shall be with him: that he shall sit upon the throne of his father David in Jerusalem: that the saints shall reign with him a thousand years. Herein shall be fulfilled what is spoken in numerous passages in the prophets, of the return of Israel to Jerusalem. Spiritual Israel, embracing all believers. Zech. 2: 12;—"And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day. And on the horses' bells shall be, Holiness unto the Lord."

Has this day come? Will it come in time? Will it be in eternity? Evidently it has not been, nor will be under the present dispensation. Neither does it savor of the things of eternity. But a thousand year Sabbath is to be, when all this evidently will be. "And the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed for a season, out of his prison." Mark, here, a thousand years cannot be in eternity, but in time, where day and night are continued, and years measured. Yet not under the present dispensation, for the righteous dead will be raised, and no wicked alive. For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the deep. And they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain. Then we conclude: that the millenninm has not commenced; that it will not till Christ shall come, and the dead rise; that it is not to be brought forward by human agency; that it is near at hand; that we have not to look for a gathering of the Jews previous to Christ's coming; that it is wise to be watching and ready, so that we may have part in the first resurrection; for, on such, the second death hath no power.

Notes by the Way.

Manchester. Here are a few desolate sheep calling for food of the right kind to gather the flock and strengthen the weak things that remained, which had been weakened and scattered by ignorant and designing men, that pretended to feed the sheep when they had nothing but goat's feed to give. This always did make the flock sick, and some have died in this place, as in many others; but what few there were alive, came together. My visit was looked for with interest. There were some few hobby jockeys that had rode every hobby that had come along. This I anticipated, and tried to feed the humble, which they appreciated. The gathering spirit prevailed the six days I was with them, and it seemed that the Lord blessed the effort. All took courage. Some backsliders came out strong. Two come five miles in the snow to attend the meeting, a man and his wife, and led their little son nine years old, and returned Monday on foot.

One of the committee, who was very anxious for God to work some way to save the few, rose the first evening after I got through, and said he thanked God for that privilege. He related a singular presentiment of a few nights before. He had been praying for some time for the Lord to send some one there to help them. He saw the man, how he looked, and what he preached, and the effect it produced, etc.; and then turned, and pointing to me said, "That is the man, and the very subject;" and he never saw me before nor I him. This strange incident worked for the good of us all.

This is the third time I have had my coming anticipated. Once, every article of my clothing described, fashion and color of each garment, and height, and the very text I took. This man was a backslider at the time, and told his wife and neighbors what he dreamed, if it was a dream. "This was a man," said he, "that took me out of a place where I was dying." This was some time before he ever saw me. Bro. Pease will recollect this circumstance, as he was in the desk with me when the man told this fact, and pointed to his wife and neighbors then present, and said, "This is the man, you all see, I told you about helping me," etc. He then asked all to pray for him for he was a wicked backslider, and pointed to Eld. Pease and said, "You know how wicked I am; but I am going to turn about." After prayer he rejoiced that God had forgiven him. I left the next morning and have never seen him since. He followed me to the wagon as I started for Bangor, and gave me sixteen cents, all the money he had.

But to return to Manchester. The brethren want me to say their doors are open for the preaching brethren who have a disposition to gather with Christ and feed the flock of God; but hobby pedlers will not be invited, nor welcome if they come. Brethren, remember Manchester. There is some good wheat left among the chaff yet; it only wants winnowing out to show itself.

I left Wednesday for a three days meeting in East Kingston. Here is a remnant of Adventists, Methodists and Freewill Baptists, that meet together, and have agreed with Bro. White to preach to them for the present. We had a good time. The work began the first evening, and the three evenings I stayed all these different classes labored together for the salvation of sinners, which resulted in the conversion of some five or six, and a general waking up of the cold-hearted. When I left it bade fair for an extensive, thorough work of God. Bro. White was much encouraged, and is competent, with the help he has got, to carry on the work.

Next to Lowell. Found the brethren steady on their course, but rather moderate this cold weather. Was glad to see the old, tried friends, especially Bro. Daniel Churchill, who has just recovered from a severe illness. I think the people will still hear his trumpet sound the alarm of the gospel of the soon coming kingdom. We had a good congregation out and good attention all day, and signs of a revival, if the means are used. The Lord is on the giving hand. Let us keep at work while the day lasts.

A Dream.

I dreamed I died, and mixed with fellow clay,
Close by a common beggar's side I lay;
And as so mean a creature shock'd my pride,
Thus, like a corpse of quality I cried:
"Away! away! thou scoundrel! touch me not;
More manners learn, and at a distance rot."
"Thou scoundrel," in a louder tone, cried he,
"I scorn thy very words, and more scorn thee;
We are equal now, I'll not an inch resign;
This is my rotting place, and that is thine."
"Alas! too true; the sickening thought," I cried;
"The beggar and the prince are side by side."
Trembling with horrors dire of such a scene,
I woke, and glad to find it but a dream.
And musing still, in solemn mood, I prayed,
"Great God, whose hand the earth's foundations laid,
And spanned the seas, and curb'd the headlong wave,
Tell me, is there no hope beyond the grave?"
Then faith sublime, with heaven-plumed pinions, smiled,
With golden anchors cast, "Ah! yes, my child,
See yonder, midst the gloom of night forlorn,
A brilliant star of resurrection morn."
Then Hope sprang up, who seemed a youth divine,
And 'gan to paint the golden view sublime!
First in the scene, the angelic trump of God
Breaks on the ear of those beneath the sod.
The earth casts out her dead; nor more the slain
In dusty beds—they break the monster's chain,
And forth anew to life immortal spring—
Victory o'er death, and loud hosannahs sing.
With rapturous awe sublime I viewed the scene,
Nor dreaded more of death's dark vale to dream,
But triumph'd in the hope of victory won
Through Him who bid me pray "Thy kingdom come."

Eld. Miles Grant:—Dear Sir,—If you please, you can publish the above. The dream was an actual fact, and the author has, I think, ably and scripturally put it in verse. I copied it some years ago, it having appeared in the Harbinger. . . . Bishop Heber has well expressed the sentiment of the above, and also of my own heart, that "the grave hath no terrors since the Savior hath died." I believe death is an enemy; but the prerogative of Messiah is to destroy not only death, but he who once had the power of death, insomuch that had not Jesus died and rose again, the eternal sleep of the dead would have been as accomplished a fact as that which gives all who are in Christ the cheering hope that though they die—fall asleep—they shall arise—awake and put on glorious strength.

I fully realize the importance of being in Christ a new creature. I fully realize the importance of knowing whereof we affirm of a doctrine, especially that doctrine which is of a purifying character, viz., believing all things written in the law of Moses and the prophets and the psalms concerning Messiah. Query. If we do not believe their testimony, how can we believe the words of Him who speaks the dead to life, and is the Judge of all the earth? I tremble when I think how little, ah! how very little, there is thought of the words of the Holy Spirit coming from the worthies of old. How openly the people ignore their testimony for Jesus, and do so by calling their writings "the letter that killeth," and professing to hope for glory, honor and incorruptibility when Jesus comes; this, I am well convinced, is putting darkness for light,—and woe, woe to such; so saith the Word.

The prophets are a cloud of witnesses, and for what?—for Jesus and his kingdom; they tell us of an age to come, in the which there shall be justice and judgment distributed to the inhabitants of earth. The Judge of all the earth will do right. And we are taught by this Judge to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven"; and to pray this prayer intelligently, we must believe in a kingdom to come, and in believing this, we have to believe what we read in Isaiah chap. 9, verses 6 and 7; also, Luke chap. 1, verses 31 to 33 inclusive; and not only to believe this, but also the "all things"; then, in order to be a participator in these things, we have several things to do; first, believe; then obey, "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before God"; and the reward is not, as is the too common belief—the inheritance of a kingdom above the stars, and beyond the bounds of time and space; but the reward is life and incorruptibility under the righteous administration of the King of kings and Lord of lords, when he sits as King in Mount Zion in Jerusalem, and when he scatters the cloud of darkness that now envelops the earth and mind of the people,—then, and not till then, will the victory be gained; then, and not till then, can the song of deliverance be sung; then, and not till then, will the gracious words of Messiah sound in the ears of the sleeper and those who are changed, "Come! ye blessed of my Father," and "Depart! ye workers of iniquity, I never knew ye," will be the ungracious words to the wicked.

The Sinner rebuked of God.

A christian brother who was converted to God about two years ago, after having lived a life of ungodliness for eighteen to twenty years, and who, since the time of his wondrous conversion, has worked hard to bring sinners to Christ, a few days ago, while earnestly engaged in prayer, his mind was at once impressed by the Spirit of God that he should go about in his entire neighborhood, to warn the people of the coming wrath of God. To obey God's commandment, he went from house to house, from door to door, and told the people to repent, and thereby escape the terrible judgments of God being poured out over the nations. While earnestly engaged in this business, he came to one poor widow, who was at the point of starving for want of bread; he gave her as much as she wanted, and she, being a christian, praised the Lord for his goodness towards her, a poor sinner. After this, he passed by a house where he heard some one playing the violin in a way which is generally done in low places of intoxication, etc. Without a moment's hesitation he rushed in and told the fiddler to repent and give his heart to Christ. The fiddler in return cursed his rebuke, ridiculed and scoffed him, and told him to clear his house, as he had no business to tell him any thing of the kind. The next evening the fiddler, with his fiddle, went to the same place of amusement to pursue his ungodly business. On his way home, between one and two o'clock in the night, he suddenly stumbled over something, his fiddle flying some distance from him, his head knocking violently on the ground, and, after a half hour's groaning and agonizing, he gave up the ghost. The whole neighborhood is startled at this wondrous judgment of God. O! who can tell what the result may be of this one fact? Let every christian be earnestly engaged in bringing sinners to Christ. Many a soul may be saved from death.

Phil. L. Reimer.

The Time of Blessedness.

"And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished. . . . And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."—Dan. 12: 7, 11—13.

We call attention to these three periods, as being fraught with special interest to the waiting church at this time.

1260,—1290,—1335.

1. They have a common commencement, and are parts of one and the same great period, which is divided into three parts. At the termination of each there is a marked event. The 1290 being an addition of thirty years to the 1260, and the 1335 an additional period of forty-five years to the 1290.

2. They relate to three lines of history. The 1260 relates to the papal power. The 1290 to the Eastern Antichrist. The 1335 to the time of universal blessedness.

3. The period of commencement. They commenced in A. D. 533. The best authorities sustain this position. Among those who have taken this view is the late Geo. Croley, D. D., LL. D., of the Church of England. We will give the substance of his argument on this point, mostly in his own language, and giving his words verbatim where the argument is involved. We quote from his work on the Apocalypse, published in 1827.

He says: "Some years since, in a casual reading of the Apocalypse, I was struck with the apparent reference of the eleventh chapter, that of the "two witnesses," to one of the most extraordinary events of our time, or any other, the abjuration of religion by government and people! a circumstance perfectly alone in the history of the world. But I further found that this event was declared to mark the conclusion of an era, on which the whole chronology of the Apocalypse was fixed, the well known '1260' years, which in their turn were declared to mark the papal supremacy, from the time of its commencement until the cessation of its 'power over the saints,'—its power of persecution.

"This abjuration occurred in 1793, the first year of the French Republic; reckoning 1260 years back led to their commencement in A. D. 533. On referring to Bishop Newton's work, to ascertain whether this date had been noticed, I found a note mentioning the opinion of Dr. Mann, of the Charter-house, then deceased, that the year 533 was to be considered as the true epoch of the papal supremacy. On reference to Baronious, the established authority among Roman Catholic annalists, I found the whole detail of Justinian's grant of supremacy to the Pope, formally given."

His statement "received an unanswerable support from the books of the imperial laws, in which the grant of the 'primacy and precedency over all the bishops of the Christian world,' is registered and repeated in a variety of forms. The entire transaction was of the most authentic and regular kind, and suitable to the importance of the transfer."

The removal of the seat of empire from Rome to Constantinople greatly increased the influence of the Roman bishop. He became the mediator of barbarians of the West, and the representative of the emperor of the East. Constantinople, the imperial residence, claimed the primacy of Christendom. But Rome disputed this claim, from its ancient sovereignty. The spirit of ambition spread, and after long and factious struggles, the Council of Chalcedon recognized five patriarchates,—of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Palestine. Leo, bishop of Rome, protested against this equality of the other sees; but the emperor for the time sided with the council. But the papal power was fixed on a foundation not to be shaken by councils or emperors.

The fifth century had been one of fierce convulsions, and the northern barbarians had broken in upon the empire of the West, and taken it into their own hands. The emperor was perplexed with his loss of power in the West, and with the quarrels of his people in the East, and in this state of things Rome urged her claim to the primacy, and did not rest till the guilty title was conferred by Justinian, in 533.

"In the beginning of this memorable year, Justinian sent two of the eastern bishops as his envoys, to state his case before John, 'the most holy archbishop and patriarch of Rome.' They were furnished with an imperial rescript detailing the controversy, expressing 'the emperor's anxiety in all instances to communicate touching the general church, to his holiness,' and declaring 'that for the purpose of preserving the unity of the apostolic see, and the existing establishment of the holy churches of God, he had lost no time in subjecting and uniting all the priesthood of the entire East to his holiness.' The rescript further declared the Roman bishop 'head of all the churches,' and concluded by making the 'knowledge of the doctrine held by his holiness, the standard of the faith, and source of unity to all the Christian world.' The act was done, and sanctioned by all the forms of state, and never abrogated,—the act of the first potentate of the world.

"From this era the church of Rome dates the earthly acknowledgment of her claim. Its heavenly authority is referred to the remoter source of the apostles. . . . . . Fifty years had scarcely passed before the patriarch of Constantinople dared to assume the name of 'Universal Bishop.' . . . But Gregory, the bishop of Rome, protested. And a successor, Boniface III. obtained from the emperor Phocas the recognition of the original title. And the bishop of Constantinople was consigned forever to the second rank.

4. The reception and confirmation of this title, by the pope, or bishop of Rome.

The emperor's letter must have been sent before the 25th of March, A. D. 533. For in his letter of that date to Epiphanius, he speaks of it as having been sent, and of its contents, viz., that the bishop of Rome was made "head of all bishops, and the true and effective corrector of heretics."

In the same month, in 534, the following year, the pope returned an answer, repeating the language of the emperor, applauding his homage to the see, and adopting the titles of the imperial mandate in the following words. He calls the emperor a "shining star, and approves his reverence for the apostolic chair, to which he has subjected and united all the churches, it being truly the head of all, as was testified by the rules of the fathers, the laws of princes, and the declarations of the emperor's piety."

In other words, he expressed himself thus: "I have accordingly received with my habitual reverence, the letter of your serenity. . . . . The consent of my brothers and fellow-bishops having been given to it in the interval; which edict, since it is conformable to apostolic doctrine, I CONFIRM WITH MY AUTHORITY."

The following decree of the emperor, under the head of ecclesiastical titles, in the "Novella" of the Justinian code, confirms the whole transaction:—

"We therefore decree that the most holy pope of the elder Rome is the first of all the priesthood, and that the most blessed archbishop of Constantinople, the new Rome, shall hold the second rank, after the holy apostolic chair of the elder Rome."

It is true that the patriarch of Constantinople did after this claim the primacy, or "universal bishop." But Gregory the Great, then bishop of Rome, spurned his claim of supremacy. And on the accession of Phocas, the question was decided. In A. D. 606, Boniface III. obtained from the emperor Phocas the original title. It was confirmed, not given anew. "The highest authorities among the civilians and annalists of Rome, spurn the idea that Phocas was the founder of the supremacy of Rome; they ascend to Justinian as the only legitimate source, and rightly date the title from the memorable year A. D. 533."

We thus establish the date of these times, by historic testimony of the clearest and most reliable nature.—A. D. 533.

Next, we notice the events that are to take place at the termination of each period.

1. The 1260 years terminated in A. D. 1793. The pope was to hold the saints in his hand, and persecute, kill, and carry into captivity, and take by spoil, 1260 years. At the end of this period, "the judgment was to set, and they (the ten kingdoms) were to take away his dominion, (as given by Justinian,) to consume and destroy his power till the end."—Dan. 7: 25, 26.

The fulfillment of this period took place in 1793. The judgment sat in that year, and they began to take away and to consume and destroy this power. For sixty-seven years this work has been going on, and it is now almost accomplished. We only wait for the coming of the Son of Man from heaven, to destroy him by the brightness of his coming.

The 1290 relate to the Mohammedan power, that was broken and began its decadence in 1822, the argument for which will be given in another number.

The 1335 relate to the time of universal blessedness. Daniel is to "stand in his lot in the end of the days." In the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days. 533 added to 1335, makes 1868.

How glorious the prospect of deliverance to the waiting people of God. Just as these times are being filled up, the Great Tribulation has commenced, and the signs in heaven and on earth all declare that the kingdom of God is at hand.

Church of the living God, awake! and behold your glorious prospects! Behold your king cometh, in the resurrection of the dead, and the restitution of the earth, to the Eden of eternal blessedness.

A few years at most will bring the Sabbath of rest and blessedness.

Church of the living God! Do not treat these things as "idle tales." They are solemn realities. Let us not be among the foolish virgins, and perish in our slumbers. Awake! arise, and be ready.—J. V. Himes.—Voice of the Prophets.

Tried.

Was that all? only got tried, did you say? Well, what did the trial prove? Did it prove that a "soft answer turneth away wrath," or show "how great a fire a little matter kindleth?" Which did it prove?

Only got "tried," sister; still your face grew red, your hands restless, your eyes out of place, your voice robbed of sweetness, and really, I thought you acted queer for a christian. Only tried, sister? You was mad, vexed, angry, passionate, wrathy, and if you only had been a man, blows would have come in showers. There, now, next time govern your temper; do not let it get control over you, and then call it a "trial from the Lord." It was only a trial from your evil nature, and it proved so. Own right up; there,—say you was mad, and done with it. If you have to own every time you are cross and ugly, your husband will have a pleasanter wife, your children a more affectionate mother, and the world a better inhabitant.

"Only got tried!" Indeed! so the whole host of backsliders might plead; but what a long trial they're having. Ah! Sister, these are excuses. Your trial is only a fit of natural ugliness. [illegible] down, pray the Lord, for grace, and [illegible]

Watchman, what of the Night?

"The morning cometh, and also the night."—Is. 21: 11.

Watchman! tell us of the night,
For thick darkness gathers round,
Black, mysterious clouds affright
Those who fear the trumpet's sound.
Traveler! these harbingers of woe to thee are peace and life,
They speak Messiah near, and end of Gentile strife.

Watchman! will no light appear
The narrow pathway to disclose?
Will not arise some glimmering star,
To guide my feet to sweet repose?
Traveler! from yon mountain's height, a light is rising to divide
The votaries of life from those who trust the surging Gentile tide.

Watchman! does God's word assure
A place of safety for his flock,
From pestilence and wrath secure,
Through faith upon his promised rock?
Traveler! o'er such the gates of death shall never close,
They'll live to greet their King, triumphant o'er their foes.

Watchman! my faith within me dies,
I'm in a wilderness shut in;
Dark clouds before obscure my skies,
Behind me press the hosts of sin.
Traveler! look up; the cloud shall fall behind upon thy foes,
While morning breaks on thee, the night shall rest on those;
Worn traveler, urge thy way, thy perils are well nigh o'er,
God's sea of wrath shall close, thy foes thou'lt see no more.

Living to the Glory of God.

How important that we are living continually for God; having his glory in view; seeking to promote his cause, to advance in knowledge of things pertaining to our eternal welfare. How essential that our hearts are continually filled with the love of God, and with the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit. Yes, this is of VITAL importance. If we have not this sweet comforter, our peace is gone, our confidence in prayer has ceased; and we are desolate and sad, unless we turn to the world, and then all is anxiety and care, nothing satisfying; all there is uncertain, and doubt and gloom reign supreme. How vast the contrast if we are living for God—seeking to do his will—knowing no will but his. All is then joy and peace. Come what may, his promises we can claim, can rely upon. He is our "Rock" and our "Fortress," a "stronghold" in time of trouble, a "present help in time of need." O how vain to trust in the vanities, the riches, and the wisdom of this world. How vain to trust in the puny arm of man. But upon the "arm of God" we can with confidence lean, trusting in Him who is all-wise and powerful, and who "doeth all things well."

Dear Brn. and Srs., who may read these lines, may we by the grace of God be enabled to live wholly to his glory. May we realize that we are not our own, but we are bought with a price. The precious blood of Jesus flowed for us; he was led as a lamb to the slaughter; he groaned and bled, suffered and died—yielded up his life for us, and now, blessed be God, he has ascended on high, and is there interceding with the Father in our behalf. O may it not be in vain! May we not trample under foot the blood of Jesus! May we not despise the great atoning sacrifice, but yield our hearts and all we have and are to him; seeking continually to possess his Spirit (for without it we are none of his), that we may be guided in all our walks and ways, and prove what is the acceptable and perfect will of God. Thus our peace will be "like a river;" and joyfully will we hail the dear Savior at his coming, and receive from him the welcome greeting, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Millennium.

Much is said of the Millennium, and many opinions are held by different orthodox churches. And some of them so very different from what I gather from the Book, that it seems proper to investigate. The word millennium is not in the Bible; but the term "a thousand years" is found in several places. As the word millennium is derived from too Latin words, mille, a thousand, and annus, year, signifying a thousand years, we shall not object to the term. Our inquiry then will be to learn what particular thousand years is spoken of. And first, we quote 2 Peter 3: 8;—"One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Some appear to understand by this, that the Lord is regardless of time, counting it all one eternal present. But we think it will help to understand this passage, to consider how the Lord has divided time. God created the world in six days, and rested on the seventh. Thus he divided time into sevens,—a very odd number, and as man seldom divides. But God, as though to rivet it on the mind of man, made to the Jews six working years, and then a Sabbath year. Moreover, the Jubilee, or great Sabbath year, which occurred after seven year weeks, all show that seven is God's number; and naturally suggests to the mind of man, that having made six thousand working years, there will be a Sabbath of a thousand years. And then we are told by Peter that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years; or, that one day answers to a thousand years"; thus, six days in the week should represent six thousand years of common time, and then the Sabbath day is a type of the seventh thousand years, or the millennium.

Secondly: Let us examine the proof of this great Sabbath. Rev. 20: 2;—"And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years." Verse 4;—"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." V. 5,—"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." 1 Thess. 4: 15, 16;—"For this we say unto you, by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (anticipate, or go before,) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God! and the dead in Christ shall rise first." This evidently includes all of the dead in Christ. Rev. 20: 6;—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." 1 Cor. 15: 51;—"Behold, I show you a mystery," says Paul, "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible; and we shall be changed."

It appears from the foregoing, that all the righteous dead shall rise in the first resurrection; that all the righteous living shall, at the same moment, be changed; so changed, as to be like the righteous who shall be raised from the dead. Next, let us consider the unrighteous dead. Rev. 20: 5;—"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Now this class being disposed of by good authority, we have only the wicked living to dispose of. Matt. 24: 40, on the coming of Christ, says:—"Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken and the other left." Now it being declared, that at the coming of Christ, one shall be taken and the other left; we are led to infer that the one is taken to his kind, to the company of christians who are raised from the dead; while the other is left with his kind, to sleep with the unrighteous dead a thousand years. Now that this is one and the same thousand years, is made very plain by reading Rev. 20, entire.

The sumum of the whole then is: That at the end of the week, of six thousand years, the great Sabbath will commence. At what particular time this week closes is not now my purpose to say; others have said; but that the Sabbath will commence at its close: that the trumpet of the archangel shall sound: that as the disciples saw Christ ascend into heaven, so, in like manner shall Christ descend from heaven; and as none but believers saw him go up, so none but believers shall see him come down: that all the righteous, from Abel to the present coming of Christ, shall be with him: that he shall sit upon the throne of his father David in Jerusalem: that the saints shall reign with him a thousand years. Herein shall be fulfilled what is spoken in numerous passages in the prophets, of the return of Israel to Jerusalem. Spiritual Israel, embracing all believers. Zech. 2: 12;—"And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day. And on the horses' bells shall be, Holiness unto the Lord."

Has this day come? Will it come in time? Will it be in eternity? Evidently it has not been, nor will be under the present dispensation. Neither does it savor of the things of eternity. But a thousand year Sabbath is to be, when all this evidently will be. "And the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed for a season, out of his prison." Mark, here, a thousand years cannot be in eternity, but in time, where day and night are continued, and years measured. Yet not under the present dispensation, for the righteous dead will be raised, and no wicked alive. For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the deep. And they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain. Then we conclude: that the millennium has not commenced; that it will not till Christ shall come, and the dead rise; that it is not to be brought forward by human agency; that it is near at hand; that we have not to look for a gathering of the Jews previous to Christ's coming; that it is wise to be watching and ready, so that we may have part in the first resurrection; for, on such, the second death hath no power.

Notes by the Way.

Manchester. Here are a few desolate sheep calling for food of the right kind to gather the flock and strengthen the weak things that remained, which had been weakened and scattered by ignorant and designing men, that pretended to feed the sheep when they had nothing but goat's feed to give. This always did make the flock sick, and some have died in this place, as in many others; but what few there were alive, came together. My visit was looked for with interest. There were some few hobby jockeys that had rode every hobby that had come along. This I anticipated, and tried to feed the humble, which they appreciated. The gathering spirit prevailed the six days I was with them, and it seemed that the Lord blessed the effort. All took courage. Some backsliders came out strong. Two come five miles in the snow to attend the meeting, a man and his wife, and led their little son nine years old, and returned Monday on foot.

One of the committee, who was very anxious for God to work some way to save the few, rose the first evening after I got through, and said he thanked God for that privilege. He related a singular presentiment of a few nights before. He had been praying for some time for the Lord to send some one there to help them. He saw the man, how he looked, and what he preached, and the effect it produced, etc.; and then turned, and pointing to me said, "That is the man, and the very subject;" and he never saw me before nor I him. This strange incident worked for the good of us all.

This is the third time I have had my coming anticipated. Once, every article of my clothing described, fashion and color of each garment, and height, and the very text I took. This man was a backslider at the time, and told his wife and neighbors what he dreamed, if it was a dream. "This was a man," said he, "that took me out of a place where I was dying." This was some time before he ever saw me. Bro. Pease will recollect this circumstance, as he was in the desk with me when the man told this fact, and pointed to his wife and neighbors then present, and said, "This is the man, you all see, I told you about helping me," etc. He then asked all to pray for him for he was a wicked backslider, and pointed to Eld. Pease and said, "You know how wicked I am; but I am going to turn about." After prayer he rejoiced that God had forgiven him. I left the next morning and have never seen him since. He followed me to the wagon as I started for Bangor, and gave me sixteen cents, all the money he had.

But to return to Manchester. The brethren want me to say their doors are open for the preaching brethren who have a disposition to gather with Christ and feed the flock of God; but hobby pedlers will not be invited, nor welcome if they come. Brethren, remember Manchester. There is some good wheat left among the chaff yet; it only wants winnowing out to show itself.

I left Wednesday for a three days meeting in East Kingston. Here is a remnant of Adventists, Methodists and Freewill Baptists, that meet together, and have agreed with Bro. White to preach to them for the present. We had a good time. The work began the first evening, and the three evenings I stayed all these different classes labored together for the salvation of sinners, which resulted in the conversion of some five or six, and a general waking up of the cold-hearted. When I left it bade fair for an extensive, thorough work of God. Bro. White was much encouraged, and is competent, with the help he has got, to carry on the work.

Next to Lowell. Found the brethren steady on their course, but rather moderate this cold weather. Was glad to see the old, tried friends, especially Bro. Daniel Churchill, who has just recovered from a severe illness. I think the people will still hear his trumpet sound the alarm of the gospel of the soon coming kingdom. We had a good congregation out and good attention all day, and signs of a revival, if the means are used. The Lord is on the giving hand. Let us keep at work while the day lasts.

A Dream.

I dreamed I died, and mixed with fellow clay,
Close by a common beggar's side I lay;
And as so mean a creature shock'd my pride,
Thus, like a corpse of quality I cried:
"Away! away! thou scoundrel! touch me not;
More manners learn, and at a distance rot."
"Thou scoundrel," in a louder tone, cried he,
"I scorn thy very words, and more scorn thee;
We are equal now, I'll not an inch resign;
This is my rotting place, and that is thine."
"Alas! too true; the sickening thought," I cried;
"The beggar and the prince are side by side."
Trembling with horrors dire of such a scene,
I woke, and glad to find it but a dream.
And musing still, in solemn mood, I prayed,
"Great God, whose hand the earth's foundations laid,
And spanned the seas, and curb'd the headlong wave,
Tell me, is there no hope beyond the grave?"
Then faith sublime, with heaven-plumed pinions, smiled,
With golden anchors cast, "Ah! yes, my child,
See yonder, midst the gloom of night forlorn,
A brilliant star of resurrection morn."
Then Hope sprang up, who seemed a youth divine,
And 'gan to paint the golden view sublime!
First in the scene, the angelic trump of God
Breaks on the ear of those beneath the sod.
The earth casts out her dead; nor more the slain
In dusty beds—they break the monster's chain,
And forth anew to life immortal spring—
Victory o'er death, and loud hosannahs sing.
With rapturous awe sublime I viewed the scene,
Nor dreaded more of death's dark vale to dream,
But triumph'd in the hope of victory won
Through Him who bid me pray "Thy kingdom come."

Z. CAMPBELL.

ELD. MILES GRANT:—Dear Sir,—If you please, you can publish the above. The dream was an actual fact, and the author has, I think, ably and scripturally put it in verse. I copied it some years ago, it having appeared in the Harbinger.... Bishop Heber has well expressed the sentiment of the above, and also of my own heart, that "the grave hath no terrors since the Savior hath died." I believe death is an enemy; but the prerogative of Messiah is to destroy not only death, but he who once had the power of death, insomuch that had not Jesus died and rose again, the eternal sleep of the dead would have been as accomplished a fact as that which gives all who are in Christ the cheering hope that though they die—fall asleep—they shall arise—awake and put on glorious strength.

I fully realize the importance of being in Christ a new creature. I fully realize the importance of knowing whereof we affirm of a doctrine, especially that doctrine which is of a purifying character, viz., believing all things written in the law of Moses and the prophets and the psalms concerning Messiah. Query. If we do not believe their testimony, how can we believe the words of Him who speaks the dead to life, and is the Judge of all the earth? I tremble when I think how little, ah! how very little, there is thought of the words of the Holy Spirit coming from the worthies of old. How openly the people ignore their testimony for Jesus, and do so by calling their writings "the letter that killeth," and professing to hope for glory, honor and incorruptibility when Jesus comes; this, I am well convinced, is putting darkness for light,—and woe, woe to such; so saith the Word.

The prophets are a cloud of witnesses, and for what?—for Jesus and his kingdom; they tell us of an age to come, in the which there shall be justice and judgment distributed to the inhabitants of earth. The Judge of all the earth will do right. And we are taught by this Judge to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven"; and to pray this prayer intelligently, we must believe in a kingdom to come, and in believing this, we have to believe what we read in Isaiah chap. 9, verses 6 and 7; also, Luke chap. 1, verses 31 to 33 inclusive; and not only to believe this, but also the "all things"; then, in order to be a participator in these things, we have several things to do; first, believe; then obey, "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before God"; and the reward is not, as is the too common belief—the inheritance of a kingdom above the stars, and beyond the bounds of time and space; but the reward is life and incorruptibility under the righteous administration of the King of kings and Lord of lords, when he sits as King in Mount Zion in Jerusalem, and when he scatters the cloud of darkness that now envelops the earth and mind of the people,—then, and not till then, will the victory be gained; then, and not till then, can the song of deliverance be sung; then, and not till then, will the gracious words of Messiah sound in the ears of the sleeper and those who are changed, "Come! ye blessed of my Father," and "Depart! ye workers of iniquity, I never knew ye," will be the ungracious words to the wicked.

The Sinner rebuked of God.

A christian brother who was converted to God about two years ago, after having lived a life of ungodliness for eighteen to twenty years, and who, since the time of his wondrous conversion, has worked hard to bring sinners to Christ, a few days ago, while earnestly engaged in prayer, his mind was at once impressed by the Spirit of God that he should go about in his entire neighborhood, to warn the people of the coming wrath of God. To obey God's commandment, he went from house to house, from door to door, and told the people to repent, and thereby escape the terrible judgments of God being poured out over the nations. While earnestly engaged in this business, he came to one poor widow, who was at the point of starving for want of bread; he gave her as much as she wanted, and she, being a christian, praised the Lord for his goodness towards her, a poor sinner. After this, he passed by a house where he heard some one playing the violin in a way which is generally done in low places of intoxication, etc. Without a moment's hesitation he rushed in and told the fiddler to repent and give his heart to Christ. The fiddler in return cursed his rebuke, ridiculed and scoffed him, and told him to clear his house, as he had no business to tell him any thing of the kind. The next evening the fiddler, with his fiddle, went to the same place of amusement to pursue his ungodly business. On his way home, between one and two o'clock in the night, he suddenly stumbled over something, his fiddle flying some distance from him, his head knocking violently on the ground, and, after a half hour's groaning and agonizing, he gave up the ghost. The whole neighborhood is startled at this wondrous judgment of God. O! who can tell what the result may be of this one fact? Let every christian be earnestly engaged in bringing sinners to Christ. Many a soul may be saved from death.

Phil. L. REIMER.

The Time of Blessedness.

"And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished. . . . And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."—Dan. 12: 7, 11—13.

We call attention to these three periods, as being fraught with special interest to the waiting church at this time.

1260,—1290,—1335.

1. They have a common commencement, and are parts of one and the same great period, which is divided into three parts. At the termination of each there is a marked event. The 1290 being an addition of thirty years to the 1260, and the 1335 an additional period of forty-five years to the 1290.

2. They relate to three lines of history. The 1260 relates to the papal power. The 1290 to the Eastern Antichrist. The 1335 to the time of universal blessedness.

3. The period of commencement. They commenced in A. D. 533. The best authorities sustain this position. Among those who have taken this view is the late GEO. CROLEY, D. D., LL. D., of the Church of England. We will give the substance of his argument on this point, mostly in his own language, and giving his words verbatim where the argument is involved. We quote from his work on the Apocalypse, published in 1827.

He says: "Some years since, in a casual reading of the Apocalypse, I was struck with the apparent reference of the eleventh chapter, that of the "two witnesses," to one of the most extraordinary events of our time, or any other, the abjuration of religion by government and people! a circumstance perfectly alone in the history of the world. But I further found that this event was declared to mark the conclusion of an era, on which the whole chronology of the Apocalypse was fixed, the well known '1260' years, which, in their turn were declared to mark the papal supremacy, from the time of its commencement until the cessation of its 'power over the saints,'—its power of persecution.

"This abjuration occurred in 1793, the first year of the French Republic; reckoning 1260 years back led to their commencement in A. D. 533. On referring to Bishop Newton's work, to ascertain whether this date had been noticed, I found a note mentioning the opinion of Dr. Mann, of the Charter-house, then deceased, that the year 533 was to be considered as the true epoch of the papal supremacy. On reference to Baronious, the established authority among Roman Catholic annalists, I found the whole detail of Justinian's grant of supremacy to the Pope, formally given."

His statement "received an unanswerable support from the books of the imperial laws, in which the grant of the 'primacy and precedency over all the bishops of the Christian world,' is registered and repeated in a variety of forms. The entire transaction was of the most authentic and regular kind, and suitable to the importance of the transfer."

The removal of the seat of empire from Rome to Constantinople greatly increased the influence of the Roman bishop. He became the mediator of barbarians of the West, and the representative of the emperor of the East. Constantinople, the imperial residence, claimed the primacy of Christendom. But Rome disputed this claim, from its ancient sovereignty. The spirit of ambition spread, and after long and factious struggles, the Council of Chalcedon recognized five patriarchates,—of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Palestine. Leo, bishop of Rome, protested against this equality of the other sees; but the emperor for the time sided with the council. But the papal power was fixed on a foundation not to be shaken by councils or emperors.

The fifth century had been one of fierce convulsions, and the northern barbarians had broken in upon the empire of the West, and taken it into their own hands. The emperor was perplexed with his loss of power in the West, and with the quarrels of his people in the East, and in this state of things Rome urged her claim to the primacy, and did not rest till the guilty title was conferred by Justinian, in 533.

"In the beginning of this memorable year, Justinian sent two of the eastern bishops as his envoys, to state his case before John, 'the most holy archbishop and patriarch of Rome.' They were furnished with an imperial rescript detailing the controversy, expressing 'the emperor's anxiety in all instances to communicate touching the general church, to his holiness,' and declaring 'that for the purpose of preserving the unity of the apostolic see, and the existing establishment of the holy churches of God, he had lost no time in subjecting and uniting all the priesthood of the entire East to his holiness.' The rescript further declared the Roman bishop 'head of all the churches,' and concluded by making the 'knowledge of the doctrine held by his holiness, the standard of the faith, and source of unity to all the Christian world.' The act was done, and sanctioned by all the forms of state, and never abrogated,—the act of the first potentate of the world.

"From this era the church of Rome dates the earthly acknowledgment of her claim. Its heavenly authority is referred to the remoter source of the apostles. . . . . Fifty years had scarcely passed before the patriarch of Constantinople dared to assume the name of 'Universal Bishop.' . . . But Gregory, the bishop of Rome, protested. And a successor, Boniface III. obtained from the emperor Phocas the recognition of the original title. And the bishop of Constantinople was consigned forever to the second rank.

4. The reception and confirmation of this title, by the pope, or bishop of Rome.

The emperor's letter must have been sent before the 25th of March, A. D. 533. For in his letter of that date to Epiphanius, he speaks of it as having been sent, and of its contents, viz., that the bishop of Rome was made "head of all bishops, and the true and effective corrector of heretics."

In the same month, in 534, the following year, the pope returned an answer, repeating the language of the emperor, applauding his homage to the see, and adopting the titles of the imperial mandate in the following words. He calls the emperor a "shining star, and approves his reverence for the apostolic chair, to which he has subjected and united all the churches, it being truly the head of all, as was testified by the rules of the fathers, the laws of princes, and the declarations of the emperor's piety."

In other words, he expressed himself thus: "I have accordingly received with my habitual reverence, the letter of your serenity. . . . . The consent of my brothers and fellow-bishops having been given to it in the interval; which edict, since it is conformable to apostolic doctrine, I CONFIRM WITH MY AUTHORITY."

The following decree of the emperor, under the head of ecclesiastical titles, in the "Novella" of the Justinian code, confirms the whole transaction:—

"We therefore decree that the most holy pope of the elder Rome is the first of all the priesthood, and that the most blessed archbishop of Constantinople, the new Rome, shall hold the second rank, after the holy apostolic chair of the elder Rome."

It is true that the patriarch of Constantinople did after this claim the primacy, or "universal bishop." But Gregory the Great, then bishop of Rome, spurned his claim of supremacy. And on the accession of Phocas, the question was decided. In A. D. 606, Boniface III. obtained from the emperor Phocas the original title. It was confirmed, not given anew. "The highest authorities among the civilians and annalists of Rome, spurn the idea that Phocas was the founder of the supremacy of Rome; they ascend to Justinian as the only legitimate source, and rightly date the title from the memorable year A. D. 533."

We thus establish the date of these times, by historic testimony of the clearest and most reliable nature.—A. D. 533.

Next, we notice the events that are to take place at the termination of each period.

1. The 1260 years terminated in A. D. 1793. The pope was to hold the saints in his hand, and persecute, kill, and carry into captivity, and take by spoil, 1260 years. At the end of this period, "the judgment was to set, and they (the ten kingdoms) were to take away his dominion, (as given by Justinian,) to consume and destroy his power till the end."—Dan. 7: 25, 26.

The fulfillment of this period took place in 1793. The judgment sat in that year, and they began to take away and to consume and destroy this power. For sixty-seven years this work has been going on, and it is now almost accomplished. We only wait for the coming of the Son of Man from heaven, to destroy him by the brightness of his coming.

The 1290 relate to the Mohammedan power, that was broken and began its decadence in 1822, the argument for which will be given in another number.

The 1335 relate to the time of universal blessedness. Daniel is to "stand in his lot in the end of the days." In the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days. 533 added to 1335, makes 1868.

How glorious the prospect of deliverance to the waiting people of God. Just as these times are being filled up, the Great Tribulation has commenced, and the signs in heaven and on earth all declare that the kingdom of God is at hand.

Church of the living God, awake! and behold your glorious prospects! Behold your king cometh, in the resurrection of the dead, and the restitution of the earth to the Eden of eternal blessedness.

A few years at most will bring the Sabbath of rest and blessedness.

Church of the living God! Do not treat these things as "idle tales." They are solemn realities. Let us not be among the foolish virgins, and perish in our slumbers. Awake! arise, and be ready.—J. V. HIMES.—Voice of the Prophets.

Tried.

Was that all? only got tried, did you say? Well, what did the trial prove? Did it prove that a "soft answer turneth away wrath," or show "how great a fire a little matter kindleth?" Which did it prove?

Only got "tried," sister; still your face grew red, your hands restless, your eyes out of place, your voice robbed of sweetness, and really, I thought you acted queer for a christian. Only tried, sister? You was mad, vexed, angry, passionate, wrathy, and if you only had been a man, blows would have come in showers. There, now, next time govern your temper; do not let it get control over you, and then call it a "trial from the Lord." It was only a trial from your evil nature, and it proved so. Own right up; there,—say you was mad, and done with it. If you have to own every time you are cross and ugly, your husband will have a pleasanter wife, your children a more affectionate mother, and the world a better inhabitant.

"Only got tried." Indeed! so the whole host of backsliders might plead; but what a long trial they're having. Ah! friend, there are causes. Your trial is only a fit of natural ugliness. Go down, pray the Lord for grace, and [illegible]

Important Items.

In my various reading I occasionally meet with items which interest me, and some which I would like to have other persons and parties see and remember. Here is one, an admission, or a testimony, by the late eloquent Stephen Olin, who died saying, "I rest on the old foundations," found in an address delivered before a missionary meeting, the theme of which was "The duty of the church to evangelize the world." In noticing obstacles, he says:—

"The great error—the error of thinking the gospel not quite indispensable to the salvation of the heathen, leads naturally enough to another of a like paralyzing tendency, to the error of doubting whether, after all, God really designs the conversion of the world to christianity. The new views and interpretations of Scripture to which the existing discussion about Christ's second coming and personal reign has given birth, have greatly increased the incredulity, and with it the supineness and indifference of the churches on this subject. Those predictions of the universal triumph of christianity, the bright visions of millennial glory, which were wont to exert on the pious heart, an influence so strong and hallowing, have lost with multitudes their significance and power. They no longer admonish us of duty, nor ensure victory to the militant church, but rather prefigure revolutions above the sphere of human agencies, and ulterior to the catastrophe of the existing dispensation. As in other great errors in religion, the mischiefs of the new system have far outrun its actual progress, and it has shed the blight of a chilling scepticism on many minds, by far too sane and enlightened to give credit to its dogmas."

The above testimony to the wide-spread influence and reception of what is characterized above as "new views and interpretations of Scripture," coming from such a source is really flattering, showing the recent wide diffusion of the "Gospel of the kingdom," or pre-millennialism; and if it can be shown by an equally able and impartial witness to have been in reality the ancient faith of apostolic time, we may well be sceptical with reference to the world's conversion; a scepticism without a "chill" or "blight." Let us now turn to a work on the millennium, published in 1832, by Prof. Bush, while he was a Presbyterian. He as a faithful historian states:

"The millennarian hypothesis, as it respects the patronage which it has at different periods received, has been remarkable for a series of waxings and wanings. During the first ages of the church, (mark,) when the style of christianity was to believe, to love, and to suffer, this sentiment seems to have obtained a prevalence so general as to be properly entitled all but ABSOLUTELY CATHOLIC. After the lapse of the first three centuries (when the man of sin arose), a gradual change was wrought in public opinion in regard to this doctrine—a change effected (mark how!) by the combined influence of secular prosperity in the church, and of the controversial opposition of great names against the tenet itself."

Among these were Origen, that prince and leader of spiritualizers, Augustine and Jerome. Our faith was well nigh lost during the dark ages, and now that it is exhumed, Stephen Olin calls it a "new view." Let us hear Bush again, while he gives his opinion, which is quite novel and interesting. He says:—

"Even though we suppose their (the first christians) views erroneous, yet the error was in itself an innocent one, and with the fires of martyrdom kindling around them, and every species of torture devised to aggravate their sufferings, what could buoy up the spirits of such a class of men in the hour of mortal agony, but the promises and prospects of a glorious reward such as their rude and simple, but honest minds saw disclosed in the letter of the Scriptures? And is it any disparagement to the wisdom of the Most High, that he should have so framed (notice the insinuation) the word of truth that certain portions of it might be susceptible of an interpretation, which, though natural, was not necessary, though fallacious, was yet feasible, and adapted to minister at particular seasons and under peculiar circumstances, the most solid support and consolation to its disciples?" How like the maxim "Let us do evil that good may come"; no wonder that Bush became an enthusiastic Swedenborgian, and adopted their lax principles of interpretation. But we quote again:—

"For ourselves we have no difficulty in supposing that the millennarian scheme was in a peculiar manner winked at in the early ages of christianity, and that a belief of it was calculated to produce and did produce results of a most auspicious character, which, under the circumstances, a different and even a more correct construction of the sacred oracles would have failed to effect." And to cap the climax, he says, "For aught we know, in fact the apostles themselves might have been of the [illegible]." Very likely, since they taught it, and the early church believed it, and the mother of harlots rejected it, we may well embrace it as the true and certain hope of the gospel. [illegible]

[illegible] "may" of Adventism. It may be so, since Paul's time of "peril" has arrived, and "iniquity abounds."

Indeed, that description given by Scotland's sublime and beautiful poet is applicable now, while many cry "peace and safety," the time for the triumph of the gospel at hand, and blame those who proclaim Christ's advent for its delay.

"Meanwhile the earth increased in wickedness,
And hasted daily to fill up her cup.
Satan raged loose, sin had her will, and death
Enough. Blood trod upon the heels of blood;
Revenge in desperate mood, at midnight met
Revenge; war brayed to war; deceit deceived
Deceit; lie cheated lie; and treachery
Mined under treachery; and perjury
Swore back on perjury; blasphemy
Arose with hideous blasphemy; and curse
Loud answered curse; and drunkard, stumbling fell
O'er drunkard fallen; and husband, husband met,
Returning from each other's bed defiled;
Thief stole from thief; and robber on the way,
Knocked robber down; and lewdness, violence,
And hate met lewdness, violence and hate.
Oh, earth! thy hour was come! the last elect
Was born, complete the number of the good:
And the last sand fell from the glass of time."

Let no one be deceived, the times are perilous, and what makes them peculiarly so, is the fact that multitudes have the form of godliness without the power, a piety that will tolerate the theatre; this reminds me of what Pollock wrote; he says:—

"The theatre was, from the very first,
The favorite haunt of sin, though honest men,
Some very honest, wise, and worthy men,
Maintained it might be turned to good account;
And so perhaps it might, but never was."

The mass of those that preach are heralding the world's conversion, some with real eloquence, though I must, in the language of another, characterize it as "mean eloquence that wanted sacred truth," or, at least, dangerous eloquence; because it has power to put the church asleep, while the nations "are angry and the time of the dead that they should be judged" is at hand, now to be expected. Let us watch and be sober, for the times are ominous in whatever aspect viewed. Let us heed their warning voice, and be captivated by the eloquence of truth—Bible truth.

Consistency.

I often read in our different Advent papers of a "church covenant," or "articles of association," in which brethren agree to take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as our divine rule and guide in all matters of discipline, doctrine, faith and practice," etc., or something to this effect. Now, the point is this,—it is of the greatest importance that our profession should never exceed our practice. The harmony between our words and actions should never be interrupted. We should ever live as we profess. Practice has a thousand-fold more effect upon community than profession. Now, then, the Old Testament requires (did require) sacrifices, (literal) circumcision, resting upon the seventh-day Sabbath, with many other ceremonies and rites. Again, it requires (required) the hating of enemies, the reverse of what the New Testament requires. If I should accept the Old Testament as still binding, and declare it as my "rule and guide" in all matters of discipline, doctrine, faith and practice, how could I avoid a compliance with its requisitions? Why do not our brethren practice in this respect as well as to profess? I think our Sabbatarian brethren are more consistent than we are. I am a lover of consistency. The relation existing between the Old and New Testaments I fear is but little understood. I accept the New Testament as my rule of faith and practice. "For till John appeared, all the prophets and the law were your instructors."—Matt. 11: 13.

Did Cain have Faith?

AN INQUIRY.

Bro. Grant:—I noticed in the present Vol. of the Crisis, No. 22, an article upon the subject of "Faith," by R. V. Lyon, I think the subject one worthy of attention, and I admire much of that letter, but there being to me some views therein presented which I do not understand, and Bro. Lyon being an old friend, with your permission, through the Crisis, I will ask him how he will reconcile his views with the Word? In speaking of the offerings which Cain and Abel brought and laid upon the altar, the brother says they both "brought of their best, but Cain's without faith; Abel's was with faith." Now I would like to ask where he obtained his testimony that Cain had no faith? Why was that altar erected, and Cain's best brought and laid thereon as a sacrifice, if he had no faith? What did our kind heavenly Father design to teach Cain when he said to him, "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?"—Gen. 4: 7. As the brother acknowledges the offerings to be equal in value, for aught we know, at all events each brought his best, will he be so good as to give me a little information on the subject?

Publish Good Tidings.

We think much good would result from the publication of the Lord's doings in different places. We wish all would send brief accounts of the fruits of their labors in the different parts of the vineyard of the Lord. It is very cheering to every friend of Jesus and his word to hear that sinners are being converted, and backsliders reclaimed. Such tidings are eminently calculated to arouse others to more activity in the cause of Christ, while they cheer the desponding and fainting one to hold out still longer without yielding to the surrounding discouragements. As the reading of accounts of murders, piracies, and other deeds of darkness tends to make murderers, pirates and other wicked men; so the reading of revival accounts incline christians to more activity in well doing. Such reports carry with them a very healthy stimulus. Come, brethren, tell us the good news, that all may share in your rejoicings, and that others may be aroused to labor still more earnestly during the little time that remains before the coming of Christ.

The Holy Spirit.

What is the Holy Spirit? How are we to be filled with it? How can we tell the difference between the operation of the Holy Spirit and the spirit of Mesmerism?

T. M. Preble.

In the first part of our answer to these inquiries, we endeavored to show from plain Scriptures, that the Holy Spirit is not the written word, or enveloped in it; but was an active agent before the Bible had any existence; and consequently would continue such, if the Bibles were all destroyed. We also found it was given as a "Comforter" independent of the word.

In continuing the answer to the question, "What is the Holy Spirit?" we would remark again, negatively, that it is not a being. In Acts 10: 45, we are informed that the Holy Spirit was "poured out" upon the Gentiles as it had been on the day of Pentecost upon the church at Jerusalem. But it is not proper to say a being is "poured out." On the day of Pentecost we read, "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." If it is a being by itself, it could only fill one person at a time; because every personal entity must proceed entire in all its parts, or else each part must become a separate being, in which case there would be as many Holy Spirits as there were different individuals who were filled; but there is only one; therefore, when all were filled with the same Spirit, it seems clear that it was not a being. Again, we read that Jesus was "anointed .... with the Holy Ghost and with power."—Acts 10: 38. We can conceive how Christ could be anointed by the Father, but not with a being. The power with which he was anointed certainly was not a being. Again, says Paul, "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God."—1 Cor. 6: 19. It is not reasonable to suppose that there is a being in every child of God, which is called the Holy Ghost, for then of necessity there must be as many Holy Ghosts as there are christians, which is contrary to the plain teaching of the Scriptures. Hence we come to the conclusion that the Holy Spirit is not a being. To this conclusion it may be objected, that it is often represented by the pronoun he, in the masculine gender. This point will be duly considered in its place.

Before we pass to consider what the Holy Spirit is, let us notice some of its offices, or works. We have already learned that it moved holy men to write prophecy.

Secondly. It keeps us in prayer:—"Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." It does not look consistent to say that it is the word that helps our infirmities when we pray. Besides the word rendered Spirit is never rendered word; consequently they are not used interchangeably. The Spirit never means the word, and the word never means the Spirit. The latter preceded the former and prompted men to write it.

Thirdly. The Spirit may be resisted: "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye."—Acts 7: 51.

Fourthly. It may be taken from us. Says David, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me."—Ps. 51: 11. The word may remain when the Spirit is gone.

Fifthly. The Holy Spirit becomes our companion and comforter in answer to prayer. Says Jesus, "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"—Luke 11: 13. When our heavenly Father gives us the Holy Spirit, he does not give a new revelation, or supplement to the Bible. It is also evident, from the passage just quoted, that the Spirit is not our Father himself in [illegible]

Sixthly. The Spirit bears witness that the christian is a child of God. Says John, "Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit."—1 John 4: 13. Says Paul, "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."—Rom. 8: 15–16. We do not know that we dwell in the Lord, "because he hath given us of his" word; for thousands have that, who have no "witness" of their acceptance. As we have before found, it is "given to them that obey" the Lord, and abides with them as a "comforter."

We now come back to the inquiry, "What is the Holy Spirit?" As we have found that is not the word nor a being, what is it? We answer, an emanation or influence proceeding from God; or as one has expressed it, "God's working power." Said the Savior to the disciples:—"But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."—Matt. 10: 19–20. From this we learn that it is the Spirit of our Father, or our Father's Spirit. Again, we read, "And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost."—John 20: 22. We read of Christ, that "God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him;" implying that others have a limited amount. But a being is not given by measure; we have the whole or none. When Jesus "breathed" on his disciples, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," he did not breathe the word nor a being upon them, but a holy influence or power. When the Savior was about to leave the world, he said to his disciples, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." On the day of Pentecost the promise was fulfilled, when they were baptized in the Holy Spirit, at the time it filled the room where they were gathered. They then received the power needed to go and preach the word. Jesus instructs us that the Holy Spirit,—"the Spirit of truth .... proceedeth from the Father."—John 15: 26. He does not say it is the Father; but it "proceedeth from the Father." That "which proceedeth from" a being is not the person from whom it proceeds; and still it may partake of his nature, act as his agent, and be properly represented by the same pronoun that would stand for the name of the individual from whom the power issues.

Let us now consider some facts, in order that we may obtain light on this interesting subject. It is well known that even the lower animals exert a spiritual influence over each other. Take the serpent for instance, and observe its powers to charm birds and other animals. In these cases, there is a controlling power proceeding from the snake to the object; otherwise he could not influence them only by actual personal contact. The following account of a man charmed by a snake, which was published in the Syracuse Standard, illustrates the point under consideration:—

"A few days since, while Mr. Northrop and several friends connected with the Central Road were examining the bridges on the road, the party passed under a bridge, on one of the abutments of which a bird had built her nest. A large black snake lay on the stone, opposite the nest, charming the birds, when Mr. Northrop passed between the snake and the birds. The charm was so strong that the moment he caught sight of the snake he stopped involuntarily, and stood perfectly motionless, until his friends, discovering his position, approached and killed the reptile, and relieved both Mr. Northrop and the birds from their unpleasant predicament."

In this example, as in all other similar ones, it is evident that an unseen power proceeded from the serpent to the birds and the man, which could be detected only by its effects. It is not the serpent in the primary sense, neither is that influence a being, while at the same time it produces material results; and when the man, or the birds are filled with it, they are then under the control of the serpent.

The same is true in mesmerism. There is a power, or spiritual influence, which proceeds from the operator, by means of which he controls both the physical and mental abilities of his subject. When the mesmerised person is filled with the spiritual influence of the mesmerizer, he is then controlled with ease; so when we yield to obey the Lord, and are filled with his Holy Spirit, then by means of it God can prompt every action and emotion in harmony with his word. When a person yields to be mesmerised, in one sense the operator is in him, or else he could not control him mentally and physically; but he is not in him personally; in a similar way, we understand that God dwells in the saints by means of the Holy Spirit, "which proceedeth from him." As the rays of the sun illumine the vast space surrounding it in all directions, imparting light and heat to all within its influence; so the Spirit of God radiates from him to all the inhabitants of the world; and by means of this he is present with all his children at once, while he himself is in heaven; for he says, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."—Matt. 18: 20. When we yield to obey him, then we become temples for the Holy Spirit, and by means of this Christ dwells in us, while personally he is with the Father in heaven. The apostle says, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"—1 Cor. 3: 16. As this Spirit is "God's working power," and is, in one sense, God present with us, it seems proper that it should be represented at times by the pronoun he in the masculine gender, as properly as wisdom by the pronoun her. The word spirit occurs first in Gen. 1: 2. "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Here we find God exerting his power by means of his Spirit; so when the Savior was raised, as well as on the day of Pentecost. By means of this he is omnipresent, and comforts every saint at the same time. Says Paul, "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."—1 Cor. 12: 7. The Syriac reads:—"And to each man there is given a manifestation of the Spirit, that it may aid him." But many "resist the Holy Ghost," and thereby deprive themselves of the benefits of its illumination, and continue in sin and darkness. It is given us for our "profit," but when continually resisted, men are left to go their own way, and to be filled with their own doings.

We think the point is clear that the Holy Spirit is not the word, nor a being, but a holy influence or emanation from God, by means of which he exerts his power in all parts of the universe, convicting sinners and comforting saints.

"Owe no Man any thing."

The following valuable hints to preachers are from "The American Christian Review," published at Cincinnati. The writer enumerates the following reasons for keeping out of debt:—

"1. Because some, at least, of those with whom you are in arrears will complain of you and thus cripple your influence. No matter whether your misfortune is for want of prudence or in spite of it, so uncharitable are they, poor fellow creatures.

2. Because thy misfortune in the hands of infidels will be turned against the cause you plead, and thus it will be disparaged.

3. Because your sense of honor and religious pride forbid that you should be happy in debt and without the means to pay it; and,

4. Because we are commanded to 'owe no man any thing, but to love one another.'"

The writer gives the following rules and remarks to be observed by those who would keep out of debt:—

"1. Live within your income, be it great or small. 2. Labor only where your labors will be appreciated.

If thou hast elaborated thy views of the gospel of Christ in the schools, and clothed them in the broadcloth of learning, unless you can lay off this scholastic exterior and clothe the word of life in a home-spun habiliment, then go thou not to the humble in literature; they will not appreciate thy labors, and God has not called thee there. But if thy views have been elaborated in the lowly cot, and thou hast staid away from the pathway of the learned, then go thou not to the refined, whose ears have been accustomed to the salute of a chaste and fascinating style, for they will not hear thee nor reward thee, nor has God called thee there: or if thou canst be learned or unlearned as the occasion may require; if thou canst be humble among the humble, and exalted among the exalted; if thou canst be 'all things unto all men,' then thou mayest go whithersoever thy will inclines thee, for thy labors will be appreciated and rewarded alike, beneath the clapboard roof of the forest, and the lofty spire of the city; provided in either case thou hast a well defined sympathy, and canst make thy lost brother feel that thou lovest him and art anxious for him to go with thee to the skies. But it may be after all, my brother, that God, thy Father, has not called thee to this work by giving thee the proper endowments. If so, be not thou the last to find it out; and having made the discovery, go thou and seek another calling, for it is from thence thy bread must come. Be thy lot what it may, the Lord bless thee, my brother, and keep thee and finally save thee, is thy brother's prayer.

A word to my private brethren: To what class does your preacher belong? Is he involved beyond his means to pay? or if out of debt, is he barely able to keep soul and body together? Does his lean support compel him to wear a worse hat than thou? Does his coat bear marks of age upon it? Is he restrained to a coarse and scanty diet? and does his family appear at a disadvantage in society, whilst the reverse of all this is true in thine own case? If so, very well. He will not complain of thee, for he has learned in 'whatever condition he is placed, therewith to be content.' Phil. 4: 11. But know thou, O, my brother, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment. He will send his angel shortly and lay thee down in death, and the lowing herd shall salute thy ear no more, and thy merchandise shall be taken from thee, and the sun shall quit his shining, and the stars their twinkling and their rolling; then shall God, thy Father, send a messenger for thee, and thou shalt answer this question: Why didst thou thus treat thy poor brother, who showed thee the way of life? Canst thou answer it?

F. W. Hodson.

☞ It often happens that christians, when they resort in faith to prayer and the word of God, feel very much cast down because they can get no consolation therefrom. When, in times of distress and temptation, they go to God for help, they seem to themselves to be forgotten and forsaken. And yet, when our Savior bowed in Gethsemane, he, too, seemed to himself to be forgotten and forsaken of his Father. In that extremity of our Savior's life God hid his face from him. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—Since the publication of the article on "Faith and Prayer," I have received quite a number of letters from invalids, giving a brief statement of their trials and sufferings, and soliciting prayer for their recovery. Two requested me to send a request for prayer to the "Crisis." With your permission, I will address these individuals through the paper.

To my Invalid Correspondents.

I am glad to receive your letters, though I feel that too much is expected of a weak and unworthy sister. Could I in return pour balm into your wounded hearts, could I soothe your troubled minds, could I remove your heavy burdens, could I lead you out of your perplexities, with what joy would I seize my pen and write the words which would bring to you such blessings, and could my prayers prevail on your behalf and bring the healing balm to those aching heads and enfeebled bodies, how quickly would they secure to you the boon you crave. If it afford you any degree of comfort to know that my heart sympathizes with you in your sorrow, and that the individual wants of each one who addresses me, are borne at the twilight hour on the wings of prayer to the throne of God, then be this consolation yours.

But while it affords encouragement and strength to know that we are specially remembered by christian friends in their supplications, there is still far greater consolation derived from the knowledge that there is One who has "borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." One who has partaken of our humanity and formed an acquaintance with its infirmities, pains and temptations, and who can therefore be touched with the feeling thereof, and not only is he qualified by personal experience to sympathize with us in our varied sorrows and trials, but possessed also of divinity, he has the ability to succor. Spiritual deliverances are fully pledged in the covenant, and these we may claim with perfect confidence. Deliverance from sin, from temptation, from bondage and burdens which weigh the spirit down, strength made perfect in weakness, grace sufficient for the day, and wisdom to those who lack, are all pledged on the part of Christ, and for the reception of these blessings we may come with assurance of faith to the throne.

But there are physical sufferings from which we have no promise of exemption until the resurrection morn shall bring a glorious and immortal body. "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened" with the thousand ills resulting from sin and its death-penalty, and it is not to be expected that God will vouchsafe unto us, because we are christians, an exemption from these evils. Pains must needs be experienced in these frail bodies, subject to mortality. Tears will flow over the return to dust of loved ones, so long as the atmosphere, now pregnant with disease and death, remains unchanged. Suffering is the lot of all, to a greater or less degree.

Sometimes our heavenly Father, for wise purposes, perhaps to reveal his power, to afford striking illustrations of the efficacy of prayer to strengthen faith, or to prepare the individual for greater usefulness, doth rebuke for a season the invader's approach, and by the power of the Holy Spirit, re-invigorate the frail tabernacle, and restore to health an afflicted disciple. But this is the exception to a general rule. It will not do, therefore, because some have been miraculously healed, to cherish the hope that all invalids may thus be restored. While we fully believe that such cases might be greatly multiplied, yet we do as fully believe that very many who are subject to constant suffering physically, will not have the cup removed, however great their desire, or earnest their supplications. We would not, however, by these remarks, hinder or discourage one from applying to God for a cure, or even pressing their suit with importunity. We would not have one refrain from calling upon the elders, receiving the anointing oil, and offering united prayer for recovery, for the needful faith may be inspired, and the sick raised up to health.

We would say to you who are seeking unto God for healing, be sure that you are actuated by right motives. Is it merely to get rid of suffering, or is it for the glory of God, and the good of others? It will not do to seek for renewed strength in order that you may lavish it upon worldly things, or consume it upon your fleshly lusts. If you ask it in order to be better prepared to labor in the cause of God your request will not be disapproved, even though not granted.

Many there are who have experienced spiritual blessings beyond what they ever attained in health, and have glorified God more in the midst of the fires, than when in prosperity. The spirit exhibited by the "Man of Sorrows," ought to be diligently sought and cultivated. Our hearts ought to be disposed at all times to acquiesce in the Divine will, whether it be for us to do or to suffer. It is our blessed privilege to cast all of our burdens on the Lord, and realize his sustaining grace.

To Sister W. I would say, be assured that whatever God requires of you, he will give you ability to perform. When Christ required the withered arm to be stretched forth, power sufficient was imparted at the moment. The man helpless for thirty-eight years, could rise, take up his bed and walk, at the command of Jesus. Our heavenly Father will never require of us impossibilities. Let not your will rebel, nor a consciousness of inability prevent your obedience to the voice of the spirit. Whatsoever the Master saith unto thee, do it, if it is to present wine from vessels containing, seemingly, nothing but water.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon you all, and may you be the recipients of all that health which he sees best to bestow on you. Write me as often and as freely as you will, and be assured, you will ever find in me an unworthy, but true friend.

Mary D. Wellcome.

Correspondence.

From Z. Whiting.

Bro. Grant:—Although of late I have had a pretty large share of earth's trials and embarrassments, I have still been enabled by grace divine to hope in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, my refuge and my Redeemer, and to look forward with longing, joyful expectation to speedy redemption. And I trust through that grace and mercy the trials through which I have been called to pass have had the effect of bringing me nearer to God and the mercy-seat, and to a deeper sense of my own utter weakness and dependence on that arm which is Omnipotent, and of the importance of living, not for myself or for this world, which as a shadow is passing away, but for that kingdom which shall stand forever, feeling and confessing myself but a pilgrim and stranger, having no abiding place or continuing city here. * * * *

I would say for the encouragement of the waiting ones, that it does appear to me we now see the rapid advance of the last tokens of Christ's speedy approach. We are told in Luke 21: 25, 26, "There shall be on earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." I do not think this has yet been accomplished, but I do believe that in the present commotions, dissolution and distress in our own country, and the threatening aspect of Europe, we hear the rumbling of its approach, and may well look up and lift up our heads.

In reference to the idea advanced by some that antichrist is to be developed after the downfall of the Papacy, I would say that to my mind the prophetic chart teaches that when mystic Babylon is overthrown, apostles and prophets are called upon to rejoice over her, the marriage of the Lamb having come. And in Rev. 19: 1, 2, we find the two events celebrated in one loud and long continued strain of hallelujahs and praise, "for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Also from the fact that in her, Rev. 18: 24, was found the blood of saints and prophets, and of all that were slain upon the earth, she must be the last, great persecuting power, as she could not inherit the blood which should be shed after she had passed away. Also, according to Dan. 7, that same horn, into whose hands the saints were to be given until a time, times and the dividing of a time, was to make war with the saints and prevail against them until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober.

From J. T. Ongley.

Bro. Grant:—The truth is gaining ground in this region, notwithstanding the opposition there is against us. Sinners have been led to fall in love with Jesus and his blessed Word, backsliders are reclaimed, church members converted to the truth of the nearness of the coming of Jesus. As one brother said the other evening, he had exchanged nothing for something; also, that God is love, instead of a tyrant, as is presented by the popular teaching of the day, though just in the destruction of those that will not come to him that they might have life. I frequently hear some brother or sister say, my Bible seems like a new book.

The presentation of the one body, one spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God and Father of all, makes the devil mad, and some professing to be preachers of the gospel take particular pains to speak evil of "this way," and of those who endeavor to act the watchman. Others having a little power in their hand, play the Pope by keeping the key. But private houses are opened, and by non-professors. The result is already manifested in favor of truth. Blessed be the name of God, for his mercy in giving Jesus as a ransom for man. We have seen the scalding tears flow, and the tongue speak forth the confession of the heart. [illegible]

Aug. 16th, 1860, [illegible] here, of twelve members. Twenty-two have [illegible]

Others are coming along. I have baptized four different times in this place. There is quite an interest to hear in other places, where I have been endeavoring to preach the Word, and some have already come out on the blessed truth. One brother who was a Methodist class-leader, has gone to work presenting the same truth. He says he wants to do as much good as he has hurt, if he can. Two other class-leaders have come out and united with us. To God and his Word be all the glory.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, let us work while it is called day. The conflict will soon be over. Jesus will come and give the saints the kingdom. "Who shall be able to stand?" Stand fast, watch ye, quit you like men, have the faith of Jesus, be like unto men that wait for their Lord.

Ripley Hill, N. Y.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

Bro. Grant :—In a late number of the Crisis, I read your appeal for communication from friends of the cause: so I hasten to cast in the widow's mite. I am a friend of Jesus, and all we are brethren, and we have the promise that in the world we shall have tribulation, but in him we shall have peace. What a promise! Do we not find it so? Peace in Jesus. Peace like a river, and the righteousness thereof like the waves of the sea. Although the stormy winds are blowing without, and upon earth distress of nations with perplexity, and men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, the child of God feels peace within. God's word must be fulfilled, and we must wait the final issue, which brings the king in his beauty, the kingdom in its Eden glory, and the final deliverance of all God's people; the resurrection of the dead, the translation of the saints and a shout in glory. How glad I am God's Word reveals to us a glorious future, a quiet habitation, a resting place for the weary ones. I mean to be there; God's saints will all be there out of every nation. Yes, the poor, down-trodden African who loves his God, (now groaning under the lash,) will be there. Father Abraham will be there, the prophets, the apostles, and all the martyrs will be there; and our own loved friends that now sleep in Jesus, who will greet us as we walk through the pearly gates into the city of the New Jerusalem; and best of all, Jesus will be there, and we'll crown him Lord of all. * * * * * Although we have been disappointed in the past, the church of God is destined to triumph in the end, and I believe a few short months or years will tell the story, and the kingdom will be ours.

Sugar Hill, N. H.

From Bro. G. Dillabaugh.

Bro. Grant :—It is some time since I have communicated anything through the Crisis. I love to peruse its pages and hear from the scattered members of my Father's family. It is cheering to hear from friends we know are friends in deed and truth. Jesus said to those who ought to have been his friends, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." How very essential it is for all learners in the school of Christ, to learn what he has commanded, and then willingly obey, so that we can be the friends of Jesus; for all such will share in the covenanted promises made by God unto the fathers, and willed unto his Son; when he (the Son) comes he will divide the inheritance.

And now the cheering news is, the time has about come when the Elder Brother of the household who left some eighteen hundred years ago, is about to come, and will any of his friends not love to hear of his coming? Will they show so little respect for him as not to make every necessary preparation to greet him with joy? Can any be the friends of Jesus who do not love to hear of his coming—who get angry when the message is brought to them, and any amount of evidence is given to prove that he will come in a very few years at most?

All you who are the friends of Jesus, lift up your heads, your redemption is near at hand. The political and moral condition of the world is unmistakeable proof of the nearness of that day; but more than all this we have the SURE prophetic word of the Lord—the old chart that maps out the history of this world, and gives the landmarks all along the coast of time; and we now KNOW we have nearly past ALL such as indicated. Who cannot see the fulfillment of God's Word in the late news from Jerusalem concerning the work that is going on there? Read Ezek. 38th, and you will see that things are rapidly moving on there, and soon the inducement will be sufficient for the king of the north to move on with his mighty army to take a spoil and to take a prey. But there he will come to his end and none to help him, and he and his army will fall on the mountains of Israel, to be food for the fowls of heaven to feed on. Our only safety is to have our life hid with Christ in God. Ye friends of Jesus, watch and pray always, that you may escape the things that are rapidly spreading over the earth. I want to see my Elder Brother; I want to be ready to meet him.

Seneca Falls, N. Y.

Extracts from letters of young converts, under the labors of Bro. Munger in London, Vt. :—

"Dear Bro.:—I am happy in God to-night, and in the choice I have made to suffer with the people of God rather than live in sin. I am not sorry that I gave my heart to God. . . . We had a glorious meeting to-night. The Spirit was with us. . . . Some of my friends are coming to Christ. . . I cannot express what my soul enjoys. I hope to gain a seat in the kingdom."

Another.—"We prosper well in the cause of the soul. I have seen eight truly converted. . . . We are not afraid to stand up for God."

Another.—"We seem to have a heaven to go to heaven in. I wish you could hear our converts in our meetings. It would do you good. . . I believe with all my heart that Jesus is soon coming. We are going to meet him. I long for him to come."

Another.—"I have good news to tell you. God is at work here. In spite of opposition eight have joined our number, all young. . . I am happy in God's love."

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Brush's Mills, Moira, Franklin Co., N. Y., Dec. 21st, 1860, of consumption of the bowels, my honored father, Zenas Dow, aged sixty-nine years, seventeen months and seventeen days.

I trust my respected parent sleeps in Jesus. In early life, and during some seventeen of his married years he was a Universalist, and educated me during my juvenile years, intending me for the ministry of that denomination; but at the mature age of forty his opinions became changed, and he professed a living faith in Christ, and united with the M. E Church, and was for several years a class-leader in that church. In 1843-4 he became interested in, and a believer of, the pre-millennial and speedy advent of Christ to "reign on the earth," which faith he cherished until his death. I visited him twice during his short illness, and conversed with him very freely upon his "hope of eternal life," and was cheered by an assurance from him, as he stood all emaciated and wasted by disease on the margin of death's chill river, his feet already bathed with its waters, that he saw the bright glory of the resurrection on the other shore, where he should emerge from death's oblivion to meet his scattered family; for all with him was peace. Surely "the righteous hath hope in his death." What a surpassingly glorious victory shall be achieved when "death is swallowed up in victory."

"Oh! scenes surpassing fable, and yet true!
Scenes of accomplished bliss! which, who can see,
Though but in distant prospect, and not feel
His soul refreshed with foretastes of the joy?"

C. P. Dow.

Fell asleep in Christ, in Edinboro, Erie Co., Pa., of consumption, Jan. 12th, 1861, our beloved Sister Ross.

She was formerly a member of the M. E. church until she heard the doctrines of the speedy coming of our blessed Lord. She and her companion embraced them with all the heart, and were baptized into Christ's death, that they might be also in the likeness of his resurrection; and have borne testimony to the truths they loved and cherished. But she is gone, and her voice is locked up in the silence of the grave, until her Savior comes and unlocks the prison house, and bids the prisoners go free, and sing that triumphant song,

"O death! where is thy sting?
O grave! where is thy victory?"

May the Lord bless her companion and children in their affliction, and give them the consolation that they will soon meet her again in a clime where death can divide them no more. Her funeral was attended on Sunday in the Presbyterian Chapel. Sermon by Eld. Gardner Dean, from Rev. 14 : 13.

L Whitaker.

Died, in Mattapoisett, Jan. 22d, 1861, of diphtheria, James Shaw, eldest son of Bruce F. and Eliza Ann Shaw, aged four years and eleven months.

The story of little James is an interesting one. He was a child of prayer. Though young indeed, he seemed to be acquainted with God. After doing wrong, he was often overheard in some retired room praying, in his own child-like but well-chosen words, that God would forgive him; and then with much assurance and humility he would come to his parent and say, "God has forgiven me; now you must forgive me too." At one time he neglected prayer for some months. When asked why he did not pray, he replied that "he felt so wicked he could not;" afterwards resumed praying again. A few days before he died he urged his parents not to feel bad, adding that "he loved God, and God would take care of him and raise him up again." Such a knowledge of divine things as he often exhibited is most remarkable. His is the experience of many older persons, and affords lessons for all. Too pure for earth, he now rests secure from its foul atmosphere till Jesus comes to wake him out of sleep. Bro. and Sr. Shaw can say, as did the woman of Shunem, "It is well." In such a child, much was entrusted to their care, and the fear that they have been unfaithful to their charge adds to their sorrows; but their hope is in Him who hath said to the upright "there ariseth light in darkness." Soon may they say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes."

A Good Prescription.—The Nashville Advocate has this seasonable and valuable prescription:

"Read the Bible before you look in the papers. The soul can't live on sensation despatches; the bread of heaven is better for its health than telegrams. Of political talk, and of crises, you will have enough, anywhere, and to surfeit. Seek the company of those who fear the Lord and think upon his name. Make the most of every religious conversation. Lose no opportunity of assembling with those whose conversation is in heaven. You need it just now. Use the means of grace diligently, lest you be swept away by the current that is bearing all things upon its bosom. Keep yourself in the love of God."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of 8th instant.]

France.—The Independence Belge says:—"We are informed from Paris that on the 4th a convention was signed which definitely cedes Mentone and Roquebrune to France. The sum paid to the reigning Prince is 4,000,000 francs. He, moreover, retains the town of Monaco and its 3000 inhabitants."

The death of Marshal Bosquet is announced. His career, though short, was one of the most brilliant among the French celebrities. He was but fifty-one years of age. He never completely recovered a wound he received in the Crimea.

Austria continues in Venetia its preparations for war. There have just been presented to the Emperor plans of defence to be adopted in case of invasion by an enemy, whether on the side of the Mincio and the Po, or on that of the Adriatic. A letter from Venice states that the plain enclosed by the Tagliamento and the Livenza is selected for the formation of a camp of observation, which will extend from the mountain slopes on the Aviano side and descend to the level lands of the Caorlo.

Syria. The Paris papers publish a telegram from Marseilles, announcing that letters had been received from Beyrout stating that the agitation was increasing. Twelve hundred Druses were assembled at Moktara, and intended to prevent the execution of those who had been condemned to death for taking part in the massacres. Fuad Pasha had returned from Moktara.

The Times regards the vote of the Prussian Chambers in favor of Italy as calculated to give a check to the warlike inclinations of the courts of Germany, great and small.

Turin, Feb. 7. At Gaeta, within the last thirty-six hours, the besiegers have blown up three powder magazines and destroyed the side curtain of the Citadel. The garrison has asked an armistice of forty-eight hours to bury the dead. This has been granted by General Cialdini, who has, besides, sent to the place necessaries for the wounded.

The Russian Ambassador in Turkey has presented to the Porte a strong note in reply to the Grand Vizier's report. The note reiterates the sentiments of Russia, that the Christians are oppressed, and the Porte continues to refuse assent to the prolongation of the French occupation in Syria.

Drafts of treaties of commerce, about to be concluded between England, Turkey and France, have been sent home for approval of the French and English governments.

Mostar, Feb. 4th. On the 28th of January a band of insurgents from the neighboring villages, which they had kept in a state of revolt, surprised several villages and the district of Nicesset, and behaved with the utmost cruelty and atrocity toward the peaceable Musselmen, killing altogether forty-one persons, of whom ten were children, and three women. The second band attacked the chief town of Cartazatz, assassinated several people, burnt many houses, and acted with the greatest ferocity and cruelty.

England has been invited by France to stop Garibaldi's career, but she declined on the plea that the Neapolitans ought to be left to settle the matter themselves.

A letter from Genoa states that while the election was proceeding in one of the communes of the Province of Messina, a party of Bourbonists entered the hall and butchered in cold blood the President of the Electoral College and his two sons.

DOMESTIC.

A Washington dispatch to the New York Express says:

"The Montgomery Southern Congress is to be ignored by the people and government of South Carolina, or by the majority of them South Carolina insists upon free trade, and is particularly opposed to the proposed payment of duties on imported goods. The highest rates which she will consent to pay, is six and a quarter cents on imports. Any thing beyond this, will be disowned and opposed."

The N. Y. Advertiser makes the following statement relative to Southern outrages upon the mails:

"We learn at the post office in this city, that letters frequently arrive from the South, torn open and carelessly closed again; sometimes wantonly mutilated, showing spite as well as curiosity; not only letters from which valuable information might be gleaned, but epistles dated at points in the South, and directed to places at the North, which show at once that they could neither contain 'incendiary sentiments' or valuable intelligence. Letters, even, that simply pass through the Southern offices, are torn open and meanly mutilated."

Washington, Feb. 21. Positive information has been received here of a plan to induce soldiers to desert from the army and enter the force of the Southern Confederacy under their old officers.

A letter from the former Congressmen of South Carolina says that Fort Sumter will be taken, at whatever cost of life, before the 4th of March; also that South Carolina will demand a guaranty for free trade in the Montgomery Congress; and that the other cotton States will oppose any tariff on imports higher than 6 1-4 per cent.

Nebraska City, Feb. 19. Old Fort Kearney was taken possession of last night by a party of secessionists, and the Palmetto flag waved over it this morning. An attack was made by the Union men at 10 o'clock this morning, the Palmetto flag was torn down and rent into shreds, and the stars and stripes hoisted amid intense excitement.

Nebraska City, Feb. 20. The chief and warriors of the Atoe Indians arrived here last evening, and made a peremptory demand for the annuities due in November last, stating that their women and children were starving, and declaring that they would have the money—peaceably if they could, and forcibly if necessary. The agent secreted the money. A large meeting of citizens has been held to concert measures for defense, if necessary.

Washington, Feb. 24. The Charleston Courier of Friday says a steamer, supposed to be the Daniel Webster, with troops on board, was seen outside of the harbor on Thursday night. The Governor was promptly notified and immediately took precautionary measures.

New York, Feb. 24. Steamer Columbia arrived from Charleston to-night. The Mercury of the 22d states that dispatches from Fort Moultrie to Governor Pickens say that a pilot had seen steamer Daniel Webster off Cape Romaine Thursday noon. Gen. Dunnovan and Capt. Hamilton immediately proceeded to Fort Moultrie and Major Stevens repaired to Morris Island.

The batteries and everything was got in readiness for the expected visitors, but up to four o'clock, on the morning of the 22d, no steamer or boats had entered the harbor. A strict lookout was being kept.

New York, Feb. 23. Bark Adjuster, seized at Savannah, was loaded with cotton belonging to an English gentleman there, who has left for Washington to consult Lord Lyons, the British Minister.

New Orleans, Feb. 25. The Government property in Texas was quietly surrendered to the State authorities, and the federal troops were allowed to leave the State. The property seized was saluted, and is worth $1,300,000.

It is reported that eight or nine hundred men have been enrolled in the San Francisco Knights of the Golden Circle, whose object is to favor a Pacific republic.

The whites and Indians in the vicinity of Humboldt Bay are at war. Thirteen Indians had been killed in one onslaught.

Charleston advices state that a portion of the State troops have withdrawn from Morris Island, and there will be a general abandonment of the harbor defences.

Three thousand Southern troops are believed to be en route to Fort Pickens, and are expected to arrive on Wednesday.

Capt. Hazzard has arrived from Pensacola. Every thing is quiet, but he does not know how long affairs will remain so. The Government vessels were still there, also about one thousand Alabama and Florida troops.

The Charleston Courier says—"Fort Sumter belched forth its saucy salute of thirty-four guns on Washington's birthday."

Interview with Mr. Lincoln.—Washington, Feb. 24. Various propositions are yet to be voted on by the Peace Conference. Last night the first branch of the pending proposition prohibiting slavery North of 36 30, and recognizing it South of that line was agreed to, receiving a decided affirmative vote. It is asserted that this is satisfactory to nearly all the members from the border States.

The Conference will not probably adjourn before Tuesday. Four Commissioners were received to-day from Kansas. After the adjournment last night, the Commissioners had a brief interview with Mr. Lincoln, and several of them say that the presence of the President elect has already had a good effect in political circles.

After the interview with Mr. Buchanan, yesterday, Mr. Lincoln was introduced to all the members of the Cabinet. General Scott returned Mr. Lincoln's call at 3 o'clock, and was warmly greeted. The Illinois delegation, headed by Mr. Douglas, paid their respects at 4 o'clock.

Mr. Lincoln dined at 7 o'clock Saturday evening with Mr. Seward, and at 9 received the members of the Peace Congress in the parlor at Willard's. Ex-President Tyler and all the delegates were introduced by Gov. Chase. After the interview a large number of citizens were presented, including many ladies. Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet called at 10 o'clock and were pleasantly received.

Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 23. People were astounded this morning by the announcement that Mr. Lincoln had gone to Washington on a special train, dispatches having been received here requiring his presence in Washington.

It is reported that there was a plot to assassinate him while passing through Baltimore. The Baltimore Committee were here, but will not have an interview with him.

Statements made by prominent members of the Republican party justify the belief that fears of assassination on the part of his friends was the sole cause of Mr. Lincoln's flight.

The Lafayette (Ind.) Journal notices an attempt which was made on the railroad near that place to throw off the Presidential train. The engineer discovered the obstruction in time to prevent damage. A machine used for placing cars in position had been fastened upon the track, so that if it had been struck by the engine while under full headway the consequences would have been disastrous. The perpetrator of the deed was not discovered.

Mr. Blake, Commissioner of Public Buildings, has received anonymous letters stating that two fellows were hired to assassinate Mr. Lincoln. The parties named in the letters were arrested on Saturday, and made affidavit that there was no truth in the charge.

The following is an extract from a letter written by a South Carolina planter to his daughter, living near New York:

"Your dear brothers have joined the South Carolinian army. William was not over anxious to go, but because Henry would go, William thought he must; so they are both off now. I did all in my power to prevent them taking up arms against their country, but it was all in vain. I am sure if the people would only think, it would be all differently; but the fact is they are not allowed to use their voices, no matter how much they should wish to. It is a perfect reign of terror. I would sell all if I could. Cannot say more on this subject for fear of being called an abolitionist."

ITEMS.

The Pope and New Year's Day.—Cor. of Independent.—It is the custom for the corps diplomatic and other distinguished functionaries to pay their respects officially to His Holiness. When affairs are disturbed, all that the Pope says or fails to say is noted and becomes the object of interest and discussion. A year since, when the representative of Napoleon presented himself, the Pope spoke in bitter complaint of the Emperor of France. This year the Pope maintained the most profound silence, never making the slightest reference to the Emperor. He said he blessed the French troops in Rome, also those in Syria and China, but no blessing for Napoleon. What does this mean? Has his ire cooled, or has it passed the power of words, and is best set forth by silence—contemptuous silence? All agree that there is no love lost between them. Each acts his part.

Destitution in Rome.—There is now great distress at Rome. Every article of food is at famine prices. A few weeks ago the chapter of the Church of San Lorenzo assembled for the purpose of opening the box placed at one of the entrances to receive the "Peter's Pence," when they found it filled with slips of paper containing the words, "We desire Victor Emmanuel King of Italy," and similar sentences. Beggars assail the passers at every step. A French soldier, who refused to give up his soup to a beggar, a week or two ago, was run through the body by the latter; and Bishop Melier, on quitting the doorway of his palace, was set on by a group of robbers, and stripped of everything he had about him, even to his Episcopal ring.

Married.

Notices, &c.

☞ We are already supplied with several copies of the hymn which we advertised for,—"Among the Judah captives," etc. We thank the friends who forwarded them, and require no more at present.

Second Advent Conference

In Worcester, to commence Wednesday evening, March 13th, and continue through the week and over the following Lord's day. An invitation is extended to all, and the ministering brethren in particular to attend. The Lord willing, the probable order of exercise will be as follows: Prayer meeting from 9 till 10 o'clock A. M. Bible class from 10 till 12. Preaching at 2 and 7 P. M.

In behalf of the committee of arrangements,
A. Ross.

Conference in Maine.

There will be a general conference held in Hermon, Me., to commence March 14th and continue over the 17th. Having learned the feelings of the brethren generally, we deem it important to call the attention of all the friends of God and lovers of the truth to make a renewed exertion to comfort and strengthen each other, and give the solemn alarm to a wicked world. The brethren are anxious to have Bro. James Hemenway attend, also Bro. Jones, if possible. All other preaching brethren are invited.

In behalf of the brethren in Maine,
Israel Damman,
John Billings,

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.62; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

For the Crisis.

The Pilgrim's Voyage.

[illegible]
Faithfully plying his oar,
A lone mariner, toil-worn and weary,
[illegible] the shore.

He cared not for the storms that were beating
On the deep ocean's floor;
For his eyes intently were gazing
On the pure light that ever was blazing,
On yon distant shore.

But when darkness was gathering o'er him,
In vain did fond nature implore him
To rest on his oar;
[illegible] "We're wasting,"
He sighed, "for I must be hasting
To yonder bright shore."

Now vessels around him were wrecking,
And angry waves o'er him were breaking
In terrific roar;
Just then as his faith seemed to weaken,
With joy he beheld the bright beacon,
On yon blissful shore.

The black winds but hastened him onward,
As he guided his frail bark homeward,
The rough waves o'er;
When the tempest was raging most fearful,
He was singing in accents cheerful—
"I'm nearing the shore."

At length the gray dawn is appearing,
The house he has toiled for is nearing,
His perils are o'er;
Then rocked on a cradling billow,
He fell back and slept on his pillow,
To awake on the shore.

THE COMING STRUGGLE Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 3.

But we need no prophecy to learn our present condition. I do not care whether you take one religious body, or another, or all, that fervor, zeal, spirituality and love, which has in former [illegible] marked the [illegible] now almost extinct. Never was the professed church more inclined to infidelity than now—both preachers and people. And never was infidelity, yes, bold atheism, more arrogant in its pretensions. It is well known that Spiritualism, though infidelity unmasked, finds more favor in the eyes of the mass of the professors of christianity, than the plain teachings of the Bible. Hence I conclude that we are now having a falling away in these last days, and that it is probably worse than any other since this language was spoken; and since it answers to the time of "falling away" which should introduce the Man of Sin, I regard it as a fulfillment, and expect to see him come up soon in Spiritualism.

In order that the false Christ may be received by the people, their ideas of Christ's coming must be suited to the manner in which he will appear, and proceed to counterfeit the work of the true Christ. We should look, therefore, for a disposition among men to question the personal appearance of Christ at his second coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and a tendency to substitute something else for that coming. The christian world is in this state at present. I do not believe there is one now who fully believes and will frankly confess the personal coming of Christ, where there were ten such twenty years ago.

It is not necessary that they should be generally agreed and firmly persuaded as to many of the particular phases of the substitute. A general feeling of doubt and uncertainty with regard to particulars, will as readily secure their deception, provided they look for a "good time coming," but despise the coming of the Lord himself to introduce it. This looking for something, they hardly know what, will lead them to receive the false Christ, as he comes first; especially, since he comes showing "great signs and wonders, insomuch, that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." While those who are instructed in the future arrangements of the arch deceiver, as the Spiritualists are, will receive him as especially their own.

But let us consider the teachings of the Spiritualists concerning the true and false Christs. I will quote first to show that they deny the true Christ as such.

Says a spirit as published in the Banner of Light:—"If Jesus Christ was the Son of the Most High God, so are you." Says another,—"You are your own Saviors." Another,—"Christ was a natural man." Another,—"Jesus of Nazareth was a good man, but by no means infallible—no more divine than you are, no more the special child of God than you are." In answer to the question, "Did not Christ die that through his death we might inherit eternal life?" A spirit answers, "No! Christ did not die that through his death we might live. . . . His death has no more to do with the remission of sins than any of your martyrs. Says another, "No man should rely on any Savior outside of himself. . . . Jesus Christ was not the Savior of the world more than any one before us. . . . Each and every one is a Savior as he is a judge, a God." A writer in the Herald of Progress in answer to the question,—"Jesus is not your Savior, then?" Says, [illegible] God." Another, in answer to the question, "What is Christ?" says, "Christ is any sent spirit of God." In other words, any sent spirit of God is a Christ. Says Gibson Smith,—"I do not believe that the person called Jesus Christ was or is God's only Son. . . . He . . . . is no more the Son of God than was John Howard or George Washington."—Spirit Guardian, June 30th, 1860. Says Mrs. Henderson, "Jesus had natural parents. . . . We cannot believe that there was anything marvelous, neither in his birth, his life, nor in his death. . . . Christ never died."—Discourse at Melodeon, Boston. Says a writer in the Spirit Guardian, in speaking of the churches in a certain village, "They are doing a successful business saving souls through the humbug of Christ's blood—their whole foundation being a huge lie—the fall of Adam and redemption through Christ's blood."

Says H. C. Wright,—"His (Jesus) sufferings could be no more to us to affect our character and destiny than the sufferings and death of Michael Servetus, or Mary Dyer." The Bible says, 'look to Jesus on the cross'; nature says, 'look to your own selves.' The Bible says, 'seek and find eternal life in the blood of Christ'; nature says, 'seek and find it in obedience to the laws of your own soul.'—"Errors of the Bible," p. 27. "The doctrine that men can be saved from the consequences of their evil doing by the blood of Christ is a great and fearful delusion," p. 28. "Each man and woman may be and ought to be a Savior, a Lamb of God, to take away the sin of the world, as truly and in the same sense that he was. . . . . Man's only Redeemer is in him," p. 29. "Whence is this superior claim of Jesus upon us? Like us he was a human being, nothing more, He came into existence as we did. He held no other relations to the physical or spiritual universe than are held by every human being. . . . . By nat[illegible] has no more than [illegible]," p. 83. Christ was a man, nothing more," p. 86. This must be sufficient to show that they deny the true Christ. I will now quote from them to show that they regard Spiritualism in its development to answer to the state of things to be introduced at the coming of Christ, which they call a New Dispensation.

Says Leo Miller, "We behold in the advent of Spiritualism, the second coming of the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth."—Dis. at Melodeon, Boston, June 2d, 1860. Says Mrs. Henderson, "Spiritualism may be termed the second spiritual coming of the Son of God and the Son of Man."—Melodeon, Boston. Says Mrs. Spence, "As Christianity took the place of Judaism, so Spiritualism will take the place of Christianity, and Christianity having had its day will go and lie down in the tomb." I have other testimonies pointing to a state of things answering as they claim to the kingdom to be set up by Christ at his coming, which I will notice in speaking of the time of its development. But in the development of Spiritualism it will have its head, which will probably answer to the false Christ. Says Mrs. Henderson, "You claim that there may not be another Christ on earth; but we see no reason why there may not be myriads of them."—Melodeon, Boston. In the Spiritual Age for Jan. 7th, 1860, under the heading, "The Coming Man," we find the following:—"I believe that God always shows himself at the very moment when all that is human has proved to be insufficient—when man confesses that of himself he is nothing. The world is in this state at present. I believe therefore in a Messiah not far distant from our epoch; but in this Messiah I do not see a Christ who has nothing to add to the wisdom, the virtue and the truth that he has already taught us; but I expect one whom Christ has said should come after him." (It must then be the false Christ, for he has assured us of no other till he comes himself.) This term, "The Coming Man," is very common among the Spiritualists; and an expected personage, answerable, in their view, to the second coming of Christ, is generally understood by the term.

In the Christian Spiritualist we find a more particular description of this "Coming Man," which reads as follows:—"A youth is now living upon earth unknown to man and to those spirits who are at this time most generally in communication with us. He is the type of a perfect man. He is a sample to which the race shall ultimately attain. He is under the guardianship of celestials, and is in process of developing his physical nature by due and appropriate exercises. He has a brain with new organs, affording a broader forehead and a higher reverence. . . . . He will possess powers of which men have now no conception. The wonders wrought by Jesus will be thrown into the shade by the more wonderful which shall be witnessed from this person, and his twelve principal mediums, who are also in the process of preparation for the work assigned them. These twelve are also as yet in obscurity. The youth will be prepared to act in the time of the greatest need. He will restore order from the confusion that shall arise."

Spiritualists, as we have seen, claim that this spiritual movement is to introduce a [illegible]

Christian dispensation its head in Christ, so this new dispensation also must have its head or leader in this "Coming Man," who will prove to be the "false Christ," "man of sin," etc., as prophesied of in the Bible. But this man of sin, or the false Christ of the Bible, "opposeth and exalteth himself above or against all that is called God or is worshiped." Let us inquire further, whether Spiritualism is preparing the minds of the people for the reception of a leader, or head of this new dispensation with such arrogant and blasphemous pretensions.

I will first quote to show that they deny the Bible. Dr. Lyon says,—"I do not receive the Bible as testimony on anything. 'Tis time to throw away the Bible."—Discussion with Eld. Grant. In a convention with Spiritualists held at Ravenna, Ohio, in July, 1857, it is reported that "Mr. Kellog of Newton Falls was exceedingly desirous to have it understood that he believed nothing in the Bible; that it was all a lie, and that only knaves and fools would pay any attention to its commands."—Boston Bee, July 25th, 1857. Dr. Hatch says that the Spiritualists regard the Bible as a "libel on common sense." Dr. Randolph speaks of Spiritualism as "The anti-Bible, anti-God, anti-Christian, Spiritualism."—Discourse at Clinton Hall, New York. A convention was held in Rutland, Vt. commencing June 25th, 1858, styled the "Reformers' Free Convention," but reported by the New York Tribune as a "gathering of Freelovers and Spiritualists." According to the Tribune's report, their resolution on the Bible reads:—"7.—Resolved, That nothing is true or right, and nothing is false or wrong, because it is sanctioned or condemned by the Bible—therefore our Bible is powerless to prove any doctrine to be true or any practice to be right; and it should never be quoted f[illegible] purpose." A. J. D[illegible] says, "I acknowledge and commend no authority but nature and reason."—Great Har. Vol. 1., p. 18. Says H. C. Wright,—"I wish to destroy all reverence for institutions as such; for Bibles, for governments, for constitutions."—Discourse in Buffalo as reported by the Buffalo Commercial. "I believe that nature is God's only revelation to man."—Errors of the Bible, p. 16. "Consult not God in Moses, nor in Jesus, nor in the Bible, nor in any other man or book; but consult God in your own nature, and sternly obey that ever-true and ever-speaking Word."—Errors of the Bible, p. 22. Says Gibson Smith,—"I do not believe that the Bible is the Word of God. . . . . I believe that ministers of all orders, who hold up to us the Bible as the Word of God, and as being infallible authority in matters of faith and practice, are the dead weights of society, and serve as clogs under the wheels of the car of progress."—Spirit Guardian.

But with the denial of the Bible they deny also the existence of a God. Some denying God's personality, speak of nature as God, which is the same, being only atheism with a mask on. But I will quote:

At a Spiritualist convention lately held for the purpose of "Inquiring into the cause and cure of evil," Dr. R. T. Hallock, is reported to have said when speaking of the sentiments of another:—"Now we may cheerfully sympathize with his mirthful explosion of the popular Divinity; no merciful man will object even to his expunging from his vocabulary the three hateful, little letters (G-o-d) which express it." Thus we have it from Dr. Hallock that believing in a God is "hateful," and he "cheerfully sympathizes with" what he regards an "explosion" of such an idea as his existence. Says Gibson Smith,—"I do not believe in the personality of God."—Sp. Guardian. Says Mrs. Spence,—"We refuse to make use of the term God because it has been falsely applied as significant of personality." A spirit, claiming to be Joseph Foster, as published in the Banner of Light, says,—"Ah! there is no God, there can be none. . . . . What is the use of telling them of a God when there is none?" Another spirit calling himself Orlando Jenks, says,—"If I were coming back to preach, I should say, don't believe in God."

Another spirit, avowing that a certain prominent doctrine of the Bible is not to be relied upon, says,—"All nature, our God, tells us so." Says H. C. Wright,—"Oh! this system of God-worship,—how has it desolated the earth!"—Discourse at Buffalo. Dr. Harris says that, "The Spiritualists of America are not only as a body Pantheists, rejecting alike the idea of the Scriptures as a Divine Revelation and of the existence of a God, but that they are gross sensualists, and utterly immoral in their conduct in all the relations of life; and that this was not only true of them as a body, but that it was true of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand of their number."—London Advertiser, as quoted in N. Y. Tribune. Says Joel Tiffany,—"Spiritualism, in a large class of minds, tends to beget a kind of moral and religious Atheism."—Oberlin Evangelist, Apr. 28th, 1860. Dr. Lyon says,—"God is a positive principle."—Discussion with Eld. Grant. Mr. I. N. Underwood says,—"When defining Deity, we must regard him as a central principle, but not as a Being . . . a principle existing in matter in all conditions and in all relations . . . . a part of everything." Dr. Hatch, in speaking [illegible] personality and becomes simply a permeating principle."—Letter to the N. Y. Herald. Dr. Randolph says,—"Harmonialism robs God of personality, converts him into a rarified gas, many million times finer than electricity, according to Davis, and elevates reason to the throne of the universe by deifying the human intellect. God, nature, love, panthea, rarified gas, sublimated oxygen and ether, are by this lexicon convertible terms and essences."—Discourse at Clinton Hall, N. Y. A. J. Davis asks, "What principle is it that shapes the mighty Orb? and what causes all these mechanical and geometrical motions which take place in the planetary bodies?" and says, "I answer, it is a principle of Universal Vitality, which we term the Divine Mind."—Great Har. Vol. 1., p. 47. Says Mr. Spear,—"God is man, and man is God. . . . No clearer idea of the divine existence can possibly be communicated to mind than in the statement that he is One Grand Universal Man."—Educator, p. 526.

All of the above authorities, except four, are in full fellowship with the doctrines of Spiritualism; these, Harris, Hatch, Randolph and Tiffany, have been among the foremost in their zeal in the cause of Spiritualism, and even now are not opposed to it, but are more cautious than the mass of them, seeing, as they avow, that they are tending to Atheism in all its gross licentiousness. Denying the existence of God they claim that every man is at liberty to do as he sees fit. Mr Spear says,—"Each man and each woman, if you please, has a perfect right, under all circumstances, in all conditions, and in whatever locations, to do as he or she pleases."—Educator, p. 412. At the convention held at Rutland, Vt. (noticed before), a resolution was passed, which reads as follows:—"Resolved, That the authority of each individual soul is absolute and final in deciding all questions as to what is true or false in principle, or right or wrong in practice; therefore, the church or the state that attempts to control the opinions or the practice of any man or woman, by authority or power outside of his or her own soul, is guilty of a flagrant wrong." Says Dr. T. L. Nichols,—"These spirits are not only demolishing the old, as no ordinary agencies could demolish it, but they are teaching a new philosophy of individual sovereignity."—Monthly Magazine, Nov. 1854, p. 66. A spirit says,—"Within the bosom of every man and woman, there is a judgment-seat, a throne of God; and before that, and that alone, should men bow down and worship. By that alone they are to be guided." In answer to the question, "Is it right to obey the civil law?" the spirits say, "Call in thine own judge, thine own law of right, and allow him to be thy God, and when he decides abide by the decision, no matter what it may be." A prominent actor in a Spiritualist convention lately held at Plymouth, Mass., is reported to have said,—"The authority that was absolute with him was not up yonder in the sky—not in the dead past, but in his own heart. The God that spoke in his own soul was his sole authority."

Sectarianism.

All good things are liable to abuse. Philosophers tell us that the extreme of virtue is vice; and some of our greatest crimes originate in an exaggerated idea and caricature of some well-known truth or virtue. The laws of God are so constituted as to control and modify each other, and keep the mind in an equal balance on all practical subjects, so as not to suffer any doctrine or precept to preponderate over or derange others of equal value. Hence the necessity of "rightly dividing the word of truth," and giving to each christian duty its legitimate place and character in the church of Christ.

Patriotism, or the love of our country, is a virtue most essential to every good citizen, yet how it is abused, in these days, when it degenerates into party spirit, or love of place and power. The love of truth or principle is never dreamed of when self-interest stands in the way, or a political opponent is to be smashed.

Our party, right or wrong, good or bad, regardless of consequences; this is the order of the day in matters of state. Would it were better in church affairs; but I fear it would not be safe now to affirm, as it was in former days; "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." The nominal church has become so amalgamated with the world, as to lose much of her spirituality; and, in the place of it, has borrowed the maxims and customs of this degenerate age, and thus brought a reproach on the cause she professes to advocate.

This charge may be thought uncharitable, and calculated to prejudice men's minds against religion. It is useless to try to disguise what is so palpable to every one who is an unprejudiced observer of society in and out of the churches, and will compare it with what it was in the days of the apostles, or in the primitive church. The church has set up creeds, traditions and ceremonies, as party lines and boundaries, to distinguish her from all other sects, and professes to adhere to the Bible as her rule of faith and practice. [illegible] it is made evident to some of [illegible] members and ministers that their church has departed from the simplicity of the gospel, and added to, or taken from, God's word, they still adhere to the creed and the party, in opposition to what they know to be true; thus showing to the world around them that they are willing to sacrifice truth and honesty for the promotion of their own sectarian interest or advancement.

Brethren, let me tell you, in all friendship, you tread on dangerous ground. To whom much is given, more is required. Christ says, "he that loveth father or mother, wife or children, more than me, is not worthy of me." If we are not willing to leave all for Christ, we cannot be his disciples. And again, he says, "He who is ashamed of me and of my words, before this wicked and adulterous generation, of him will the Son of man be ashamed before his Father and the holy angels."

Now this is a serious matter, to hold the truth in unrighteousness; and to hide the light God has given us, is to refuse to use the talent intrusted to us, and to judge ourselves unworthy of eternal life. I leave the application to those only to whom conscience says, "thou art the man!"

The Morning Dawns.

Dawn of morning! is it near?
Night so long, the way is drear;
Do the signs of day appear?
Yes, morning dawns.

Time declares Earth's years grow old,
That the last is nearly told;
Signals mark night's hours enrolled;
The morning dawns.

Lo, the "worse and worse of sin,"
Speaks the truth in battle din;
Darkest hour when day begins,
And morning dawns.

Justice will not always wait;
Truth is knocking at the gate;
Judgment day! Sinner, too late;
But morning dawns.

Voyagers make their reckoning tell,
Skilful pilots show it well,
Time foretold to thoughts impel,
Of morning dawn.

Sounds come from the watchman's tower,
Heralding the coming hour;
Gospel heralds speak with power,
Of morning dawn.

War-clouds gather,—nations rage,—
But the last they soon shall wage,
Filling up the sacred page;
The morning dawns.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come,
Gather thine elect ones home,
Never more in sin to roam.
Bright morning dawns.

Selections.

Extracts of a Sermon by Beecher.

"For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Rom. 14: 17.

Joy is not only a high christian attainment, but joyfulness is a duty. You ought to be joyful. Joy is not to be made a luxury. It should not be considered as a mere grace or embellishment; as a permissible thing which one may seek or let alone, as he pleases. It is a state springing from reasons which make it obligatory. It is to be sought for; the obstacles to it are to be removed: its benefits and uses are to be explored; and its instrumentality for good upon others is to be understood and employed: * * * * *

When other men are full of fear, trouble, and apprehensions, and God's people abide in peace and joyfulness, then the christian example is eminently powerful as a moral instrumentality.

When losses really come on men, and their condition is so changed that everybody says, "It it more than human nature can do to be cheerful under such circumstances," if then christians are so, their testimony is beyond all testimony in this matter. * * * * *

All the institutions of the primitive church and its celebrations, were conceived in a spirit of joy. Many of the things that we administer in the most somber spirit, or at least in the gravest spirit, were originally instituted and administered in the spirit of joy in its highest key.

The christian Sabbath we have been taught to observe as a day of vailing and seclusion, and often of positive sadness; as a day stripped of everything like enjoyment. Not so was the Sabbath observed in primitive times. It was observed as a day of festivity and high joy. The assembling together of christians for worship was always, in one part or another, an occasion for great joyfulness, which at times became tumultuous.

The celebration of the Lord's Supper, strange as it may seem to us, was meant to be joyful, and originally was joyful. It was on the side of joyfulness that the earliest defections in this matter took place. Unregulated natures took it up and carried it to excess. And if you study Paul's directions to the Corinthian Church, you will find, not that he rebuked joyfulness, but that he recognized it as having been so employed as to lead to irregularities. These he pruned off, but he did not rebuke the joyfulness. It was not till three hundred years after it was instituted, that the Lord's Supper was celebrated as a sad rite.

The social meetings of christians, from house to house, are spoken of as having been joyful festivals, where they broke bread and ate meat with gladness.

All the way through, you shall find that the early christians were joy-bearing men. They were taught that religion was a joyful thing, that its office was to inspire them with noble, holy joys, and that they should exhibit these joys before men. The spirit of joy was a part of the power and significance of the early church. * * *

Any christian sentiment that it is worth our while to have at all, it is worth our while to have at concert-pitch—at a pitch so high that it cannot but be joyful.—Many persons play on their hearts as a man plays on a violin who knows nothing about chording it. The strings are all loose, and he tries to play while they are in that condition, till his intolerable screeching distracts the whole neighborhood, and they come to him, and say, "If you must have music, do, for heaven's sake, tune your violin!" If it is worth your while to play at all, it is worth your while to play with your instrument at concert-pitch. Many persons keep their soul all unchorded, and within that state try to evolve a christian life; but with all their sawing, they fail to produce any sweet melodies. Now if it is worth your while to have christian experiences at all, it is worth your while to have them so in harmony with the laws of your own mind, and so accordant with God's commands, that they shall be joyful experiences. * * *

Now there are many things in religion that stand connected with the process of education and of healing, which make it necessary for us to bear the cross, to deny ourselves, to suffer more or less pain; but these things belong to the negative side, and it is wrong to put that side in such prominence that men of the world shall take their idea of religion from these instrumental processes.

There is also a positive side to religion. There is joy connected with it; joy in God; joy in trust and hope; joy in conscience; joy in love; joy in the Providence which overrules and watches all men's interests; joy in redemption; joy in the Holy Spirit; joy in the anticipation of heaven; joy on every side. These belong to every real christian, in a greater or less measure; and it is the side of religion to which they belong that ought to be exhibited. * * *

The spectacle of joy in the life and experience of a christian, as the fruit of the Spirit, also honors God. Men will be inclined to draw near to a God the fruit of whose Spirit in the soul is joyful. If the soul is pure, if it is gentle, if it is loving, if it is radiant, if it is hopeful and trustful and courageous, and if wherever it goes it is sweeter than flowers, brighter than light, and more inspiring than music, do you suppose that men will not understand it? "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." When a man has learned at any school to do anything well, the first inquiry is, "Who taught you? Where did you learn this?" If a man is a christian as some men are prisoners, men feel, "I do not want his experience. If that is religion, I would rather be without it." But if a christian is full of gracious affections and joyfulness, men say, "Where did he get them?" and they begin reverently to long that they, too, may become christians. It was not hard for the old prophet to say, "Let me die the death of the righteous;" and it is not hard to say, now, "Let me live the life of a christian," if the soul is full of purity, and aspiration, and strength, and courage, and joyfulness therein. * *

And now, my christian brethren, if such be the nature of christian joyfulness, and if such be its instrumentality, is it not, as I said it was in the beginning, a duty? It is not a pleasure nor a luxury, merely. It is not from a selfish motive that we are to seek it. There is the glory of God in it. There is the salvatian of souls in it. There is our own victory in it.

You may ask me, "Can every man be joyful?" Yes, every man. "Can all men alike be joyful?" No. There will be gradations in joy, as in every other christian grace; but every man, in his own measure, may be joyful, and every man may strive to increase in joyfulness. If you refuse it; if you thrust it from you; if you make up your mind that you cannot attain it before you begin to seek it; if you say, "It is a grace that belongs to saintship, and not to ordinary christian experience," then there will be no participation in it for you. But if you feel that it does belong to ordinary christian experience, that it is a radiant circle which God puts about the soul as its crown, and that you have a right to your crown, as every other man has a right to his; if you seek for it as a thing to be desired, then it shall be yours. And you will take notice that in those ministrations where teaching is for cheerfulness, for joyfulness, there the experience grows.

Among the things which I have to admire in other churches is this very joyfulness. Our Methodist brethren, especially, make fervidness of feeling a great feature of their mode of worship, and the result is that we see in that denomination a greater proportion of joy and triumph than perhaps in any other. Though there may be other desirable things in which that church may be excelled by others, yet in the matter of joyfulness, of praising God, of bearing abroad their witness and testimony, they are eminent, showing that where joy is held up before the minds of men, where truth is employed to encourage this trait, where men are inspired to develop it, it is possible to maintain it. And although there are, and ever will be, variations in this, as in other things, according to the nature and circumstances and conditions of men, yet it is a heritage to every man that is to be sanctified. And you that are called of God, you that have a hope in Jesus Christ, have not only a duty, but a right of joy. It is a part of that treasure which God has given you. And you should be increasingly joyful. The older you grow, and the nearer you come to the kingdom of heaven, the more your heart should shine, and the more your tongue should bear witness to the goodness of Him that has redeemed you.

Verbal Vices.

Indulgence in verbal vice soon encourages corresponding vices in conduct. Let any one of you come to talk about any mean or vile practice with a familiar tone, and do you suppose, when the opportunity occurs for committing the mean or vile act, he will be as strong against it as before? It is by no means an unknown thing that men of correct lives talk themselves into crime, into sensuality, into perdition. Bad language easily runs into bad deeds. Select any iniquity you please; suffer yourself to converse in its dialect, to use its slang, to speak in the character of one who approves or relishes it, and I need not tell you how soon your moral sense will lower down its level. Becoming intimate with it, you lose your horror of it. This obvious principle of itself, furnishes a reason for watching the tongue.—Dr. F. D. Huntington.

☞ There cannot be complete fullness until there is complete emptiness.

A Warning to Young Men.—In nearly all the large towns and cities, young men form themselves into clubs, of various kinds, to enable them to pass away the hours of the long winter evenings socially and pleasantly. An old merchant related in our hearing his own experience and observation in regard to this matter. A friend invited him to join a social club. They spent their time in song and jest, eating and drinking and general jollity. He kept a list of all who belonged to the club during his connection with it, and has traced their histories since. Of forty-nine, but three now remain enjoying a green old age. Most of the others went to early graves, the victims of intemperance. Within few of them were ever successful in business, though some were young men of [illegible] business capacity. He said, with great emphasis, had I an iron voice, which I could ring through our whole country, I would say to every young man, beware of the club room, and especially the room of a drinking club. Many a young man is ruined there before he is aware of his danger.—Presbyterian Herald.

Four good Habits.—There are four good habits—punctuality, accuracy, steadiness and despatch. Without the first of these, time is wasted; without the second, mistakes the most hurtful to our own credit and interest, and that of others, may be committed; without the third, nothing can be well done; and without the fourth, opportunities of great advantage are lost, which it is impossible to recall.

Reading for Youth.

"Myself will see Me."

Once, in a Sabbath-school, a very little girl repeated the twenty-third Psalm very well, and so pleased a visitor who was present and heard her, that he kindly took a shilling from his pocket, and said, "This is for your little lesson, my child." The child's eye flashed with delight on what she had never, perhaps, had in her possession before; and she clasped her hand tightly over her prize. "Now," said he, further: "I see a great many shops open in this quarter, though it is God's day. You must, on no account, spend that coin in any of them to-day, but keep it till tomorrow. You understand, I won't be with you to see you, but there is One who will see you, and will find out at once if you break the Sabbath day." The child was silent, but kept looking up in the speaker's face with a dark, thoughtful eye. "Who will see you?" he asked, after a pause. "Myself will see me!" said the child in an instant, and with a gesture of pride. She did not know how noble her answer was; but she gave it clearly and promptly. She would disdain to lie or to deceive, even when alone. She could never disgrace herself, though it was only in her own eyes. That was the simple answer, full of truth and honor. Of course the visitor expected her to reply—"God will see me!" Perhaps, after all, it came to this, that God was so at home in the poor little heart, that she knew no difference between His eye and her own eye. Can each person who reads this say so? Is God at home in your heart, and making it so pure and holy, that you think it the most solemn thing to say, when you are tempted to sin, as that ragged child said, "Myself will see me!"

Origin of the Upas Tree Story.

A real valley of death exists in Java: it is termed the Valley of Poison, and is filled to a considerable height with carbonic acid gas, which is exhaled from crevices in the ground. If a man or any other animal enters it he cannot return; and he is not sensible of his danger until he feels himself sinking under the influence of the atmosphere which surrounds him, the carbonic acid, of which it chiefly consists, rising to the height of eighteen feet from the bottom of the valley. Birds which fly into this atmosphere drop down dead; and a fowl thrown into it dies before reaching the bottom, which is strewed with carcasses of various animals that have perished in the disastrous gas.—Tropic.

Children,—

If wisdom's ways you wisely seek,
Five things observe with care:
To whom you speak, of whom you speak,
And how and when and where.

Reading the Sky.—"Come here, Patty," said uncle Philip; "and come here, Peter. You have read your books, and now I will teach you how to read the sky."

"When the sky is clear, it says, 'Love God;' when it is stormy, it says, 'Fear God;' when it is lit up with the sun, it says, Praise God;' and when one part is clear and shining, and another part cloudy, then it says, 'Love God, fear God, and praise God,' all at the same time."—Golden Rule.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

Parting.

"What mean ye to weep and break my heart?"

What mean ye, weeping pilgrims,
To break my bleeding heart?
Why fill the air with sighings
When we are called to part?
I go on glorious errands,
To prison or to death,
To tell of God's salvation
Till my last fleeting breath.

Oh think not that the crosses
Of Christ are hard to bear,
Or that the pains and losses
I scorn with Him to share;
I count my bonds as pleasure
So I may Jesus g[illegible]in,
And death is but a conflict
Where I a crown obtain.

I dread no scourge or rod,

Affliction.

When necessitated to drink large potations from sorrow's cup, it is truly a great blessing to have the sympathy of our fellow beings. As a distinguished writer remarks, "Weeping with those that weep, does nor dry their tears, it is true, but it may serve to dilute them." Yea, who of us have not proved that it does greatly assuage the poignancy of the bitter draught, especially, when superiors so far doff their stoical dignity as to make demonstrations of grief in sobs and tears, and plaintive moans? Then, how should our sad hearts be comforted, while receiving assurance from the high authority of inspiration that He who spake the world into existence, and then was adequate to "measure the waters" thereof "in the hollow of his hand," and mete out heaven with a span, and comprehend the dust of the earth in a measure, and "weigh the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance"; "that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and stretcheth out the heavens for his curtain and taketh up the isles as a very little thing";—when such a Being condescends to dilute our tears with his blessed sympathy, will it not so sweeten the bitter draught that we can drink it without a murmur? Yea, when we recollect that it is administered for our spiritual convalescence, will it not even remove the frown that nature could not forbear manifesting?

But how and why is this, that God should allow the cup of sorrow to be proffered to his "dearly beloved" and chosen people? Why use the rod on those who try to do his will? Because by this process there is hope of making something of them, or, in other words, by this means he elicits their virtues and makes them shine before the world with undimmed lustre. It may properly be denominated the crucible, in which he refines them and purges away their dross.—Isa. 48:10; Ps. 66; 10. He plainly tells us "he does not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men," but for their "profit." How often have we seen people go astray, like David, before they were afflicted, but when they felt the rod, they bethought themselves of their wanderings, and arose to return to their Father's house. Just let the mind's eye run over our own circle of acquaintance, and see how many more have drawn near to God in affliction, than in prosperity.

It must be acknowledg[illegible] few, very few, ever become eminent fo[illegible] without passing through sorrow's vale. [illegible] were necessary for the Captain of our [illegible]vation to be perfected through suffering [illegible] we [illegible] some strange thing has ha[illegible] [illegible] we pass the same ordeal [illegible] [illegible]ciple be as his [illegible]? [illegible] God more especially chas[illegible] [illegible] very wi[illegible] [illegible] above the ordinary heat instead of those who are trying to do his will? It may be there is no chance to benefit them, and you know he does not willingly afflict, that is, he takes no pleasure in afflicting, unless it be for our "profit." When he sees that chastisements avail nothing, he ceases to use the rod, saying as he did to Ephraim, "Let them alone," until the time appointed for retributive justice!

And can we not find something like this existing among our own race? I think most of us could find a precedent without a long search, where parents have continued to restrain by chastisement, those children of whom they had hope, while those they despaired of benefiting they have given up to take their own course, with the understanding they may lay no more claims to paternal privileges or restraints. If we were to visit the Five-Points' house of Industry, Mr. Barlow, the successor of Mr. Pease, could lead us into one of those dismal garret rookeries, and point us to the mere wreck of a once beautiful daughter of a millionaire, lying on the bare floor, huddled together with thieves, beggars, prostitutes, of every age, sex and color, indiscriminately, as the inhabitants of a sty, while her father masters a palace in uppertendom! Do you ask why this disparity? It seems her friends despaired of reforming her, such was her unconquerable thirst for the intoxicating cup, therefore they ceased to chasten or use the bridle of restraint, seeing it was to no purpose—her case a hopeless one. But while they entertained hope of her reform, think you not they restrained her with chastisement?

Then is it not safe to premise th[illegible], while our heavenly Fath[illegible] [illegible]ns us, there is [illegible] our case? "But if we be without chastisement whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." Furthermore, "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." But he cautions us against "fainting" or becoming discouraged, while passing through the fiery ordeal. But he does not forbid nature's relief, or love us the less, or consider us wanting christian magnanimity because we may possess temperaments the most ardent and give the honest expressions of such temperaments. Because we may be extremely sensitive to the sore chastisement, it does not argue rebellion, by any means; but, as the tender and affectionate child grieves more sorely when receiving chastisement, than the one of the opposite character, so the dear child of God may shed his tears in profusion, and give expression of his deep agony without incurring culpability, or indulging one idea of "fainting" or drawing back from God. Tears are nature's sweet relief to the bereaved and agonized heart, then why seek to restrain them? What if some, who might be denominated a kind of wooden people, deprecate them, and think it not quite in keeping with their stoical dignity to weep? We have many an example from high authority to the contrary. "The ancient Hebrews were not of opinion that courage and greatness of soul consisted in seeming to be insensible in adversity, or in restraining their tears. It was looked upon as a great disrespect for any one not to be bewailed at his funeral. So says the historian. Job says in speaking of the wicked, "His widow shall not weep." And the Psalmist, speaking of Hophni and Phineas says "their priests fell by the sword and their widows made no lamentation."

Well, when I thus suffer and weep, does Heaven take cognizance of my wounded spirit? Or if I, like the wounded deer, seek a covert from my fellows, does the Eternal interest himself in my behalf? Some of the royal family of the court of heaven, whose tearful fountains have often been opened in consequence of sore bereavements, have been exceedingly annoyed by a certain usurper, that is often prowling around, "worrying whom he can't devour," and often assuming the garb of an angel of light, using some Scripture, just as he did more than eighteen hundred years since, and so blending it with his deep machinations as to make some of them feel they were unnoticed by their heavenly Father. He suggests the truthful idea that God is a great Being! That "the inhabitants of the earth are as grasshoppers in his sight." That even "nations are as the drop of a bucket, and are accounted as the small dust," and, "that all nations are less than nothing before him." And then adds, do you think he takes special cogninance of one isolated individual, because such an one is bereaved? Your bereavement is merely the effect of natural laws; and you should never have the audacity to claim the great "I AM" as managing or having anything in particular to do with your individual case, that is altogether too small a matter for Jehovah, whose ways are as much above ours, as the heavens are higher than the [illegible] somewhat formidable were not heaven's courtiers armed with potent weapons. They might be induced, were it not for this, to conclude that human sympathy was all they could lay claim to.

But, thank heaven, it is far otherwise. Great, though he is, his clemency keeps pace with his magnanimity. At a time when his children had departed from him, and the rod of correction was necessary to move them, as soon as they relented, he says "his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel." And when at another time they had provoked the Lord very sore by their rebellion, and had to be brought low for the same, "he regarded their affliction when he heard their cry." And then behold his lenity as he bemoans backsliding Ephraim: "Since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord."

Therefore, backslidden one, you need not despair, but let hope plume her golden pinions seeing that Deity himself yearns over you with bowels of compassionate sympathy. And if such affectionate interest is manifested for the backslidden, what may we expect for those who are really trying to do his will? Then to show his attentive interest in his people, and that none of their sorrows are beneath his notice he says, "In all their affliction he was afflicted." Now whatever the affliction may be, moral, mental, or physical, his sympathy for them is sufficient to afflict himself. And further he says, "whoso toucheth them toucheth the apple of his eye." Yea, and such are his terms of intimacy with his [illegible] [illegible] so solicitous is he for their [illegible]are, that he numbers the very hairs of their head; therefore they have no occasion to fear or credit the usurper's story, that because of God's greatness he will not condescend to sympathize with puny man. Nay, verily; for "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Blessed be the name of the Lord, he pitieth the bereaved family and the bereaved church. Look at the little church when John Baptist's head was immolated on the altar of vile Herodias' ambition. Few in number and mostly illiterate, despised by the proud Pharisee, and spoken against everywhere, how could they spare so excellent and talented a man as to be denominated "a burning and shining light?" But the poor fishermen did not murmur at their loss, but paid every mark of decorum to the lifeless form they had so loved in life, and then went and conferred with Jesus relative to their bereavement who was competent to administer the balm of consolation to their bleeding hearts, and soothe all their misgivings.

And shall not the little flock of 1861 go and do likewise? When death robs us of our brightest gems, our sweetest flowers, let us talk with Jesus and he will administer a cordial, the efficacy of which none can appreciate saving those that have partaken of it. We may with the apostolic church make "great lamentation" over such, fearing no charge of impropriety from the Master, even if we "make ado and weep," whatever may be the charge of wooden stoics and modern Gehazis.

When the noble Shunamitess saw her dear and only child embraced by the monster death, some might have construed her deep, maternal affection into fanaticism, as she laid the lifeless form upon the bed of the prophet and shut the door upon him and bade her servant drive to the utmost speed possible, until they arrived at Mount Carmel, where, meeting the man of God, she instantly and tenaciously clasped his feet, at which time her grief was too big for utterance; upon which the cold, uninterested Gehazi tried to coerce her to propriety, as he might denominate it, but immediately the lenient, affectionate Elijah interposed, and peremptorily forbade the rash act, saying, "Let her alone, for her soul is vexed within her." Job also gave deep manifestations both in deed and word, while experiencing his physical and mental agony; and while others censured, God exculpates him from every charge of culpability, seeing no stubbornness or spirit of murmuring, but simply nature's throes or groans, which he was not obligated to suppress.

☞ Let us take the sacred truth into our inmost hearts, and it will aid us to attain that holiness which should be the soul's warmest desire. We must pray for it, strive for it, and it will not elude us. Earthly treasures vanish even in our grasp, but holiness is a sure possession, guarded by God himself, and only changing that it may increase unto perfection.

☞ Duty is to all a word of solemn import. Its requirements are not to be avoided without sin, or fulfilled without the approbation of conscience, which is the divine law in the heart. However distasteful in prospect, in performance it carries its own compelling great reward.

Importance of Prophecy.

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."—2 Pet 1: 19.

This is the language of the apostle, immediately after alluding to that sublime symbolic scene on the mount of transfiguration, as proof of the coming and kingdom of Christ. Yet he declares the word of prophecy to be more sure than that magnificent display of the excellent glory. But in what respect is the word of prophecy more sure than the transfiguration of Christ, the kingdom of heaven in miniature? It is not more sure evidence of his second Advent, but a more sure guide to the weary pilgrim, pressing his way through this dark, stormy, tempestuous life, to the haven of eternal rest. The transfiguration of Christ is as sure evidence of his second coming as could have been given. But it does not serve as a light, by which the Church may understand whereabouts in the economy of God they are, nor by which they can understand how to act, so as to be in harmony with the divine plan. But the word of prophecy, as it describes all the developments of God's arrangement, serves as a sure light concerning the obligations we owe to Him. Hence the necessity for taking heed to it, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place. That the word of prophecy is one of the greatest blessings ever bestowed upon man, is a fact worthy of his most candid consideration.

No sooner had man, by transgression, [illegible] the dominion which his Maker had conditionally given him, yea, and the right to life also, than his future release from the grasp of death became a subject of prophecy. Yea, the abolition of death, the gift of eternal life, and the dominion regained through Christ, are all embodied in the same prophetic declaration.

The light of the prophetic word was life to Noah; for by it he foresaw the approaching dissolution of his fellow race, and, foreseeing the evil, he hid himself, and provided for the safety of his household. By the light of prophecy Abraham, together with a host of ancient worthies, foresaw the purposes of God relative to man's salvation, and by faith embraced the promises, being persuaded that what God had promised, He would faithfully perform. By the light of prophecy, Joseph foresaw that the children of Israel would, at some future time, depart out of the land of Egypt and settle in the land of Canaan; he therefore commanded them to carry thence his bones. The light of prophecy enabled those who looked for redemption in Israel, to recognize the babe of Bethlehem as the true Messiah, and to hail his advent with joy.

The light of prophecy enabled the eastern Magi to understand that the peculiar star which they saw, attested to the fact that the King of the Jews was born. And, by the light of prophecy, the pathway of all holy men has been illuminated. But time would fail me to particularize. Were it not for the light of the prophetic word, man could know nothing of the future; all beyond the present would be to him darkness and death. But by the light of prophecy he can see, by faith, a day of future retribution, and, by the aid of the Spirit of truth, he may prepare himself to enjoy a scene of everlasting bliss. But in order to do this, he must take heed to the sure word, for it was given for the express purpose of illuminating the dark road over which he must travel, in passing from Paradise lost to Paradise restored.

The light of prophecy shines on the past, on the present, and on the future; and by taking heed to it, we can know what is in the past relative to the plan of salvation; we can discern what is present, and we can discover what is imminent. And that we may be prepared to act in accordance with the will of God, it is necessary that we understand what portions of his word are now in process of fulfillment. We may meditate continually upon those prophecies which relate to Christ's first advent—to his death, resurrection and ascension; and even to all prophecy that has become matter of history; but from these alone we can obtain no light as to what our present action should be.

That we may be co-workers with God, it is necessary that we act in harmony with the present fulfillment of prophecy, for here is where he works. Although he once worked marvelously around the cross of Christ, and still more marvelously around Joseph's new tomb; yet he is not at work there now. He is at work down here, in these last fragments of time, filling up the last jots and tittles of his word, almost ready to perform his last work in the graves of the dead; and it is the duty of his people to act in concert with him; to proclaim to the world the present developments of his economy; thus letting their light shine before men.

That we may be the light of the world, it is necessary that we take heed to the sure word of prophecy, so that we may discern which ray of the prophetic light shines out most prominently, and put that in the most conspicuous place on the lampstand, that others may see, and by it be led to glorify their Father which is in heaven. That we may have fellowship with Christ, we must act in harmony with present truth; and present truth consists in the present fulfillment of prophecy. Therefore, that we ourselves may receive any special benefit from the prophetic light, and by it be able to benefit others, it behooves us to take heed thereto; and as we discern prophetic developments, hold fast whereunto we "have already attained."

But there are two classes of prophecy to which we must take heed, in order to have the full light of revelation, viz., that which relates to the action of the political world, and that which relates to the church. As the condition and action of the governments of earth are clearly delineated in the book of prophecy for the benefit of the church, we, who occupy the last fragments of probationary time, shall do well to contemplate those prophecies.

We discover, by the light of prophecy, that the nations are fast accomplishing their last work of rebellion against the Omnipotent Ruler of the universe. We see that government symbolized by the eighth form of the leopard beast, alias the beast that was, is not, and yet is, acting in [illegible] accordance with the prophetic delinea[illegible], and ma[illegible] [illegible] strides toward perdition. We see, also, thos[illegible] [illegible] represented by the ten horns, hati[illegible] the "harlot," and employing all the means in their power to make her desolate and naked; that they are in vehement haste to devour her, ardently longing for the time to arrive when it can only be said respecting her existence, she was. We see that the time has arrived when we may be in constant expectation of witnessing the barbarous deeds of that government symbolized by the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. I am aware, however, that the position is taken by some that the two-horned beast has had his day. But for several reasons—a few only of which I will name, as it is not my purpose to dwell on this subject—I consider this to be a wrong position. Respecting the leopard beast, John says: "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast." The world wondered after the beast, when they saw that his deadly wound was healed; and the healing of his deadly wound brings him into his eighth and last form; and the two-horned beast is represented as acting cotemporaneously and amicably with the leopard beast in his eighth or revived form, for the two-horned beast "causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." Now mark: the phrase, "The first beast, whose deadly wound was healed," can represent nothing else than the eighth or last form of the first beast. And this eighth form of the first or leopard beast, is that which the two-horned beast causes the earth and them which dwell therein to worship.

Again, the two-horned beast caused an image to be made to the beast which had the wound by the sword, AND DID LIVE. That is, when the beast lived in his eighth form, after having been slain by the sword. The two-horned beast invested the image with authority to speak, and to command the inhabitants of the earth to worship him (the image), on pain of death; and that all, of every cast, should receive a mark, either in their right hands or in their foreheads. And this act of authority, on the part of the image, will invite the "third angel," (Rev. 14: 9), to deliver his message, "Saying with a loud voice, If any man" (does) "worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his name, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb." But, as the first beast did not assume his eighth form until A. D. 1848, when he ascended out of the "pit," we must look for the appearing of the image this side of that date, as the leopard beast must have assumed his eighth form before the image could be made. But I am fully confident that the two-horned beast is, at this moment, preparing to clothe the image with authority to act, according to the inspired prediction. I am also persuaded that the United States of America are destined to fulfill the prophecy relative to the two-horned beast.

Humility.

Humility is work to be performed on the part of man and is not an attribute of God whatever. He reigns on the throne of his glory, Almighty Sovereign of all. He holds the fate of nations and the destiny of worlds at his pleasure. Before such a Potentate all our actions are scrutinized—all our thoughts discerned. And it is not man's duty alone to bestow that reverence due his majesty and power, but he stands an outlawed culprit before his offended justice. He has no claim upon the mercy of his Maker. He can give no ransom to redeem himself from the penalty of a holy law. Jesus Christ pays the penalty on certain conditions. He again brings the favor of God within the grasp of man.

One of these conditions is humility. As man had nothing which could redeem hi[illegible] from the curse of the law, Christ [illegible] deeming him from its weightier pen[illegible] offers to reinstate him, if he will hu[illegible] himself in acknowledgment of the ra[illegible] already paid for him and the continual [illegible] jection of his body a living sacrifice to God. It is no more than his reasonable duty. As far as his own works are concerned he is a culprit after he has performed all that lies within his power. And shall not man acknowledge the Redeem[illegible] who has purchased his eternal salvatio[illegible] Shall he not humble himself in the low[illegible]st insignificance before the power that has raised him from the death pit of unending destruction? It is no more than a requisite and unpardonable duty of ma[illegible] t[illegible] give the hearty acknowledgment o[illegible] [illegible]ithout which he must forever h[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]ence [illegible] [illegible] your-selves therefore under the mighty [illegible] God that he may exalt you in due ti[illegible]."—1 Pet. 5: 6.

1. True humility acknowledges God as the omnipotent ruler of the universe and director of the destinies of the human family, before whom alone he is morally responsible. Man must believe there is a God or else he could not humble himself before him. And the very act of humiliation proves that he feels a guilty violation of some high and uncontrollable law, if he does not prostrate himself in humble veneration of its requisitions and commands. God cannot impose an unreasonable requirement, for it is entirely out of and beneath his nature, and man as a moral and intellectual being could not obey such a requisition if made. Hence if God has required humility, it must be righteous, and man must submit to it as the reasonable requirement of a just God. While man recognizes the power of the Almighty and at the same time that it is this Being whom he has offended, he sinks into the deepest contrition before him and implores the forgiveness of unmerited mercy.

2. True humility implies living faith in the promises of God. Christ promises that he who humbleth himself shall be exalted. And that "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble." Man grasps the promise as the only refuge from the impending storm of divine justice. It is the only bulwark behind which he can hide in safety. If a person did not believe the promises they would not rest upon them for their salvation. Consequently they would not submit to the requirements of those promises in order to obtain the blessings they contain. But faithful obedience can only be prompted by an unwavering confidence in the verity of the promise to escape the evil and obtain the good. From confidence springs up expectation. Desire entwines them together and hope springs up in the sunless caverns of destruction. Faith makes them heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, through whom they shall receive redemption from the curse of the law and salvation from the thraldom of sin, and joys ineffable shall light up their pathway to glory.

3. True humility must be held towards God, not man—an inward principle, not external manifestations. The Jews had a very expensive kind of humility, who, for pretence, made long prayers, looked sad when they fasted and made the essential point of salvation the strict observance of outward forms and ceremonies. But Christ reprimanded their hypocrisy and commanded his disciples when they fasted to "anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."—Matt. 6: 17. True humility seeks to obey the commandments of God, not to gratify the approbation of men. Within the secluded retreat of devotion's shrine it prostrates all its desires and aspirations, its hopes and its affections to the service of God. It shuns the display of pretending emoluments—the approbation of short-sighted mortals, and asks for that glory and honor and immortality which is bestowed by the Sovereign of heaven alone. It is true, that becoming modesty will shine forth in every society in which they may mingle; but these deep indwelling springs of humility are seen alone by the eye of heaven.

4. If man will not humble himself in probation, God will humble him in the day of judgment. He has sworn: "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me and every tongue confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. 14: 11. If we will humble ourselves in deep contrition to him before the age of mercy closes, he will exalt us in the day of judgment to sit upon thrones of glory, wearing crowns of unfading brightness and bearing palms of eternal triumph. But if we will not humble ourselves before him we shall be found among those who will call for the mountains and rocks to "fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb. "For the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand." This will be their humiliation. It will end in the lake of fire which is the second death. I tremble [illegible] that person who prays for God to hum[illegible] him. If the Almighty should an[illegible] that prayer, condemnation, with all [illegible] terrible consequences, would be poured [illegible] unmixed with mercy upon his guilty [illegible]. But if man will humble himself, an exaltation to angelic equality and more than angelic glory will be the priceless boon of unmerited favor; and he will reap a rich harvest of eter[illegible] [illegible]lessedness, [illegible]mortality and une[illegible] [illegible]

For the Crisis.

To the Weak in Faith.

In the year 18— there lived in the village of B—— a family whose unwavering faith in God had separated them from the society of the popular and the gay, and for whose integrity and christian fortitude the devil sought to heap upon them afflictions and sorrows in every possible way. It seemed as though the devil was enraged because he could not get them to give up their hope of life through Christ, and join with the world and popular church, and be "hail, fellows, well met." But in spite of the sneers of popular professors, scoffs of the wicked, and afflictions of the devil, they maintained their steadfastness, "always abounding in the work of the Lord." The husband and father was a man like the most of God's children that had to work to support his family—a wife and six children. The adversary saw this, and doubtless thought, if he could manage to have him thrown out of employment, he would be forced to abandon his christian firmness. So by his intriguing, using men for his agents, the "enemy of all righteousness" caused him to be thrown out of employment. What should be done now? What would the family do for daily bread? They had no fears. They believed the same God that fed Elijah in the wilderness would feed them if they trusted in him. The eldest daughter was taken severely ill, and many long and dreary weeks in that severe winter she was upon the sufferer's couch. The father could get no employment, unless it was to sell rum, or do something he knew to be wrong. Should he yield? Now came the trial of their faith. Would God not answer prayer now as well as many times before? They believed he would, and had perfect confidence.

The Lord directed the steps of two of his children to their dwelling to remain over night, and they saw something of their condition; but left them nothing but a "God bless you," and "don't yield to the enemy," and went away without even saying "good bye." Time rolled on, and ere many weeks had passed, they received a letter from these two men with on[illegible] [illegible] enclosed, and soon another with three, and another with eight, etc., until in all they received twenty-six dollars, I believe; and their wants were all supplied, and they yielded not to the enemy, and in due time the father got employment, and they were made to rejoice, knowing that it is not in vain to trust in the Lord.

I do not write this to convince infidels or cavilers that God hears and answers prayer, and supplies the wants of his people, but to try to strengthen the faith of the weak. O! my brother or my sister, in the hour of trial, when all seems dark before you, and famine may seem to stare you in the face, be not terrified. "Trust ye in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." "Have faith in God." The same God that said to the faithful in Elijah's day, when famine was in the land, "and it rained not on the earth for the space of three years and six months," "Fear not," "the barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth

Parting.

"What mean ye to weep and break my heart?"

What mean ye, weeping pilgrims,
To break my bleeding heart?
Why fill the air with sighings
When we are called to part?
I go on glorious errands,
To prison or to death,
To tell of God's salvation
Till my last fleeting breath.

O! think not that the crosses
Of Christ are hard to bear,
Or that the pains and losses
I scorn with Him to share;
I count my bonds as pleasure
So I may Jesus g[a]in,
And death is but a conflict
Where I a crown obtain.

Cheer up, ye trembling soldiers,
I dread no scourge or rod;
My life is not in peril

Affliction.

When necessitated to drink large potations from sorrow's cup, it is truly a great blessing to have the sympathy of our fellow beings. As a distinguished writer remarks, "Weeping with those that weep, does nor dry their tears, it is true, but it may serve to dilute them." Yea, who of us have not proved that it does greatly assuage the poignancy of the bitter draught, especially, when superiors so far doff their stoical dignity as to make demonstrations of grief in sobs and tears, and plaintive moans? Then, how should our sad hearts be comforted, while receiving assurance from the high authority of inspiration that He who spake the world into existence, and then was adequate to "measure the waters" thereof "in the hollow of his hand," and mete out heaven with a span, and comprehend the dust of the earth in a measure, and "weigh the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance"; "that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and stretcheth out the heavens for his curtain and taketh up the isles as a very little thing";—when such a Being condescends to dilute our tears with his blessed sympathy, will it not so sweeten the bitter draught that we can drink it without a murmur? Yea, when we recollect that it is administered for our spiritual convalescence, will it not even remove the frown that nature could not forbear manifesting?

But how and why is this, that God should allow the cup of sorrow to be proffered to his "dearly beloved" and chosen people? Why use the rod on those who try to do his will? Because by this process there is hope of making something of them, or, in other words, by this means he elicits their virtues and makes them shine before the world with undimmed lustre. It may properly be denominated the crucible, in which he refines them and purges away their dross.—Isa. 48:10; Ps. 66; 10. He plainly tells us "he does not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men," but for their "profit." How often have we seen people go astray, like David, before they were afflicted, but when they felt the rod, they bethought themselves of their wanderings, and arose to return to their Father's house. Just let the mind's eye run over our own circle of acquaintance, and see how many more have drawn near to God in affliction, than in prosperity.

It must be acknowledg[illegible] few, very few, ever become eminent for [illegible] without passing through sorrow's vale. [illegible] were necessary for the Captain of our [illegible]vation to be perfected through suffering [illegible] [illegible]lude some strange thing has hap[pened] [illegible] we pass the same ordeal; [illegible] [dis]ciple be as his [Mas]ter? [illegible] God more especially chas[illegible] [illegible] very wicked and not [illegible] above the ordinary heat instead of those who are trying to do his will? It may be there is no chance to benefit them, and you know he does not willingly afflict, that is, he takes no pleasure in afflicting, unless it be for our "profit." When he sees that chastisements avail nothing, he ceases to use the rod, saying as he did to Ephraim, "Let them alone," until the time appointed for retributive justice!

And can we not find something like this existing among our own race? I think most of us could find a precedent without a long search, where parents have continued to restrain by chastisement, those children of whom they had hope, while those they despaired of benefiting they have given up to take their own course, with the understanding they may lay no more claims to paternal privileges or restraints. If we were to visit the Five-Points' house of Industry, Mr. Barlow, the successor of Mr. Pease, could lead us into one of those dismal garret rookeries, and point us to the mere wreck of a once beautiful daughter of a millionaire, lying on the bare floor, huddled together with thieves, beggars, prostitutes, of every age, sex and color, indiscriminately, as the inhabitants of a sty, while her father masters a palace in uppertendom! Do you ask why this disparity? It seems her friends despaired of reforming her, such was her unconquerable thirst for the intoxicating cup, therefore they ceased to chasten or use the bridle of restraint, seeing it was to no purpose—her case a hopeless one. But while they entertained hope of her reform, think you not they restrained her with chastisement?

Then is it not safe to premise th[at], while our heavenly Fath[er chast]ens us, there is [illegible] our case? "But if we be without chastisement whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." Furthermore, "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." But he cautions us against "fainting" or becoming discouraged, while passing through the fiery ordeal. But he does not forbid nature's relief, or love us the less, or consider us wanting christian magnanimity because we may possess temperaments the most ardent and give the honest expressions of such temperaments. Because we may be extremely sensitive to the sore chastisement, it does not argue rebellion, by any means; but, as the tender and affectionate child grieves more sorely when receiving chastisement, than the one of the opposite character, so the dear child of God may shed his tears in profusion, and give expression of his deep agony without incurring culpability, or indulging one idea of "fainting" or drawing back from God. Tears are nature's sweet relief to the bereaved and agonized heart, then why seek to restrain them? What if some, who might be denominated a kind of wooden people, deprecate them, and think it not quite in keeping with their stoical dignity to weep? We have many an example from high authority to the contrary. "The ancient Hebrews were not of opinion that courage and greatness of soul consisted in seeming to be insensible in adversity, or in restraining their tears. It was looked upon as a great disrespect for any one not to be bewailed at his funeral. So says the historian. Job says in speaking of the wicked, "His widow shall not weep." And the Psalmist, speaking of Hophni and Phineas says "their priests fell by the sword and their widows made no lamentation."

Well, when I thus suffer and weep, does Heaven take cognizance of my wounded spirit? Or if I, like the wounded deer, seek a covert from my fellows, does the Eternal interest himself in my behalf? Some of the royal family of the court of heaven, whose tearful fountains have often been opened in consequence of sore bereavements, have been exceedingly annoyed by a certain usurper, that is often prowling around, "worrying whom he can't devour," and often assuming the garb of an angel of light, using some Scripture, just as he did more than eighteen hundred years since, and so blending it with his deep machinations as to make some of them feel they were unnoticed by their heavenly Father. He suggests the truthful idea that God is a great Being! That "the inhabitants of the earth are as grasshoppers in his sight." That even "nations are as the drop of a bucket, and are accounted as the small dust," and, "that all nations are less than nothing before him." And then adds, do you think he takes special cognizance of one isolated individual, because such an one is bereaved? Your bereavement is merely the effect of natural laws; and you should never have the audacity to claim the great "I AM" as managing or having anything in particular to do with your individual case, that is altogether too small a matter for Jehovah, whose ways are as much above ours, as the heavens are higher than the [illegible] somewhat formidable were not heaven's courtiers armed with potent weapons. They might be induced, were it not for this, to conclude that human sympathy was all they could lay claim to.

But, thank heaven, it is far otherwise. Great, though he is, his clemency keeps pace with his magnanimity. At a time when his children had departed from him, and the rod of correction was necessary to save them, as soon as they relented, he says "his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel." And when at another time they had provoked the Lord very sore by their rebellion, and had to be brought low for the same, "he regarded their affliction when he heard their cry." And then behold his lenity as he bemoans backsliding Ephraim: "Since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord."

Therefore, backslidden one, you need not despair, but let hope plume her golden pinions seeing that Deity himself yearns over you with bowels of compassionate sympathy. And if such affectionate interest is manifested for the backslidden, what may we expect for those who are really trying to do his will? Then to show his attentive interest in his people, and that none of their sorrows are beneath his notice he says, "In all their affliction he was afflicted." Now whatever the affliction may be, moral, mental, or physical, his sympathy for them is sufficient to afflict himself. And further he says, "whoso toucheth them toucheth the apple of his eye." Yea, and such are his terms of intimacy with his [illegible] [an]d so solicitous is he for their [welf]are, that he numbers the very hairs of their head; therefore they have no occasion to fear or credit the usurper's story, that because of God's greatness he will not condescend to sympathize with puny man. Nay, verily; for "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Blessed be the name of the Lord, he pitieth the bereaved family and the bereaved church. Look at the little church when John Baptist's head was immolated on the altar of vile Herodias' ambition. Few in number and mostly illiterate, despised by the proud Pharisee, and spoken against everywhere, how could they spare so excellent and talented a man as to be denominated "a burning and shining light?" But the poor fishermen did not murmur at their loss, but paid every mark of decorum to the lifeless form they had so loved in life, and then went and conferred with Jesus relative to their bereavement who was competent to administer the balm of consolation to their bleeding hearts, and soothe all their misgivings.

And shall not the little flock of 1861 go and do likewise? When death robs us of our brightest gems, our sweetest flowers, let us talk with Jesus and he will administer a cordial, the efficacy of which none can appreciate saving those that have partaken of it. We may with the apostolic church make "great lamentation" over such, fearing no charge of impropriety from the Master, even if we "make ado and weep," whatever may be the charge of wooden stoics and modern Gehazis.

When the noble Shunamitess saw her dear and only child embraced by the monster death, some might have construed her deep, maternal affection into fanaticism, as she laid the lifeless form upon the bed of the prophet and shut the door upon him and bade her servant drive to the utmost speed possible, until they arrived at Mount Carmel, where, meeting the man of God, she instantly and tenaciously clasped his feet, at which time her grief was too big for utterance; upon which the cold, uninterested Gehazi tried to coerce her to propriety, as he might denominate it, but immediately the lenient, affectionate Elijah interposed, and peremptorily forbade the rash act, saying, "Let her alone, for her soul is vexed within her." Job also gave deep manifestations both in deed and word, while experiencing his physical and mental agony; and while others censured, God exculpates him from every charge of culpability, seeing no stubbornness or spirit of murmuring, but simply nature's throes or groans, which he was not obligated to suppress. Importance of Prophecy.

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."—2 PET 1: 19.

This is the language of the apostle, immediately after alluding to that sublime symbolic scene on the mount of transfiguration, as proof of the coming and kingdom of Christ. Yet he declares the word of prophecy to be more sure than that magnificent display of the excellent glory. But in what respect is the word of prophecy more sure than the transfiguration of Christ, the kingdom of heaven in miniature? It is not more sure evidence of his second Advent, but a more sure guide to the weary pilgrim, pressing his way through this dark, stormy, tempestuous life, to the haven of eternal rest. The transfiguration of Christ is as sure evidence of his second coming as could have been given. But it does not serve as a light, by which the Church may understand whereabouts in the economy of God they are, nor by which they can understand how to act, so as to be in harmony with the divine plan. But the word of prophecy, as it describes all the developments of God's arrangement, serves as a sure light concerning the obligations we owe to Him. Hence the necessity for taking heed to it, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place. That the word of prophecy is one of the greatest blessings ever bestowed upon man, is a fact worthy of his most candid consideration.

No sooner had man, by transgression, [illegible] the dominion which his Maker had conditionally given him, yea, and the right to life also, than his future release from the grasp of death became a subject of prophecy. Yea, the abolition of death, the gift of eternal life, and the dominion regained through Christ, are all embodied in the same prophetic declaration.

The light of the prophetic word was life to Noah; for by it he foresaw the approaching dissolution of his fellow race, and, foreseeing the evil, he hid himself, and provided for the safety of his household. By the light of prophecy Abraham, together with a host of ancient worthies, foresaw the purposes of God relative to man's salvation, and by faith embraced the promises, being persuaded that what God had promised, He would faithfully perform. By the light of prophecy, Joseph foresaw that the children of Israel would, at some future time, depart out of the land of Egypt and settle in the land of Canaan; he therefore commanded them to carry thence his bones. The light of prophecy enabled those who looked for redemption in Israel, to recognize the babe of Bethlehem as the true Messiah, and to hail his advent with joy.

The light of prophecy enabled the eastern Magi to understand that the peculiar star which they saw, attested to the fact that the King of the Jews was born. And, by the light of prophecy, the pathway of all holy men has been illuminated. But time would fail me to particularize. Were it not for the light of the prophetic word, man could know nothing of the future; all beyond the present would be to him darkness and death. But by the light of prophecy he can see, by faith, a day of future retribution, and, by the aid of the Spirit of truth, he may prepare himself to enjoy a scene of everlasting bliss. But in order to do this, he must take heed to the sure word, for it was given for the express purpose of illuminating the dark road over which he must travel, in passing from Paradise lost to Paradise restored.

The light of prophecy shines on the past, on the present, and on the future; and by taking heed to it, we can know what is in the past relative to the plan of salvation; we can discern what is present, and we can discover what is imminent. And that we may be prepared to act in accordance with the will of God, it is necessary that we understand what portions of his word are now in process of fulfillment. We may meditate continually upon those prophecies which relate to Christ's first advent—to his death, resurrection and ascension; and even to all prophecy that has become matter of history; but from these alone we can obtain no light as to what our present action should be.

That we may be co-workers with God, it is necessary that we act in harmony with the present fulfillment of prophecy, for here is where he works. Although he once worked marvelously around the cross of Christ, and still more marvelously around Joseph's new tomb; yet he is not at work there now. He is at work down here, in these last fragments of time, filling up the last jots and tittles of his word, almost ready to perform this last work in the graves of the dead; and it is the duty of his people to act in concert with him; to [illegible] ments of his economy; thus letting their light shine before men.

That we may be the light of the world, it is necessary that we take heed to the sure word of prophecy, so that we may discern which ray of the prophetic light shines out most prominently, and put that in the most conspicuous place on the lampstand, that others may see, and by it be led to glorify their Father which is in heaven. That we may have fellowship with Christ, we must act in harmony with present truth; and present truth consists in the present fulfillment of prophecy. Therefore, that we ourselves may receive any special benefit from the prophetic light, and by it be able to benefit others, it behooves us to take heed thereto; and as we discern prophetic developments, hold fast whereunto we "have already attained."

But there are two classes of prophecy to which we must take heed, in order to have the full light of revelation, viz., that which relates to the action of the political world, and that which relates to the church. As the condition and action of the governments of earth are clearly delineated in the book of prophecy for the benefit of the church, we, who occupy the last fragments of probationary time, shall do well to contemplate those prophecies.

We discover, by the light of prophecy, that the nations are fast accomplishing their last work of rebellion against the Omnipotent Ruler of the universe. We see that government symbolized by the eighth form of the leopard beast, alias the beast that was, is not, and yet is, acting in [per]fect accordance with the prophetic delinea[tion], and ma[illegible] strides toward perdition. We see, also, thos[e] [illegible] [re]presented by the ten horns, hati[ng] the "harlot," and employing all the means in their power to make her desolate and naked; that they are in vehement haste to devour her, ardently longing for the time to arrive when it can only be said respecting her existence, she was. We see that the time has arrived when we may be in constant expectation of witnessing the barbarous deeds of that government symbolized by the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. I am aware, however, that the position is taken by some that the two-horned beast has had his day. But for several reasons—a few only of which I will name, as it is not my purpose to dwell on this subject—I consider this to be a wrong position. Respecting the leopard beast, John says: "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast." The world wondered after the beast, when they saw that his deadly wound was healed; and the healing of his deadly wound brings him into his eighth and last form; and the two-horned beast is represented as acting cotemporaneously and amicably with the leopard beast in his eighth or revived form, for the two-horned beast "causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." Now mark: the phrase, "The first beast, whose deadly wound was healed," can represent nothing else than the eighth or last form of the first beast. And this eighth form of the first or leopard beast, is that which the two-horned beast causes the earth and them which dwell therein to worship.

Again, the two-horned beast caused an image to be made to the beast which had the wound by the sword, AND DID LIVE. That is, when the beast lived in his eighth form, after having been slain by the sword. The two-horned beast invested the image with authority to speak, and to command the inhabitants of the earth to worship him (the image), on pain of death; and that all, of every cast, should receive a mark, either in their right hands or in their foreheads. And this act of authority, on the part of the image, will invite the "third angel," (Rev. 14: 9), to deliver his message, "Saying with a loud voice, If any man" (does) "worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his name, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb." But, as the first beast did not assume his eighth form until A. D. 1848, when he ascended out of the "pit," we must look for the appearing of the image this side of that date, as the leopard beast must have assumed his eighth form before the image could be made. But I am fully confident that the two-horned beast is, at this moment, preparing to clothe the image with authority to act, according to the inspired prediction. I am also persuaded that the United States of America are destined to fulfill the prophecy relative to the two-horned beast. [illegible] Robinson.

Humility.

Humility is work to be performed on the part of man and is not an attribute of God whatever. He reigns on the throne of his glory, Almighty Sovereign of all. He holds the fate of nations and the destiny of worlds at his pleasure. Before such a Potentate all our actions are scrutinized—all our thoughts discerned. And it is not man's duty alone to bestow that reverence due his majesty and power, but he stands an outlawed culprit before his offended justice. He has no claim upon the mercy of his Maker. He can give no ransom to redeem himself from the penalty of a holy law. Jesus Christ pays the penalty on certain conditions. He again brings the favor of God within the grasp of man.

One of these conditions is humility. As man had nothing which could redeem hi[m] from the curse of the law, Chris[t] [re]deeming him from its weightier pen[alty] offers to reinstate him, if he will hum[ble] himself in acknowledgment of the ran[som] already paid for him and the continual [sub]jection of his body a living sacrifice to God. It is no more than his reasonable duty. As far as his own works are concerned he is a culprit after he has performed all that lies within his power. And shall not man acknowledge the Redeemer who has purchased his eternal salvation? Shall he not humble himself in the lowest insignificance before the power that has raised him from the death pit of unending destruction? It is no more than a requisite and unpardonable duty of man to give the hearty acknowledgment of [illegible] without which he must forever ha[illegible] Hence [illegible] and prop[illegible] your-selves therefore under the mighty [illegible] God that he may exalt you in due t[ime]. —1 Pet. 5: 6.

1. True humility acknowledges God as the omnipotent ruler of the universe and director of the destinies of the human family, before whom alone he is morally responsible. Man must believe there is a God or else he could not humble himself before him. And the very act of humiliation proves that he feels a guilty violation of some high and uncontrollable law, if he does not prostrate himself in humble veneration of its requisitions and commands. God cannot impose an unreasonable requirement, for it is entirely out of and beneath his nature, and man as a moral and intellectual being could not obey such a requisition if made. Hence if God has required humility, it must be righteous, and man must submit to it as the reasonable requirement of a just God. While man recognizes the power of the Almighty and at the same time that it is this Being whom he has offended, he sinks into the deepest contrition before him and implores the forgiveness of unmerited mercy.

2. True humility implies living faith in the promises of God. Christ promises that he who humbleth himself shall be exalted. And that "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble." Man grasps the promise as the only refuge from the impending storm of divine justice. It is the only bulwark behind which he can hide in safety. If a person did not believe the promises they would not rest upon them for their salvation. Consequently they would not submit to the requirements of those promises in order to obtain the blessings they contain. But faithful obedience can only be prompted by an unwavering confidence in the verity of the promise to escape the evil and obtain the good. From confidence springs up expectation. Desire entwines them together and hope springs up in the sunless caverns of destruction. Faith makes them heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, through whom they shall receive redemption from the curse of the law and salvation from the thraldom of sin, and joys ineffable shall light up their pathway to glory.

3. True humility must be held towards God, not man—an inward principle, not external manifestations. The Jews had a very expensive kind of humility, who, for pretence, made long prayers, looked sad when they fasted and made the essential point of salvation the strict observance of outward forms and ceremonies. But Christ reprimanded their hypocrisy and commanded his disciples when they fasted to "anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."—Matt. 6: 17. True humility seeks to obey the commandments of God, not to gratify the approbation of men. Within the secluded retreat of devotion's shrine it prostrates all its desires and aspirations, its hopes and its affections to the service of God. It shuns the display of pretending [illegible]—the approbation of short-sighted mortals, and asks for that [illegible] glory and honor and immortality which is bestowed by the Sovereign of heaven alone. It is true, that becoming meekness will shine forth in every society in which they may mingle; but those deep indwelling springs of humility are seen alone by the eye of heaven.

4. If man will not humble himself in probation, God will humble him in the day of judgment. He has sworn: "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me and every tongue confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. 14: 11. If we will humble ourselves in deep contrition to him before the age of mercy closes, he will exalt us in the day of judgment to sit upon thrones of glory, wearing crowns of unfading brightness and bearing palms of eternal triumph. But if we will not humble ourselves before him we shall be found among those who will call for the mountains and rocks to "fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb. "For the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand." This will be their humiliation. It will end in the lake of fire which is the second death. I tremble [fo]r that person who prays for God to hum[bl]e him. If the Almighty should an[swer] that prayer, condemnation, with all [its t]errible consequences, would be poured [out] unmixed with mercy upon his guilty [illegible]

[5]. But if man will humble himself, an [ex]altation to angelic equality and more than angelic glory will be the priceless boon of unmerited favor; and he will reap a rich harvest of eter[nal b]lessedness, [im]mortality and une[illegible] [illegible]

To the Weak in Faith.

In the year 18— there lived in the village of B—— a family whose unwavering faith in God had separated them from the society of the popular and the gay, and for whose integrity and christian fortitude the devil sought to heap upon them afflictions and sorrows in every possible way. It seemed as though the devil was enraged because he could not get them to give up their hope of life through Christ, and join with the world and popular church, and be "hail, fellows, well met." But in spite of the sneers of popular professors, scoffs of the wicked, and afflictions of the devil, they maintained their steadfastness, "always abounding in the work of the Lord." The husband and father was a man like the most of God's children that had to work to support his family—a wife and six children. The adversary saw this, and doubtless thought, if he could manage to have him thrown out of employment, he would be forced to abandon his christian firmness. So by his intriguing, using men for his agents, the "enemy of all righteousness" caused him to be thrown out of employment. What should be done now? What would the family do for daily bread? They had no fears. They believed the same God that fed Elijah in the wilderness would feed them if they trusted in him. The eldest daughter was taken severely ill, and many long and dreary weeks in that severe winter she was upon the sufferer's couch. The father could get no employment, unless it was to sell rum, or do something he knew to be wrong. Should he yield? Now came the trial of their faith. Would God not answer prayer now as well as many times before? They believed he would, and had perfect confidence.

The Lord directed the steps of two of his children to their dwelling to remain over night, and they saw something of their condition; but left them nothing but a "God bless you," and "don't yield to the enemy," and went away without even saying "good bye." Time rolled on, and ere many weeks had passed, they received a letter from these two men with [illegible] enclosed, and soon another with three, and another with eight, etc., until in all they received twenty-six dollars, I believe; and their wants were all supplied, and they yielded not to the enemy, and in due time the father got employment, and they were made to rejoice, knowing that it is not in vain to trust in the Lord.

I do not write this to convince infidels or cavilers that God hears and answers prayer, and supplies the wants of his people, but to try to strengthen the faith of the weak. O! my brother or my sister, in the hour of trial, when all seems dark before you, and famine may seem to stare you in the face, be not terrified. "Trust ye in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." "Have faith in God." The same God that said to the faithful in Elijah's day, when famine was in the land, "and it rained not on the earth for the space of three years and six months," "Fear not, the barrel of meal shall not waste, [illegible] rain upon the earth," knows that we "have need" of "food and raiment," and will supply our needs. And you, dear friends, that had your wants supplied as above, "be strong in God." O! may your faith grow stronger and stronger from day to day, and as you think how the Lord has fed and guided you, may you live nearer to him, and be wholly consecrated to his service [illegible] in the hour when trials are severe—"when friends (?) forsake and foes assail," lean upon that God that careth for you. May we all that love Jesus be strong in faith, and fear not "what man shall do unto us." And though the meal in the barrel and oil in the cruise may get low, THEY WILL NOT FAIL. The Lord God will supply our needs in these "perilous times," and soon send Jesus for our eternal salvation, and then, blessed be God, we shall live by sight and not by faith, and dwell forever in the kingdom, and "eat of the good of the land."

Notes by the Way.

BRO. GRANT:—That beautiful city, described by the holy seers of old is full in my view! Its glory beams upon my soul, its odor is wafted to me—its sounds salute mine ear,—its spirit I inhale into my soul, and my longing heart is there! Amen.

I am trying to do what appears to be duty, to win a bride for my MASTER, by presenting the things concerning the kingdom of God and the Christ. I have just been favored with the privilege of spending about four weeks in the States; having received an invitation from the [illegible] of God at Addison, Vt., through their beloved pastor, Eld. D. T. Ross, to come among them and hold a protracted meeting. Consequently, on the morning of Jan. 26th, I left my friend Buck's, being conveyed by him over an unbeaten road lined deep with snow to Prescott, a distance of eighteen miles. Then I crossed the noble waters of [illegible] bridge, took the chariots of Nahum, stop[illegible] Chateaugay, N. Y., where I met as u[illegible] th a warm reception. Gave eleven sermo[ns] to respectable congregations, who gave good attention to the doctrine preached. Good was done, for saints were comforted, a number decided to be baptized, and some of the Cain family were a little stirred up by the strange doctrine presented.

Feb. 1st, reached Vergennes, Vt., where I found Brn. Ross and Smith in readiness to convey me to A. In the evening I met a respectable congregation (as to intelligence and size) in their beautiful house of worship, who listened with profound attention, while I gave them a talk upon Luke 10: 42. I remained with them until I gave them fifteen sermons; and, although the roads were bad, and the weather changeable, mercury down to 38 below Zero, our meetings continued to increase in interest until the close. And when it was possible for the people to get there, our house was full. A deep interest was created by the strange doctrine preached. Fifteen started for the highlands of glory. Amen.

The church at A. are favored with the efficient labors of Eld. D. T. Ross. Bro. R. was formerly a Methodist preacher but embraced the truth under my labors in the spring of 1850, with his amiable companion, whom I had the pleasure of burying beneath the swelling flood, in the likeness of the death of Christ. Bro. R. wields a powerful influence in the church and out of it. And my prayer is, that he may be successful in making up the bride, the Lamb's wife—the queen of the coming age—who is jointly to reign with him in his kingdom, and share in its glory.

My visit at A. and C. I have recorded among the things which I wish to remember forever. The Lord reward them for their great liberality in the aid which they rendered me in my work of mercy to mortal man. Amen.

Mt. Vernon Conference.

This Conference was one of much interest. Many brethren and sisters came in [illegible], Rome, Belgrade, Vienna, [illegible]more and Hartford, ready to work for the spread of the gospel of the kingdom of God. Our social meetings were deeply interesting. The preaching was calculated to awaken a greater interest in the gospel hope, the evidences of Christ's immediate coming and the duty of faithfulness to God. The community showed us great kindness, and treated us with much hospitality. It was the first meeting of the kind ever held in the place. Some of the people did not attend, but those who did seemed interested, and many of them were benefited by it. Several wanderers felt their condition most deeply, and resolved to return to God. Also, several unconverted ones seemed very penitent, and almost determined to submit to God. We believe God will bring much good out of this effort, notwithstanding the efforts of one James Hall to pervert and do mischief. Sunday, P. M., Mr. Hall claimed it as his right to occupy the time, and declared he would do so, interrupting the opening service of the meeting, but was [illegible] for the [illegible]. We then stated to the audience that we did not countenance him as a gospel minister, and asked him to refrain; but he contested. Eld. E. M. Haggett attempted to commence his discourse, Hall continuing to interrupt, calling several of us liars, and opened a strain of blackguardism most disgusting, and finally of blasphemous sayings. One of the citizens of the place advised that we clear the house, and we concluded to leave; nearly all did so, under the sound of boisterous screamings, yellings and groanings from Hall, calling us liars, hypocrites, and other bad names.

Previously, I, with many other brethren, have looked upon this man with much charity, believing his misdoings should be attributed to mental derangement; but we are now fully convinced that they are the fruits of a turbulent, unsubdued will, from a hypocritical heart, bent on doing mischief to those who will not support his blasphemous pretensions and honor him as an inspired messenger of God. The man who brought him to the meeting knew the part Mr. H. was to act, and the time he was to act it, and notified some in the community beforehand that Hall would preach or make trouble, at the same time recommending him as a good man, and good minister. The part he has acted for some time causes our brethren generally to feel satisfied that he is no better than Hall, but secretly aids [him] and others in their efforts to pervert [and] ruin the cause of God in which we [wor]k. I am counselled by many brethren [to m]ake this public report of these men for the benefit of others, and a sense of duty prompts me to do it.

Sunday evening we came together again and had an excellent meeting to close our conference, then parted, not all to meet again until Jesus comes. We much regretted that those happy disciples could not [ha]ve partaken of the Lord's Supper. All th[in]gs had been provided, but the uproar of [th]at disturber made it improper to do so. We hope soon to meet around the table o[f th]e Lord where no wicked person can e[nter].

For the Crisis.

Pencilings by the Way.

Sunday, Jan. 27th, preached in Compton to a full house. Subject—the everlasting kingdom of God. Showed from the Scriptures that the kingdom of Christ possesses all those essential elements that go to constitute any other or human kingdom. The kingdom spoken of was a subject of promise in the time of the patriarchs, prophets, and as late as the days of the apostles. Therefore the message of salvation cannot be the kingdom, as some suppose: it is the proclamation of the kingdom; it proclaims the character and nature of Christ's kingdom, and the terms by which it may be enjoyed. Hence it is called the gospel, the good news or good tidings of the reign of the Son of man. His kingdom has various aspects, and the Scriptures relating to it are expressive of this fact. For instance. The Savior likens the kingdom of heaven to tares growing with the wheat, and to good and bad fish caught in a net, referring to the kingdom in its imperfect or embryo state. The king is personally absent, gone into a far country. Many of his subjects who are heirs, are under the dominion of death and the grave; therefore, the constituent parts are not all here present, and by parables it is thus represented. Some seemed anxious to know the truth, the fruit of which we expect to see in the day of eternity.

Sunday, Feb. 3d, by request, spake twice at the Carr school-house to attentive congregations. Thought the meeting would finally result in the conversion of some to God. My calls for labor are numerous and urgent upon all sides. Many laborers could be employed here if they could be supported; but the idolatrous spirit of covetousness prevails, as a general thing, and the great want of some system in church economy.

Feb. 6th, by special request attended meeting at Compton Centre. This place has been a real Sodom for years, but God has in answer to prayer begun a glorious work. Thirty-five were forward for prayers in the meeting, most of them youth. Some were blest. Thank the Lord, for his great work in this wicked place. There is a large field in the Canadas for labor; ears and doors are opened on every hand. The spirit of inquiry is wakened up in all this region of country, also the spirit of opposition, as might be expected. Many have embraced the truth of the soon coming of Jesus, sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked. Others are inquiring in that direction, and a great interest is felt all through the land.

Feb. 23d, arrived home. Thus ended four months' labor. Can safely say that I have seen more than a score converted to God; hence I am led to exclaim, Not unto me, not unto me, but to God's name be all the glory.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 6, 1861.

Danville.

Our meetings in Danville, C. E., commenced Sabbath, Feb. 10th, and continued two weeks. We found this church in quite a healthy state, loving the appearing of our Savior. Danville is a thriving village, on the Grand Trunk R. R., about midway between Montreal and Quebec. It contains seven stores, two public houses, an academy, and five meeting-houses.

In all our travels, we have never labored where the people take so much pains to get to meeting as at Danville. They seem willing to make a sacrifice for the sake of the truth. We love to visit them on this account; for we expect to see something accomplished. Whenever we have been among them, we have found that they had observed a day of fasting and prayer, before our arrival, entreating the Lord to bless the effort; and they have not been disappointed in their expectations. They act as though they thought christianity of some importance, and that it should occupy the first place in their affections. Quite a number of the brethren and sisters live from two to five miles from the meeting-house; but it is seldom that they are absent a single evening. When the traveling is so bad that they cannot come with their teams, they go on foot; and some that have none, come from two to four miles and back about every evening, let the weather be even very cold and stormy. Nights when it would seem but very few could get out, our house would be full; and at other times, when circumstances were only moderately favorable, it would be crowded to its utmost capacity. Women bring their infant children with them these cold winter nights, but receive no injury; the only inconvenience being an occasional baby song; but in such cases, we have only to talk a little louder and faster, and thus keep the attention [of the] people. We n[illegible] to stay at home [on] account of their children. Come and bring them with you, rather than be deprived of the meetings. We wish some of the city people, who think it a great task to go a mile or two on nice side-walks, could go to Danville and see them turn out in cold, stormy, winter weather, and travel through deep snow three and four miles on foot and back to evening meeting. They might then prize their own privileges higher, and improve them better. It can hardly be otherwise than that those who make such sacrifices to meet for the worship of the Lord, should not have good meetings, and be advanced in divine life.

The meetings just closed at Danville have been our best in this place. The church took advanced ground at once, and as a result, the unconverted were awakened to see their dangerous situation, and a goodly number sought and obtained pardon from the Lord, and went on their way rejoicing to the land of glory. The number who requested prayers every evening during the two weeks, varied from one to thirty. Between twenty and thirty were converted, and eighteen were baptized. Others are seeking the Lord.

Sabbath morning, Feb. 24th, we met at 9 1-2 o'clock for a love-feast, during which eighty-five spoke in fifty minutes. It was a heart-cheering time. In the evening the same number gathered around the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings of our dear Savior. It was a heavenly scene, worthy a choice place upon memory's tablet. We parted, firmly resolved to meet in the kingdom, where no fears of parting will ever sadden the lonely heart.

Our visit to Danville has been a pleasant one; although the snow was deep and the weather cold, we found warm hearts to greet us, that spared no pains to make our stay with them very agreeable, in Bro. Porter's pilgrim home. The church in Danville is a living and growing one.

The Holy Spirit.—No. 3.

BRO. GRANT:—What is the Holy Spirit? How are we to be filled with it? How can we tell the difference between the operation of the Holy Spirit, and the spirit of mesmerism?

T. M. PREBLE.

Having considered the first question among the foregoing series, we pass to the second inquiry,—"How are we to be filled with it? It is certain that we are required to be filled with the Spirit, which clearly shows that we are not naturally, or constitutionally, filled. In Eph. 5: 18, we read, "Be filled with the Spirit." We should not be required to be filled with it if it were impossible, or if it were to be accomplished without any action on our part. In the Scriptures, we read of many who were filled with it. When Paul was converted, Ananias entered into the house where he was, and laid his hands on him, and said, "The Lord . . . hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost."—Acts 9: 17. At another time, the apostles requested the brethren to look out "seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," who were to see that the poor were provided for. As a matter of course, those who are filled with the Spirit will be prompted to feel and act like the Lord from whom it proceeds. It leads them to love what he loves, and dislike what is disagreeable to him; in short, it makes us Christ-like.

But how shall we be filled with it? The answer is readily found in the Scriptures. Said Peter and "the other apostles, God giveth the Holy Ghost "to them that obey him;" hence it follows that those who are disobedient cannot be filled with the Spirit. Whoever will give up all to Christ, and do all to his glory, as every one of his followers should do, may know what it is to be filled with his Spirit, which will produce the perfect love that "casteth out fear," producing a clear witness of acceptance by the Lord. This is what removes every doubt, and makes the pathway bright and plain that leads to eternal life. We can be filled with the Spirit of the Lord no longer than we aim to do his will in all things. No cross should be shunned; no unkind words be spoken, or evil imaginations indulged, if we expect to "be filled with the Spirit." No matter what our professions are, if we have not "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness" and "temperance," it is certain we are not filled with the Spirit, because these are invariably its fruits; and where we do not see the fruits, of course the Spirit is wanting. But if we obey the Lord in all things, so far as we know, then we become temples for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, which causes us to love God and one another.

The following extract will give the reader a very correct idea of one who has the Holy Spirit dwelling within him:—

"If you have the Holy Spirit, you have seen the evil of sin; you have repented of sin; you have forsaken sin; you hate sin; you watch and pray against sin; you have received the spirit of love. If you have the Spirit of God, you love God supremely. You love the Father, who gave his Son to suffer and die. You love the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, for what he hath done and suffered on your account. You love all the sincere followers of Jesus Christ, and confine not your regards to a party. You love the human race at large, as children of the same family, and you wish them to know the things that belong to their [illegible] [for]giving temper; you pity and pray for sinners, who, through blindness and ignorance, oppose at present their own eternal interest; you are of a thankful spirit; you thank God for making you to differ, by his grace, from many others, and you praise him for every favor, both of a temporal and spiritual nature; you are zealous for the honor of God in the world; you desire to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and in all the duties of christianity; you esteem the applause, the pleasure and the wealth of the whole world as nothing, in comparison of the love and blessing of God, through Christ Jesus."

We will now attend to the last inquiry; "How can we tell the difference between the operation of the Holy Spirit, and the spirit of mesmerism?" We answer, by the fruits. To illustrate this point, let us suppose four men lying before us, whose physical and mental powers are prostrated, so that they are unconscious. The first was knocked down in a fight, the second is drunk, the third is mesmerized, and the fourth lost his self-possession in a religious meeting. We will call the physician, and inquire of him what ails these men, and see if he is skilled in his profession. After examining them carefully, he says, "I can't tell so long as they remain unconscious and inactive. The present condition of them all is very similar, and the same cause may have brought them all where they are; we will watch for symptoms of consciousness, when we may be able to ascertain the cause of their prostration." In a little season, the first man recovers from the blow of his antagonist, sufficient to know how he came there, and begins to curse and swear, calling for awful judgments upon him, while anger flashes from every feature. All beholders are now satisfied relative to the cause of this man's prostration. By this time, the second one shows some degree of animation, and no difficulty is felt in deciding what produced his unconsciousness. The effects of his intemperance are seen in every movement.

We now come to the most interesting part of our examination. The third has arisen from his stupid state, and with a peculiar expression is looking around for the one to whose influence he has been subjected. There is a peculiar sympathetic feeling between the two, causing an ardent desire to be with the mesmerizer; which in some instances is so strong as to cause the mesmerized individual to go directly to the operator, though at the time considerable distance away. In one sense he is in his subject, controlling his mental and physical powers. This third man has been overpowered and directed by the spirit of another, so that he lost his self control, for the time being.

By this time the fourth, who has lain for several hours in a stupid state, begins to recover his strength sufficient to utter a faint sound, when the first we hear is the word, "glory! glory!" As he regains his strength he shouts it louder and louder, and would if all the world stood gazing. Sometimes men have been thus prostrated who went to the meeting in a state of wickedness, even taking the lead of a mob; but in answer to the earnest prayers of the children of the Lord, all at once they have fallen to the ground like a log of wood. When their consciousness returned, like Saul of Tarsus, they inquired, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" From that time they became followers of Christ, being active in every good work,—really new creatures. Mesmerism never produces such fruits. In this last example, the physical constitution is prostrated by the Holy Spirit, as the result shows; and when in that dormant state, their external appearance is the same as that of a man under the control of a mesmerizer; but when their strength returns, the fruits are as different as the Spirit of the Lord and the devil. One causes us to love God and his truth, the other to hate both. The one leads to eternal life, the other to eternal death."

DISCUSSION.—We have made arrangements for a discussion with Mr. Baker, a Universalist minister, to be held at Ashburnham Depot, Mass., commencing March 19th. Question:—"Does the Bible teach that any of the human family shall finally cease to exist?

"Reasons for my Hope."

Have you ever read this book? If you have not, and have fifty cents that you don't want to buy tea or coffee with, then send and get one, or if you have a few dollars more to spare send and get a number of them and let your friends have them to read, and if you have no friends, give them to your enemies. It is the most comprehensive little work you ever read. It embraces more historical facts concerning the Bible, when it was first published, the war that has been waged against it, its onward progress and glorious triumph, until it has been spread like autumn leaves among the nations of earth, than you could probably obtain in any other work. In this work there are historical gleanings from various publications. It is a rich mine of treasure. In it the christian['s] hope is beautifully set forth. It is well calculated to instruct those living without hope, that they may lay hold upon the hope set before them in the gospel, and to encourage those who love it, to endure the toils and trials of this life a little longer, for we are near home; a few years at most, and the long night of watching, mourning and sorrow, will be past, and all those who have loved the blessed hope, will rest in peace forever, where sorrow's tears will be all wiped away.

Brethren, if you have any money to invest in a good cause, my word for it, you cannot do better than to buy some of the Reasons for H. L. Hastings' Hope; they ought to be scattered by thousands all over the land. Also the "Voice of the church on the reign of Christ."

For the Crisis.

"Go ye into the World."

Yes, christian, that's where the Master bids you go. Then why do you cling to the church? You have preached there till they feel safe enough to sleep while you spin out theory after theory. They have heard that same old song for years. No sooner than you are down to breathe, another "big gun" bursts, and thus it goes. Instead of letting the church "edify itself" they must be hammered and drilled by some "foreign power." Now the Lord wants you to feed them well, leave a loaf, and then go and disciple-ize a few of those Gentiles out in the highways and hedges. Do not ask, "are there any brethren there?" Thine is the work to make them such. Glory in that work.

But I often see people out there in the hedges crying because they tear their clothes so easily. Then their hands don't work well. Now, then, first of all, get a good suit of coarse stout material, make it plain, without fringes or laces, or the thorns will tear them. Use more Bible than Boston or Paris for a pattern. Have sense enough not to have it dragging in the ditches. As for those delicate hands, keep them exposed more to the sun and air; then they will stand weather equal to your face. Be sure to avoid wearing gloves. All sorts of cloth gloves get torn in those thorny hedges. As for kid, it makes your fingers too slippery.

There's your work. There's your dress. You must work hard, for it is dark early in there. Talk loud, pray much, and work all the time. For food, God will provide. Trust in him for all things. You are his child, he has set you to work, and will care for you. Trust him.

O lovely sight! Mortal man employed to get subjects for an immortal King! No wonder he prays loud, weeps long, even while others sleep. No wonder he looks like a "pilgrim and stranger." Man! thy mission will end soon. The Master will come and give thee a crown of glory. Trust on. Hope on. Move on. Rejoice evermore. Thou wilt have a home soon. Gold thou hast not, but in that city thou shalt walk on gold, the streets being paved therewith. Under foot, on the head, in the hand will be gold. Then thou wilt sing. Then know what MINSTRY means. Then know more of the love, joy, mercy and justice of God. Then know what "spiritual bodies" are. Know what immortality is.

With such hopes let us be content to work in the highways of the world, and glean glory and honor for God.

M. MATHEWS.

Correspondence.

From D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—As some of you are inquiring, where are Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, and what are they doing? we thought we would say a few words through the "Crisis," to all. At present we are sick with cold and general nervous prostration. Mrs. M. is also suffering from a loss of voice, having been twice before attacked with the same this present winter, but never so severe as now. This is the result of much travel, hard labor, and much exposure. During the past year we have held eight tent and grove meetings in the state of Illinois, occupying in all eight weeks. Several weeks in the state of Indiana, also about five weeks in Jonesville, Reading and vicinity. Besides we have devoted three-fourths of our time to our brethren in Buchanan and vicinity, where we now reside.

The winter commenced here very pleasant, with early snows, which made it comfortable getting to meeting. We took advantage of the first sleighing, and made our brethren in Laporte Co., Indiana, a visit; after that, spent about three weeks in a new field at Jonesville, Mich. During this meeting much prejudice gave way, truth took effect, infidels and sceptics believed, and many others commenced searching the Scriptures to know the truth of these things. It was at this meeting that Mrs. M. lost the use of her voice for several days. We returned home very much worn down with constant labor and travel, found our brethren anxiously waiting our return (which was delayed one week longer than we anticipated, owing to the interest manifested at Jonesville), to commence a protracted meeting, for which arrangements had been previously made. We commenced without any [illegible] a turn about speaking every evening [and] two or three times on each Lord's day. God has blessed our efforts with seventeen new additions to the church, and several others having professed faith in Christ who are now waiting an opportunity to be baptized.

The church here has suffered much for some months in the past from unhappy influences The majority of the church, determined not to be moved by speculative notions and side issues, have stood firm in Christ, searching for the "old paths."

We commenced our protracted meeting under somewhat favorable circumstances. The church began to make arrangements some four weeks before the appointment, realizing the necessity of taking high ground, and seeing the world asleep and the near approach of judgment, daily implored the help of One who is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto him. On the third evening, one who had been investigating the truths contained in the Scriptures, volunteered to confess with the mouth what the heart did believe. This new testimony had its effect. Some of the members who had been on the background, began to confess their coldness, and drew near to the throne of grace in solemn prayer with others, which made every meeting, (as was truly remarked by many), "the best." On Sunday, one who had been connected with the M. E. Church, and who had been sprinkled, having been convinced that this was not a scriptural mode of baptism, was buried with Christ to rise with him, as we trust, to walk in newness of life. The second week commenced with increasing interest. Bro. and Sr. Redding, Sister Fox, and others from South Bend, came over to help. Their ardent prayers and stirring exhortations seemed to move everybody around them. Second Sunday, baptized two. Third week commenced with increasing interest. A more perfect reliance on our heavenly Father for help, we never saw in any meeting; the influence of the same being felt all around, with steady increasing congregations. Third Sunday Mrs. M. has all the preaching to do, as Mr. M. is at home sick. But gaining strength enough by 3 P. M., has to baptize three. After evening preaching, six received the right hand of fellowship, three more confessed faith in Christ, and are ready to follow him by baptism into death when an opportunity presents. Here we announced to the congregation that we must be absent one week to meet appointments previously made at Albion and Jonesville, one hundred miles east, with the promise of continuing the meeting on our return. Monday morning Mrs. M. cannot speak a loud word, besides is sick with prostration and general debility.

And here we are, confined at home sick, and our brethren at Albion and Jonesville disappointed. How can we spare time to be sick seeing so much to be done and so few to help? The church now numbering about eighty with the harness on, together with the oar of prayer, are keeping up evening meetings. Truly, this is a working church and dearly beloved by us. We never enjoyed in all our travels in the West a better revival interest, its love seemed to be the ruling element that moved each one to act. We desire the prayers of those who frequent the throne of grace, that we may recover soon. Farewell.

From Eld. W. Sheldon.

BRO. GRANT:—In preaching the unpopular truths of the Bible in this new field, I occasionally encounter a feeble attempt upon the part of the clergy, to bring the truth into disrepute. The following is an instance in which an attempt at opposition reacted upon my opponent. In preaching a sermon upon the time of reward, I repudiated the idea that and proved that the inspired servants of the Lord even prayed to have death deferred, which they would not have done if they regarded death the gate into Paradise. A minister arose and asserted that Paul affirmed: "Christ was made perfect through DEATH," claiming this as a proof that death perfected the righteous by sending them to glory. I replied that there was not such a passage of Scripture in the Bible, stating that the text referred to read, "Made perfect through sufferings." The minister, seeing his blunder, and wishing to make his objection good, confessed that he had misquoted the text, stating that it read, "Made perfect through suffering," and that suffering was death, so the argument was in his favor. I remarked that he had made another mistake—that the text did not read, "made perfect through suffering," but "through sufferings;" a continued chain of sufferings—that "he suffered, being tempted." At first he contended that the text did read suffering, instead of "sufferings." But the Bible was against him. Truth took deep root in the place. After my last sermon there, seventeen witnesses for Jesus arose and testified, including several who had long been backsliders, [and] now have started for the kingdom of God. I then requested those who had resolved to seek the Lord, to manifest it by rising, when eight arose, two of them being backsliders. The cause is onward. We have many glorious times in the West.

"Death is the gate to endless joy,"

Though beset [by] sectarians, the world, [the] flesh, and the [dev]il, I am not discourag[ed], a[nd] [in]tend [by] the help of the Lord, t[o] [illegible] cause of our blessed Master. [illegible] fall upon me thick and heavy, but I expect them, because Paul says, "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." I am almost alone; there are but few of "like precious faith" in this vicinity; but I hope we will soon have others. Light is spreading, and I know of several who are "almost persuaded," and I think they will soon come out upon the Lord's side. Let us be faithful.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The Duke of Newcastle, in a letter to a gentleman in this country, says that the English are very anxious to see a happy termination to our difficulties; and adds, that accounts from America are now watched in England with an intensity of interest scarcely less than that which three years ago was attached to every mail from India.

Ledru Rollin means to return to France, under Napoleons III.'s act of grace. It must be a very hard state of things indeed that could keep any Frenchman long out of France. Times have changed since that day when M. Rollin issued an order to arrest "Citizen Louis Bonaparte."

The French clergy don't like Napoleon III.'s speech to the Chambers; but they can't help themselves, and so must submit to the master of 750,000 men, and of a navy that is worthy to be classed with his army. Clerical ascendancy never lasts long in France, and the Emperor having squeezed the priests now throws them aside, like so many used up oranges. They have met with their deserts, and are treated as all "dishonored tools" should be treated.

The Syrian question is beginning to assume a very serious aspect. The French and Russians support the continued occupation of the country by the troops of Napoleon III., while Austria, England, and Turkey would have those troops withdrawn. Their withdrawal would be tantamount to a resumption of the Mussulman murder-of-Christians business. The point is to be settled at a Conference of the Great Powers, to be held in Paris.

Garibaldi was quiet at the last accounts from Southern Europe.

Cuba is suffering terribly from drought.

Quebec has 62,000 inhabitants.

The English are ordering cotton largely from Bombay.

DOMESTIC.

☞ The inauguration of Abram Lincoln, as President of the United States for the next four years, passed off quietly. His inaugural address was warmly applauded by both parties at the North.

THE NATIONAL TROUBLES.—Ex-Senator Benjamin delivered an address to the Washington Artillery of New Orleans on the 22d ult. on the occasion of a flag presentation, in which he declared that there would be war between "North and the South, and counseled his military hearers to be prepared for it." He said:

"Already from the distant North are heard the first sullen mutterings of the coming storm; men, alien to you in feeling and hostile to your interest, assert the insolent pretension of enforcing foreign laws upon your soil, and of reducing you to vassalage under their sway. With haughty assumption they claim the unrestricted right of governing you as inferiors, and with an arrogance as insane as it is insulting, they affect to deride your stern assertion of your rights as the petulant contumacy of disobedient dependants. I speak, gentlemen, in the belief that our independence is not to be maintained without the shedding of our blood."

A portion of the Alabama troops who recently returned home from Pensacola, took with them five hundred barrels of powder, which was taken with the Navy Yard and Forts.

The Richmond Enquirer and Richmond Dispatch both state that large numbers of the largest slaveholders in Virginia are making preparations to leave the State. It is believed that some of the most flourishing agricultural districts will be left as desolate as the wildernesses of Jamaica. So much for merely agitating secession. A similar condition of things exists in Kentucky. The Louisville Journal says:

"A great many are making arrangements to quit Kentucky with their slaves in the [illegible]

Washington, March 2. All Washington is on tiptoe for the coming Inauguration. No fear is expressed of any violent proceedings, and preparations are making for a magnificent demonstration.

The arrivals from all quarters of the country are enormous. To-day's trains are literally loaded down with visitors. The crowd here on Monday will be, from present indications, twice as large as at the inauguration of Mr Buchanan.

The accounts from Washington indicate the existence of better feeling than has prevailed there for some time past.

Washington, March 3. It is positively asserted from Virginia that if Congress adjourns without passing some plan of adjustment, she will join the Southern Confederacy in less than thirty days.

A dispatch to the Herald, from Norfolk, says some alarm is felt in consequence of the Mayor receiving intelligence from the Mayor of Petersburg that an outbreak will soon follow the inauguration of Lincoln.

Volunteers have been ordered to patrol the city, and other measures have been taken to ensure the preservation of the peace. Much indignation prevailed owing to the discharge of all the workmen in the Navy Yard known to be in favor of secession, and the appointment of Northern men to fill the vacancies.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says that intelligence from Montgomery represents that the new Government is proceeding with great vigor, and that the entire $15,000,000 loan would be taken by the 4th inst. Thirty thousand volunteers were drilling or under orders. Large army provisions and supplies have recently been purchased in Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati, and sent to New Orleans and Mobile for distribution. The new postal arrangements were to go into effect on the 4th inst. A die for new stamps had been made, and old contractors were continued in the service of the Confederate States. The present tariff is merely provisional, and soon as practicable a new system will be adopted.

Trade between the nation of South Carolina and the city of Boston has been resumed.

A court martial has been ordered in the case of Capt. Armstrong for surrendering the Pensacola Navy Yard.

Advices from Charleston state that the floating battery was launched on Monday last. Dahlgren guns were hourly expected. All the troops on furlough are ordered to return by Wednesday.

It is said that Jefferson Davis recently visited Major Anderson at Fort Sumter. The interview is represented to have been an earnest and prolonged one, but all not immediately in the secret were left wholly to conjecture as to what took place between him and Major Anderson. It has, however, been knowingly given out at Charleston that there will be no fight at Fort Sumter—great stress evidently being placed upon the fact that these two old acquaintances in the army cannot be brought into bloody conflict with each other. On the other hand, it is believed that if the alleged visit had elicited any particular comfort for the leader of the secession movement, such good news would not have been kept for private consumption merely.

☞ Gaeta has one memorable circumstance connected with its history. It was there that Cicero was assassinated.

General Conference.

It is proposed to have a General Conference in Boston, commencing Tuesday evening, April 9th, and continuing over the Lord's day. Particulars hereafter.

Meetings in Charlestown.

Providence permitting, the Editor will preach in the City Hall, Charlestown, Mass., March 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th, commencing at 7 1-2 P. M. SUBJECTS:—Tuesday evening, "The end of Rome and Napoleon as seen in prophetic light." Wednesday eve, "The cause of modern Spiritualism as viewed from a Bible stand-point." Thursday eve, "The resurrection of the dead." Friday, "The end of the wicked."

Notice.

A discussion will be held in South Ashburnham, at Union Hall, between Eld. Miles Grant of Boston, and Rev. J. Baker of Westminster, to commence Tuesday, March 19th, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Question for discussion—1. Does the Bible teach the final salvation of all men? 2. Does the Bible teach that any of the human family shall finally cease to exist?

Friends from abroad are invited to attend, and may the Lord give us the truth.

In behalf of others, J. D. MERRIAM.

Conference in Maine.

There will be a general conference held in Hermon, Me., to commence March 14th and continue over the 17th. Having learned the feelings of the brethren generally, we deem it important to call the attention of all the friends of God and lovers of the truth to make a renewed exertion to comfort and strengthen each other, and give the solemn alarm to a wicked world. The brethren are anxious to have Bro. James Hemenway attend, also Bro. Jones, if possible. All other preaching brethren are invited.

In behalf of the brethren in Maine,
ISRAEL DAMMAN,
JOHN BILLINGS,

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.62; postage 15 cts.

Second Advent Conference

In Worcester, to commence Wednesday evening, March 13th, and continue through the week and over the following Lord's day. An invitation is extended to all, and the ministering brethren in particular to attend. The Lord willing, the probable order of exercise will be as follows: Prayer meeting from 9 till 10 o'clock A. M. Bible class from 10 till 12. Preaching at 2 and 7 P. M.

In behalf of the committee of arrangements,
A. ROSS.

COMPOSED ON THE DEATH OF MARY J. MESQUIER.

Can I forget thee, Mary, and cease to love thee now,
Because stern death has claimed thee, and paled thy lovely brow?
Because thy form is missing, and laid in the cold tomb,—
Shall I then cease to love thee, or regret thy early doom?

Ah, no! I'll not forget thee, thy memory still is dear;
Those parting words, those gentle tones, are ringing in my ear;
That calm, sweet smile, thou gavest me, I seem to see it now,
While standing, by thy dying bed, my hand upon thy brow.

"O Etta!" said the dying girl, "when I am call'd away,
Wilt thou not visit my lone grave, and learn thy sure decay?
Wilt thou not plant fair flowers there, that they may o'er me bloom,
And when they wither, fade and die, with Mary find their tomb?"

And then she drew me nearer, and took me by the hand,
She said, "prepare to meet me in that holy, happy land;
Where friends shall never part, where sorrow cannot come,
Where we shall live forever in our own eternal home."

And then she gently kissed me, and bade me weep no more,
She pressed my hand and said, "Farewell! we'll meet on Canaan's shore."
O! may I heed her counsel, and for that world prepare,
For I shall surely meet my dear friend Mary there.

THE COMING STRUGGLE

Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 4.

Says Henry C. Wright, "If I obtain the approbation of Henry C. Wright, I can withstand the opposition of God and the world." He says in another place,—"True, man must give account to God for all his deeds; but how? Solely by giving account to his own nature—to himself."—Errors of the Bible, p. 24. Says Leo Miller, "The God within us shall bring us into judgment, and if we stand acquitted before that inward tribunal, no other judgment-seat shall have power over the happiness and destiny of the soul."—Spiritual Register, 1860. Says A. J. Davis,—"No one need fear the sovereignty of individualism; the right of each to act in accordance with his highest intuitions. For should one man transcend his boundaries, another will let him know it."—Spir. Register.

What does such a restraint as this amount to, that when a man has committed one of the worst of crimes, perhaps to murder a whole family, "another will let him know it?" And yet this sentiment is from the best authority they have among them. They not only deny the existence of all power higher than man—these spirits being regarded by them as advanced men,—but they make men Gods, practically adopting the lie of Satan,—"Ye shall not surely die,"—"Ye shall be as Gods." But I will quote from the Banner of Light as coming from the spirits,—"The spirit of man, the God, the individual, is responsible for its every act, and will surely be judged for the deeds done in the body as he has a mortal existence. Again, he is to be judged by himself as a spirit; he is to come before no other tribunal; if acquitted by self he is indeed acquitted. . . . . Look within yourself and behold yourself a God responsible for the acts of the spirit that alone shall judge or save you . . . . learn that thou art a God in thyself and thine own judge." Says another,—"The kingdom of heaven is within you, and the King of Glory is thine own soul. . . . . The God of olden times, such as was once worshiped by a Moses or Elias, is not the God for you to serve. . . . . You have a kingdom of your own, a God of your own, and there are as many kingdoms of heaven and as many different Gods as there are individuals."

Says another spirit,—"When man became a living soul he became a God. All living souls are Gods. They die not. So living souls rejoice in thy wisdom . . . . be a king, a God, a Jehovah." Says another,—"Each and every one is a Savior, as he is a judge, a God. Says another,"—Ye are all Gods, every one of you." Says another,—"Every one of you are Gods manifest in the flesh." Says H. C. Wright,—"I have done with all that—(the christian salvation)—I point the world to another salvation, man to find his salvation in the God-woman, and woman to find her salvation in the God-man."—Discourse at Buffalo. He says further,—"The husband will abide in his wife, and in doing so will dwell in God and God in him."—Errors of the Bible, p. 84.

With such a system of doctrines as a platform for the false Christ, I have no difficulty in anticipating in him their recog- [illegible] supernatural origin, nothing from his lips nor by his authority will be too extravagant for the acceptance of his intoxicated admirers. But there is one important feature in this prophecy concerning the Man of Sin that remains to be noticed. It is the lie and the strong delusion which apparently confirms it.

THE LIE AND THE STRONG DELUSION.

We are told that "because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved; for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thess. 2: 10—12. From Paul's account of the matter we learn—

1. That there will be one fundamental "lie" in this counterfeit scheme of religion, on which the whole system hangs. Or perhaps the "lie" embraces the whole scheme as a counterfeit religion, introducing a counterfeit coming of Christ. 2. That this religion will be attended with a strong delusion apparently confirming this "lie." 3. That "those who receive not the love of the truth (Bible truth), that they might be saved," shall become the victims of this strong delusion and be dammed. 4. That those who do receive and cherish a love for the truth as God has revealed it, in spite of the prevailing lies, will "be saved;" and 5. That in God's giving to the christian world their choice between popular lies and unpopular truth, he will stand acquitted when they come to the judgment. Especially, since he has taken particular care to first provide us all with the Bible in these last days, which will faithfully expose these "lies," however well dressed.

I think we may properly regard the whole scheme as the "lie," for truly it is such, and its miracles and wonderful success as the delusion; but perhaps it refers to a popular fundamental lie or error on which the whole is based, and which has a strong apparent support in these "miracles which prove a lie."

Let us now inquire what is this lie, and what the strong delusion that apparently confirms it and so leads the faithless and unwatchful to believe it? Let the Spiritualists themselves answer as to what is their fundamental doctrine.

In answer to the question,—"What does modern Spiritualism teach?" a spirit says,—"The first, the greatest, and the grandest truth (?) coming through modern Spiritualism, is the immortality of the soul." Mrs. Elmer says,—"We have no proof of immortality aside from spiritual communications." In the report of a Spiritual Convention held at Plymouth, Mass., we read the following:—"The phenomena of modern Spiritualism, by their startling significance and world-wide diffusion, have assumed, in the opinion of this Convention, an importance worthy the earnest consideration of all rational minds, demonstrating as they do, the immortality of the soul." Judge Edmunds says,—"This New Dispensation comes to supply the want to the countless thousands who are now slumbering in indifference or toiling in infidelity; to convict man of his immortality," etc.—Spir. Register, p. 14. At a Spiritual Convention held in Rockford, Ill., 1858, the following resolution was passed:—"Resolved, that Spiritualism, according to the modern acceptation of that term, embraces all those who believe in the immortality of the soul. . . . . Beyond this common faith there is no doctrine or creed necessarily incident to Spiritualism."

George Beckwith says,—"The backbone of the whole theory of spiritual existence in every school is, that there is immanent with man a spiritual essence, which, while the body exists, forms a part thereof, and when it decays, still remains and continues to exist under such change of conditions as the death of the body has induced."—Spir. Register, p. 21. A writer in the Spiritual Telegraph says, that Spiritualism is "the generation of a new, a broader and more living conviction of the truth of immortality" (the immortality of the soul). Says Dr. Lyon,—"Spirits come to convince us of the great truth (?) of immortality." It must be remembered that their ideas of immortality are always through the immortality of the soul, hence, all sneer at the Bible immortality through a resurrection from the dead. This distinction should be borne in mind when we read the word immortality in their writings as expressing their hope. A spirit claiming to be the spirit of J. C. Calhoun, as published by Dr. T. L. Nichols, says, the object of these spiritual communications is "to draw mankind together into harmony, and convince sceptics of the immortality of the soul."—Monthly Magazine, Nov. 1854. He published with the above another communication from a spirit claiming to be the late W. R. Channing, who says the object of these communications is "to unite mankind and convince sceptics of the immortality of the soul."

Dr. Cumming ("The End,") p. 34, translates the phrase, "lying wonders," "miracles which prove a lie." The above extracts prove that the spirits and Spiritualists regard the immortality of the soul as [illegible] tem as a whole. But whether the lie is the scheme as a whole, or the fundamental doctrine on which it is based, it demands the same weight in the consideration of this point.

These spiritual communications are certainly from the invisible world, and they purport to be from our friends and relatives who were once here with us on earth; perhaps a loved brother, or sister, or parent. And when we reflect that these spirits claiming to be our friends are constantly revealing secrets which none but these friends with ourselves knew, we behold in it a "strong delusion" to those who believe in the immortality of the soul. But if we are persuaded of the Scripture doctrine that the dead are asleep, we can see at once that they are lying spirits in pretending to be our friends who have died.

These communications, attended with other miraculous power, are abundantly manifest through mediums taken from the high and low, rich and poor, old and young, learned and unlearned. It has appeared in all parts of our land and throughout the world, and is rapidly increasing. And wherever it appears and whoever may be the medium, it purports to come from those who were once here with us on earth—our own friends and relations. There are individual exceptions where these spirits, when commanded in the name of Christ to tell the truth, have acknowledged that they were not our friends as they claim; but such cases are very rare and are contradictory to that manifest harmony which everywhere characterizes their teachings on this point.

If these spirits are what they purport to be, they ought generally to be truthful and their teachings reliable. But if they tell us the truth, our Bible is a lie, our religion a delusion, and our God a myth. Had we no Bible to flee to here, we should find it a strong delusion; but going to the Bible we find that it has furnished us with abundant proof that these spirits were to appear at this particular time, and described minutely their work and infidel character. Hence our Bible is more firmly established in their appearance now; they are found deceivers, and their teachings lies. Thus while they are a "strong delusion" to "those who love not the truth" (Bible truth), they are a source of encouragement to those who give heed to the Bible and regard especially the "sure word of prophecy as a light that shineth in a dark place." Let us beware, then, how we take it for granted that the soul is immortal, when the Bible tells us that the dead are asleep in their graves awaiting a resurrection to life when Jesus comes. Especially should we be jealous of this doctrine when we discover that these spirits, whom I have abundantly proved to be rank Atheists, lay claim to it as especially their own—"The first, greatest and grandest truth (?) coming through Modern Spiritualism." We will now proceed to show what instruction the Bible has for us concerning these spirits.

THE SEDUCING SPIRITS.

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats," etc.—1 Tim. 4: 1—4

From this Scripture we learn:—

1. That seducing spirits shall teach religion to men in the latter times. 2. That their doctrines will not be doctrines of God, but doctrines of devils. 3. That notwithstanding the character of their doctrines, some shall depart from the faith and give heed to them. 4. That those who accept the religion of those spirits shall be addicted to speaking lies in hypocrisy, forbidding to marry and abstaining from meats.

These seducing spirits are evidently the same as the unclean spirits of Rev. 16: 13—16. Those unclean spirits are said to be "the spirits of devils"; these are said to teach the "doctrines of devils." Here they are said to appear in the latter times; there they appear a short time before the battle of the great day. Here their religious character is noticed especially, but not the miracles; there their miracles are expressly declared. But since the work of devils is at all times and in all places to lead men away from the things of God, their mission among men must always be rather religious than political; hence these two allusions to the work of spirits, having their accomplishment at the same time, must refer to the same mission which results in the stirring up of the kings of the earth and the whole world to make war against Christ, by whom they are destroyed in the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

Again, these seducing spirits, called also unclean spirits, and explained to be "the spirits of devils," are the same as possessed men in the days of Christ's ministry; then called by various names, as "spirits"—"unclean spirits"—"foul spirits"—"devils"—"spirits of devils," etc. These spirits were not diseases, as some have thought, for the passages are frequent where their distinction is necessarily implied; as, "when he had called unto him his twelve disciples he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out and to heal all manner of disease."—Matt. 10: 1. Also, "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils."—Matt. 10: 8. Also, "And he healed many that were sick of divers [illegible] and cast out many devils, and [illegible] him."—Mark 1: 34. Besides, the phraseology used in each case is peculiar. We may say of Christ, that he healed or cured diseases, but not devils; we read also that he cast out devils, but not diseases.

Again, these devils possessed a man by the legion. Do diseases? We read of the children of the devil. Shall we understand the children of diseases? We read that the Gentiles sacrifice to devils. Do they sacrifice to diseases? We read that Christ was tempted by the devil. Was it a disease? We read of the devils beseeching Christ; that he suffered them not to speak because they knew him,—Mark 1: 35; that they "believe and tremble,"—James 2: 19; that they have "doctrines"; that they have a prince or leader called Beelzebub, or Satan,—Matt. 12: 24; that they work miracles,—Rev. 16: 13—16: that men shall give heed to them as religious teachers,—1 Tim. 4: 1; and that they shall persuade the kings of the earth and the whole world to array themselves in battle against Christ. They said to Christ while on earth, "Why hast thou come to torment us before the time?" And knowing that the time of their "torment" is now just upon us they have come down in great wrath, knowing that their time is short, and are persuading the people to accept of their doctrines, that their mission may be successful when they shall come to allure them into battle with Christ.

All these things may be attributed to invisible, supernatural emissaries of Satan, seeking to turn the minds of the people away from the truth of God, by introducing another God, another Christ, another salvation, another system of doctrines, other miracles, and another consummation of all things; but they cannot be attributed to diseases nor to anything except invisible intelligences. Reverence.

"Without natural affection."—PAUL.

Where is the reverence of the olden time? Men with gray hairs, women with wrinkled faces, and some who have not so far advanced in life, speak of it as a thing that was, and they mourn that they do not see it now-a-days. Once age was respected because it was age without regard to titles or riches; the very children in the street paused as the old man tottered by them, leaning on his stick, his long white hair fluttering in the wanton breeze, and his dim eyes lighting up at the sight of their pleasant smile.

We were visiting lately in a family where were several pretty girls. Beautifully attired, well educated, literally loaded with accomplishments, for they could sing, dance, play, embroider, chatter French, translate Latin, sing Italian, and withal were very handsome. The door opened and in came an old lady—very old. She looked about her as she slowly moved forward; not a head bowed in token of her presence—no one moved to give her a seat.

"Louise," whispered one, "give grandmother a chair."

"I shan't; she might as well stay up stairs," was the ungracious reply.

Presently one of them (ashamed at our disapproval, for we immediately arose and conducted the aged woman toward our own chair) offered her the seat with rockers, but she declined it, preferring to take what was given ungrudgingly. During all her stay, these very genteel ladies noticed her no more than if she was not in the room, except when she made an odd or ungrammatical expression, they tittered and ridiculed it among themselves.

O, it was thoroughly revolting to see this crown of gray hairs despoiled of its glory, mocked by these thoughtless creatures. And soon those trembling feet would be treading the verge of the grave, and the mold would crumble and fall on a coffin, and they would think of her as the old woman whose presence was a nuisance—a check upon their pleasure—one who was always quoting old-fashioned songs, or singing them through her nose, whose homely gown, with its crossed handkerchief, was distasteful to their fashionable eyes, and of whom even the matron would say—"Well, really, mother was growing so very childish, I could hardly mourn that she was gone."

Thus it is and in this way that many of the aged are treated at the present day. Their sorrows, their tears, their sacrifices, their humble, hard toils, for children who have grown to manhood, are all forgotten, and those to whom they have given birth are ashamed of them. Alas! that it should be so—that while God, the great being to whom we owe all that we are, treats the gray hairs with reverence, calling them crowns of glory, we insult them in our conduct toward them, both in public and in private. Let no one who has any regard for his own character, his own purity and integrity, treat the aged with irreverence—they stand very near God.—New York Tribune.

☞ When in middle life the burdens of care press most heavily, man is never forsaken unless voluntarily he puts help far from him. The same yearning and embracing love is offered unto his acceptance, the same helping hand is stretched out; but neither is intruded upon him, he can accept or reject, and the responsibility [illegible] himself.

☞ Always and ever when pursuing the path of duty we may be sure of God's [illegible]

Always a Hypocrite.

Yes, that is the cry; he has sinned and fallen, and you now say, "he was always a hypocrite."

I do not believe it. I cannot believe that through all the years in which he professed to follow Christ he was a traitor to his master. I pity the heart that can readily credit such a tale.

The poor old man has sinned and fallen; God pity him, for man's sympathy is full of scorn. How eagerly they whisper the sad story, and gloat over the shameful details, as though a brother's fall was a cause for rejoicing! The angels, the pure angels, weep while frail man looks on with scorn.

True, they close the tale with "I pity him," yet their sympathy goes no further; and they add, "but I believe he was always a hypocrite."

Is not his present shame enough, that all the good of his past life should be counted as naught, or as the cunning acting of a confirmed villain?

"Always a hypocrite!" David fell, Solomon sinned, and Peter denied his Master thrice; yet who will say these were "always hypocrites?"

I do not know this poor old man, though I have seen him often, as he served in the church of God; and now, when the story of his shame is on every tongue, my heart bleeds to think of him as, disgraced and deserted, he hides in the solitude of his home, moaning and weeping impotent remorse for the sin which has stamped the Cain-mark on his brow. God help thee, brother; and in thine agony find room for gratitude, that though thy sinful, erring brethren cast thee off, God, the pure, the almighty, heeds thy repentance, and will forgive thy sin. "For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

And you who join in this hiss, which pierces the lacerated heart, pause and look at yourself. What has kept you from falling? Perhaps you were not tempted. Then thank God for that, and strive to help those who were. Or, being tempted, you fled to the great Source of Strength, and found power to resist. Then be grateful, and assist those of weaker faith.

Proud Pharisee, despise not thy brother. Look deeply into the recesses of thine heart, and mark well the points of weakness, which, if attacked in an unguarded hour, might prove vulnerable; and humble thyself in the dust, thanking God, not that thou art "not as other men," but that he has supported thee from "the sin which doth so easily beset."

And ye young lambs of the flock, who, in your innocent purity, can scarcely believe that such iniquity abounds, and penetrates even into the church of Jesus, while tears and prayers are fervently offered for the sinning and suffering, nestle closely to the Shepherd's bosom, and entreat that he will "lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."—Presbyterian.

Fear Not.

"Fear not, for I have redeemed thee."—Is. 43: 1.

Deeper, Father, grow the shadows,
Darker still the night comes on;
Every human help departing,
Now I look to thee alone.

Hopes that I had fondly cherished,
Thou hast laid in ruin low—
Props on which I leaned, have failed me,
Like a broken reed I bow.

Father, wilt thou surely lead me
Through these days of fear and gloom?
May I know that thou wilt keep me,
Till I reach my heavenly home?

Over all the distant moorland,
Stretching dark and cold away,
Say, my Father, wilt thou lead me?
Shall I never lose my way?

Hark! I hear a voice of cheering,
Sounding through the gathering night,—
"Fear not, for I have redeemed thee—
I will be thy Guide and Light.

"Only follow where I call thee;
Let no fear turn thee aside—
Not a foe shall dare to harm thee
While I am thy constant Guide."

Father, full of all compassion,
I will take thee at thy word,
Meeting danger and temptation,
In the strength of Christ my Lord.

A Mother's Influence.

In England, some years ago, a man presented himself before a body of clergymen to be examined, that he might be licensed to preach the gospel. His advantage for study had not been very great, and he had fears that he could not sustain himself, and answer the numerous questions which he knew would be proposed. With a trembling heart he stood up before his fathers and brethren, and one of them asked him with whom he had studied divinity.

The young man was somewhat confused at this question, for he knew well that he had not enjoyed the instruction of any distinguished divine; and he replied, with hesitation—

"My mother taught me the Scriptures."

"Ah," said the minister who had asked the question, "mothers can do great things."

The examination proceeded, and the result was a delightful proof that mothers may be good teachers of theology: that the truth implanted by their early instruction, watered by their pious tears, and sanctified, in answer to their precious fruit after many days.

This candidate for the ministry was found to be mighty in the Scriptures, and most gladly was he commissioned to go forth and preach the word to his fellow men.

Woman and the Family Altar.

How many christian women are sighing from day to day because no family altar exists beneath their roof. Yet how few have the courage to assemble their households, and in the presence of an irreligious companion offer themselves the morning and evening incense. Still, one thus situated should consider prayerfully whether such is not her duty—whether it is not [illegible]

CO-OPERATION OF THE WIFE.—No man ever prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. If she unites in mutual endeavors, or rewards his labor with an endearing smile, with what confidence will he resort to his merchandise or his farm, fly over lands, sail upon seas, meet difficulty and encounter danger, if he knows that he is not spending his strength in vain, but that his labor will be rewarded by the sweets of home! Solitude and disappointment enter the history of every man's life; and he is but half provided for his voyage, who finds not an associate for his happy hours, while for his months of darkness and distress, no sympathizing partner is prepared.—American.

☞ When age creeps on, and the light of the eye is dimmed, and the ear is slow to catch even the accents of the dearest voice, and the once elastic step is feeble and uncertain, when the hand is tremulous and weak, and the heart is bereft and desolate, then there is but one solace left, the love and help of God; and through the gathering twilight and along the shadowy way, His voice, more precious than the sweetest music, is heard saying to faltering faith, "Fear not, I will help thee!"

HONESTY.—To one who said, "I do not believe there is an honest man in the world," another replied, "It is impossible that any one man should know all the world, but quite possible that one may know himself."

Short Dress.

BRO. GRANT:—I heartily rejoice to read from time to time communications for the "Crisis" in favor of the "short dress," and I have felt for a long time that I would add my testimony to the few that dare be independent enough to practice as well as preach, in behalf of this costume. I have worn it for a year. I consider it a modest, healthy, convenient and common-sense dress, in every place, and under every circumstance. I would not resign it for any price. There is a feeling of lightness and [illegible] a short dress, of which those who have always worn long dresses know nothing. Those who are laboring to open new avenues to self-support for women, ought first to consider the subject of dress. Those who wish women to be sea-captains and rail-road conductors, must advocate greater changes still in their dress, or their petition for the new occupations is nonsense.

If women would do anything worthful they must have liberty to dress for the work. Fettered as they generally are, they do not even take exercise enough to keep in any tolerable health. The lives and health of the female sex are oppressed beyond endurance, and worn out by their burden of clothing. What could a man do, so shut in with corsets, so beleaguered with long, heavy, and trailing garments? I look upon a change in woman's dress as being necessary to her health, and salvation from the evils of her lot. It is folly and vain for America to boast that she is free, with all her slaves, and all her women.

I look upon the "American Costume" as a point gained for the masses, of incalculable value—though there are thousands of poor hard-working women who will never be benefited by it. Still from Maine to California thous[illegible] Costume," and every [illegible] converts are made to its usefulness and convenience. The change at first strikes people as unfeminine. If, to be feminine, we must be weak, sickly, and useless, it were, perhaps, better to lose a little of the grace of femininity, and secure a small amount of masculine strength, comfort and usefulness. Women have been parasites so long that freedom is a stern, strange thing to them. They are horror-struck at the idea of losing protection, of taking care of themselves, of being accountable to God and not to public opinion.

Conservatism may well oppose a change in woman's dress. Few women comparatively will ever have strength or courage to step out of their (so called) sphere, while the present fashions continue. Women have so long acted, and almost existed by leave, granted by the majority, that they have little idea of independent action. The public puts its mold upon us, and we come out as nearly alike as peas: our waists and feet just so small and "delicate," our minds just so dull and stupid, our bodies bagged, and our whole lives belittled into "feminine propriety." Mind, health, beauty and happiness are all sacrificed in this process of molding; but, then, woman has the comfort of keeping in her "proper sphere" till her brief and terrible misery is over, and she dies out it. Those who are not men and women enough to stand alone by themselves, must be bolstered up by their fellows, and if very weak, by a majority of their fellows. We have become so used to the doctrine that the majority must rule, that we forget that it may be a great wrong. Are a thousand tyrants better than one? We seem to forget minority rights altogether.

Women who sweep the streets with their skirts, consider a skirt within four inches of the ground as vulgar; while those who [illegible]

Her long garments make her as [illegible] owned, as a rule; for the avenues of support are closed against a being so manacled. I know women can live, [illegible] by sewing, and teaching, and house-work; but to do the active work of life, in all its variety,—to be healthy, and enterprising, and self-sustaining as man is, women must dress more like men. They must have freedom to wear what taste and convenience dictate. Honesty and individuality are the great wants of women.

Let us earnestly labor and pray that the little independence of woman may be increased. I often think, when will christians live to the glory of God, or, in other words, live in harmony with the laws of their being, in eating, in drinking, and dressing? R. E. WOOD.

The American Costume.

As several communications have appeared in the Crisis lately, showing the advantages of the American Costume, it has occurred to me that some of its readers might desire to learn more about that style of dress. At the solicitation of numerous persons, I have lately published a description of the costume as worn by the ladies in our Institution, and will be happy to mail a copy of it to any person who will enclose a penny stamp to prepay postage, and address MISS HARRIET M. AUSTIN, M. D., "Our Home," Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y.

BRO. GRANT:—I send the following precious gem, for the special edification of Bro. H. L. H. M. R. W.

Salt.

Some modern agricultural writers have doubted the necessity of giving animals salt. The following remarks as to the effect of salt upon health, by Prof. James F. Johnston of Scotland, may be relished by those who still put salt in their own puddings, and allow their cattle a little now and then.

"The wild buffalo frequents the salt-licks of North-western America; the wild animals in the central parts of Southern Africa are a sure prey to the hunter, who conceals himself behind a salt spring; and our domestic cattle run [illegible] hand that [illegible] them a taste of this delicious luxury. From time immemorial it has been known that without salt man would miserably perish; and among horrible punishments, entailing certain death, that of feeding culprits on saltless food is said to have prevailed in barbarous times. Maggots and corruption are spoken of by ancient writers as the distressing symptoms which saltless food engenders; but no ancient, or unchemical modern, could explain how such sufferings arose. Now we know why the animal craves salt; why it suffers discomfort, and why it ultimately falls into disease if salt is for a time withheld. Upwards of half the saline matter of the blood (57 per cent,) consists of common salt; and as this is partly discharged every day through the skin and the kidneys, the necessity of continued supplies of it to the healthy body becomes sufficiently obvious. The bile also contains soda as a special and indispensable constituent, and so do all the cartilages of the body. Stint the supply of salt, therefore, and neither will the bile be able properly to assist the digestion, nor the cartilages be built up again as fast as they naturally waste."

Neuralgia.

A writer in the The Lancet, Dr. C. H. Jones, states that in a majority of cases, neuralgia essentially implies a lowering of the vital power and functional action of the nerve, and not an increase—an opinion which is also supported by the well-known experiment of Dr. du Bois Raymond, in which a diminution of the nerve current was found to be co-existent with the [illegible] of pain in the nerve. The writer thinks it may be fairly argued, that when the symptoms of debility, and especially of nerve debility, are so apparent, and have so distinct a relation to the particular symptom, this must be itself of like essential character; it can hardly be that the morbid state of the nerve affected can be greatly different from that which prevails so generally throughout the system, especially when the means which avail for the cure of both are considered. The nutrition of the nerve being ill performed, its structure undergoes some molecular alteration which conditionates pain. What is true of neuralgia from this cause, Dr. J. believes to be true of all cases belonging to the non-organic class. Thus, electrical disturbances, damp, cold, malaria, all seem to act in the like way, so far as can be judged—[illegible] by deranging the molecular [illegible] tions of the nervous structur[illegible] pairing its function.

For the Crisis.

Angel and Saint.

Oh! I would be an angel,
And kneeling at his feet,
Would wait my message given,
And then, on pinions fleet,
I'd haste to weary mortals,
The care-worn, troubled soul,
I'd bid them look to Jesus,
Who makes the wounded whole;

And round my sister spirits,
(Earth angels though they be,)
I'd linger till they whispered
Of heaven, O Lord, and thee.
Oh! blessed are those harpers
Who stand around the throne,
And day and night, unceasing,
Make all his glories known.

But, oh! when earth and heaven
Are mingled into one,
And saints and angels waken
A universal song,
The loudest, sweetest songsters
Of all that crowd, I ween,
Will be earth's suffering martyrs,
Who ministered, unseen;—

Whose prayers were ever rising
Up to the throne of light,
For grace to keep them holy,
And fitted for the fight.
Oh! when that morning dawneth
